THE CHURCH TRADE

THE press cables have brought tidings of movements on the part of the Methodist and Anglican churches of England and Scotland to "produce, distribute and exhibit religious films" in a reported total of some 70,000 churches and halls.

Occasion is found by a writer of correspondence to the New York Evening Post to quote from the remarks of Sir Henry Lunn at a Methodist Conference in London, who seems to have launched a "morality campaign" with denunciation of Hollywood. Along with that account is the statement that "the commercial film industry here (London) is uneasy at the likelihood of a vast development of 'non-theatrical' film exhibitions."

This all sounds very much like an echo of a number of projects that have been talked in the United States at various intervals in the last twenty years.

It is entirely possible that religious organizations may in time evolve motion pictures for their particular purposes. It is most improbable that churches will ever be importantly engaged in what is properly to be deemed competition for the amusement industry. Adventures in that sector are likely to prove of about the same order of competition that a church bazaar or a ladies' aid society supper creates for the businesses of a community.

CONSIDER the daring of Mr. Arthur L. Gale, editor of Movie Makers, magazine of the Amateur Cinema League, who, writing a jacket for his book entitled "How to Write a Book", stepped out to say: "This book will not help anybody to sell an unpublished story or scenario to Hollywood studios." In sequel the book is a success. It is possible that the customers do not believe jacket screeds.

STRICTLY ORIGINAL

WHEN lotteries, sweeping the screen, were first denounced as destructive of box office morale, the defense was "the competition made us do it". And that, must one anticipate, will be the official reason why not one but four production organizations have in quick succession discovered talent revealed by the Minsky art of "strip-teasing".

FOR, OF, BY THE PATIENTS

POSITIVELY without irony, the New York Times, in its news columns, records: "Bellevue's Psychiatric Theatre is one of the activities . . . of the WPA Federal Theatre Project. . . . The patients usually write their own plays, design costumes and scenery and act before an audience made up of other patients."

Also, entirely without guile, may we inquire wherein this denotes an activity differing in any important respect from many WPA theatre projects "on the outside"?

Remember the productions entitled "Injunction Granted" and "Horse Eats Hat" for choice samples.

REMEMBERING "WILL"

THERE'S a heart tug in the thumbing of the screen's album of memories of Will Rogers in the little picture entitled "Lest We Forget", which goes out in aid of the funds of the Memorial Hospital at Saranac Lake, New York, maintained for the ailing and needy of stage and screen. Besides the appeal of a proper cause, it has ten minutes of mellow sentiment, a communing again with a blithe, wholesome son of "the middle border" who became a world figure and an immortal by being himself.

LET 'EM SLEEP

RADIO, the motion picture and the pulp magazines are "the three greatest flophouses in America," proclaimed Dr. Jay B. Nash of New York University speaking before a Rotary Club meeting in Atlantic City. "Given a free choice, 87 out of 100 will turn to one of those three things for leisure." Those are the entertainments with which, he says, "we let our minds go to sleep." We want the other 13 per cent, too.

'TIS indeed a world of woes, what with taxes, "strip-teasers", censors and sin. But we have dined this night, in fond memory of a better, older America, deep in pig jowls cooked with dock-and-dandelion greens, fresh from our Silvermine hillside. It is an hour of optimism. Probably we, the art and the nation will all survive. It's spring in Connecticut!

This Week

THE trade found the domestic prospect pleasing and the foreign outlook dark. There was no mistaking the significance of augmented box office tax takings for March and published statements of film company earnings, but investigators home from Europe worded dismal reports and bleak predictions. Hollywood continued under a peak production load and prepared to welcome visiting film salesmen. Employee and employer sat down together to talk things over. An exhibitor committee convened to devise a means of regulating the radio activities of screen personalities and a film riding the crest of the biggest broadcast campaign in history set an all time record for the Roxy theatre in New York. Governments, lodges, minority groups and outspoken individuals challenged, championed and in other wise expressed themselves with regard to motion picture contents, portents and so on. A presidential message appeared to postpone until some dim tomorrow the possibility of getting anything done about the 40-cent tax level.

Labor Confers

Representatives of the Screen Actors' Guild and several unions were entering on a series of conferences with Pat Casey as spokesman for producers with respect to matters affecting employment relationships. Hollywood opinion as to probable outcome of the deliberations ranges from complete confidence that divergent views will be reconciled to flat certainty that a clash between employers and employees is inevitable.

Developments in the affairs of labor, organized and unorganized, are reported on page 39.

Reisman's Findings

Phil Reisman, RKO-Radio vice-president in charge of foreign sales, returned from a four months tour of twelve countries with news somewhat less than stimulating. Quota restrictions are being intensified in practically all quarters, according to Mr. Reisman's investigations, and the situation in New South Wales is such that, in his opinion, American companies will have to withdraw from Australia if the new measure passed there is enforced. He was outspoken, too, about the pact recently entered into by Germany, Italy and Japan.

"Lest We Forget"

Five thousand prints of "Lest We Forget," the Will Rogers Memorial film, were available to exhibitors for release on Friday through the facilities of the National Screen Service and eight distributing companies.

A review is on page 37.

Korda Confident

Endorsing the Moyne committee recommendation for a government commission to administer a revised Films Act, Alexander Korda said that "with a real effort" British companies "could establish themselves in a modern but well paying way."

Mr. Korda's views are given in full on page 22.

Legislative Scene

Motion picture matters ranging from fire department permits to outdoor advertising were subjects of measures dealt with in seven state legislatures, specifically those of Indiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Missouri, New York, Ohio and Wisconsin.

A Book on the Code

"Hollywood's Movie Commandments" is the title of a book by Olga J. Martin, former secretary to Joseph I. Breen, described by the author as an "analysis of the Production Code" and "based on facts gathered from the inside." It is published by the H. W. Wilson company, New York.

A review by Terry Ramsaye appears on page 60.

Along the Thames

Seeing eye to eye upon the British Quota apparently depends upon what kind of glasses are worn. Members of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association are sitting on the sidelines while the distributors and producers bargain. The Film Group wants guaranteed American release or "cash equivalent," something similar to the Kontingent operating in various Continental countries. Distributors want the right to spread their British production expenditure upon a few expensive pictures or a larger number of inexpensive ones. The exhibitors remember that the Board of Trade wants an agreed trade policy and believe that they can get most of what they want if they obtain statutory arbitration. As for the American companies, they regard an export-Quota as just another expression of the hold-up principle behind the existing internal Quota.

Political Censorship

Political censorship of varied hue and caliber bobbed up in the wake of the Kansas Board of Review's quickly revoked ruling on the March of Time with the National Council for the Prevention of War condemning the government and Hollywood producers for working together in the production of films deemed anti-pacifistic in tone. The German Consul in St. Louis sought censorship by boycott of a Russian film he described as anti-Hitler.

An account of these and similar activities is published in page 13.

More Family Pictures

The Better Films Committee of Chicago celebrated its fifth anniversary last weekend with 200 women inspecting with satisfaction reports of the organization's researches disclosing, among other things, an increase in the proportion of what are classified as family pictures. Twentieth Century-Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and The Christian Science Monitor were presented with awards of merit.

William F. Crouch tells all about it on page 52.

"Every country in the world wants to produce pictures like Hollywood, but they want America to foot the bills."—PHIL REISMAN. (See Page 13.)

Berlin Disturbed

Cable dispatches described the German government as preparing to make official protest to Washington against exhibition of "Modern German Christian Martyrs," a film presenting Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor of the Riverside Church, New York, in an appeal for funds to aid German Christian refugees. The German press has dealt harshly with the film and the manner of its presentation.

Quota Extended

After protracted debate, the British House of Lords voted to continue regulation of motion picture importation by quota for a period of 10 years.

Circumstances surrounding the decision are described on page 25.

The Opening Gun

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sales forces converged upon Los Angeles where the first gun of the selling season will be fired with the opening of the company's annual sales convention on Sunday. From then until sixty days thence the production capital will be practically never without its quota of guests from the distributing branch of the business as one sales force supplants another in a sequence of conventions.

Convention plans of the several companies are revealed on page 49.

MPTOA Warns

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America issued a bulletin warning the trade that unless distributors cooperate with the organization in setting up conciliation boards the industry may expect a wave of anti-trust suits and efforts to obtain state and federal legislation of regulatory character.

Contents of the bulletins are conveyed on page 76.

Prosperity Notes

Indication that all is relatively well with the motion picture industry was seen in the governmental report of admission taxes for March, up $66,000 to $1,539,408. There was portent, too, in the Paramount report showing a net profit of $6,012,000 for the 53 weeks ended January 2nd.

Financial news of the week is marshalled on page 57.

French Tax Cut

The 10 per cent pauper tax on theatre receipts in France has been reduced to 8.75 per cent, the difference to be made up by a tax on radio broadcasting.

Censorial Warning

The New York state board of censors uttered a mild warning to exhibitors that shortening of the board seal affixed to films, legally prescribed as 36 inches long, constitutes a misdemeanor under state law. The suspicion attachable to persons displaying it in less than this length is that clipped portions may have been affixed to unapproved pictures.

There is a story about it on page 46.

"Wake Up and Live"

Exploited by the greatest radio build-up a motion picture ever had, most of it gratis, "Wake Up and Live" opened at the Roxy in New York to the biggest opening day business in the history of the house. Walter Winchell and Ben Bernie are in it and their programs have been plugging it, as the radio phrase goes, for weeks, with cast visitations to other national airshows, another radio phrase, and with the Winchell syndicated newspaper column throbbing daily puffs (or puffing daily throbs) from coast to coast. The incident seems to have a bearing on the hotly disputed exhibitor question as to whether radio is good or bad for the box office.

What Ben Bernie would call a bit of a story appears on page 40.

RKO Reorganization

Federal Judge William Bondy denied Isidor J. Kresel, attorney for Orpheum Circuit preferred stockholders, permission to intervene in the RKO reorganization proceedings because of technical deficiencies in the motion papers.

The week's news of the case is offered on page 52.

Topsy Turvy Time

Cities and towns across the country decided for and against daylight saving in about the same proportion as customary but there was a good deal of switching about, many which had tried it before letting it go this time and many which hadn't giving it a tryout.

Statistics may be scanned on page 75.

Exhibitors Set Dates

Exhibitor organizations got down to dates and places in their convention plans. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia decided to get together at Virginia Beach on June 14. The Independent Theatre Owners of New York chose the Hotel Astor and May 5. The Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey agreed that Atlantic City in September will be about right.

Plans are set forth on page 59.

The French Scene

The industry in France was alarmed by details of the plan for nationalization of the motion picture proposed by the Syndicate of Film Workers. The Syndicate represents the left wing of Premier Leon Blum's Popular Front government and Robert Jarville, general secretary of the Syndicate, is known as an avowedly militant communist.

5,700 Chance Games

Claude Ezell, general sales manager for Affiliated Enterprises, Denver, owners of Bank Night, told New York listeners that the so-called chance game is being used by 5,700 theatres in the United States. He didn't say how many were using it when the wave as at crest. Incidentally, users of the device were experiencing difficulties of one kind or another in Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska, Texas and Wisconsin.

The box score is on page 44.

Plan Radio Control

The film-radio committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America postponed from Wednesday to Thursday its scheduled conference on submitted plans for the setting up of controls to regulate the microphone activities of motion picture talent. The meeting was to be held in the New York office of Walter Vincent, committee chairman.

Participating personnel is listed on page 37.

Warner Plans

Return of Harry M. Warner and other executives of Warner Brothers from a tour of Europe during which the prospects of establishing theatres abroad were investigated was followed by announcement that no decision has been reached with respect to overseas expansion as yet. "We've been looking and talking, but there is nothing definite," they said.

Production at Peak

In part because a succession of sales conventions is about to bring to Hollywood the legions of portfolio and pen, studios pressed production crews engaged on fifty pictures, before the cameras, a peak load. The index was up from 49, 11 films being taken to cutting rooms as 12 went to the stages.

Gus McCarthy sums up the production situation on page 43.

FIGHT ON FOUR FRONTS ON POLITICS IN FILMS

Elimination of Censorship in Kansas Demanded After the March of Time Cuts; Ohioans Attack Ban on Two Films

Controversies were brewing on several fronts this week over political censorship, actual and attempted, of motion pictures.

Loud repercussions were heard after the Kansas State censor board's censoring of an anti-New Deal sequence in March of Time. "Free speech" advocates refused to be placated by a reversal of the board's decision.

In Ohio the prohibition of two pictures brought charges of "whimsical" actions by the state censors.

The German government and municipal St. Louis were embroiled in arguments over attempted showing of the Soviet "Der Kampf," alleged to be anti-Nazi, the Germans winning the first skirmish when the mayor prohibited the showing.

American pacifists hit at the United States Government and certain Hollywood producers for employing U. S. military forces in filming and thereby creating "a steady stream of propaganda for increasing America's armament appropriations."

"Free speech" advocates have started a move in Kansas to effect elimination of state censorship, using as their principal weapon the national storm of protest that caused the Kansas Board of Review to reverse itself on its cersorship of March of Time's sequence on the New Deal's Supreme Court legislation in deleting from last week's release the words of Burton Kendall Wheeler, Senator from Montana.

This precedent in the political censoring of the motion picture quickly became a political football in a contest between foes and followers of the New Deal's Supreme Court legislation. After politicians and press attacked the state's action, Walter Huxman, Kansas Governor, requested the board to reconsider, and the board later announced it "was happy to make a new decision."

The "free speech" advocates found an ally in the Kansas City Journal-Post, which posed the proposition: "Kansas may well ask itself whether it needs a state board to say what it can and cannot hear in its motion pictures. It is a long jump from a Mae West bathtub scene to the expression of political opinion, but the board managed to negotiate it," said the newspaper, in explaining that the purpose in establishment of the board was to protect "the morals of Kansans from the supposedly evil designs of Hollywood."

The Kansas City Star noted that the "state organic law provides that 'the liberty of the press shall be inviolate,' while apparently freedom of speech on the screen could be—and was about to be—violated."

Meanwhile, "the Republicans have pounced on this newsreel fumble" by the Democratic Governor Huxman, according to the New York Times, which said that even New Deal newspapers in Kansas were criticizing the implication of the censor board's original ruling.

RADIO SHOWS GAIN IN ADVERTISERS' DOLLAR

While newspapers still continued to receive the main share of the national advertisers' average dollar in 1936, radio has been reducing the percentage steadily, the American Newspaper Publishers' Association was told in New York last week at its convention by its Bureau of Advertising.

The newspapers' part was 44 cents. Magazines received 33.6 cents, and chain broadcasting, 14 cents. In the previous five years the newspapers averaged approximately 45 cents of every dollar, while radio has risen consistently in this period from 5.3 to 14 cents of every dollar.

In 1936 chain broadcasting increased its revenue by 21.1 per cent over the previous year, or from $167,000,000 to $188,000,000.

Ohio Hits at Censorship

While Governor Huxman and his censors were in the middle of the political censorship battle in Kansas, Ohio took advantage of the occasion to attack censorship in its own state. Under the caption, "Vicious Censorship," the Cincinnati, Ohio, Enquirer said editorially that Kansas "is not alone" in this "grave offense" against free speech. "A short-sighted and irresponsible Ohio board has denied the people of Ohio the right to see two significant pictures," said the Enquirer, adding: "One was a collection of scenes from the war in Spain, and the other a study of Jewish life in the Soviet Union. Whether the persons responsible for these rulings at Columbus are stupid or merely propagandists themselves, is not clear. But it is clear that they have no sound principles of censorship to back up their whimsical decisions.

"This is a time when liberty must be sought for eagerly, when public officers must be held to an accounting for every inroad they make on the rights of citizens. Censorship to require that motion pictures conform to reasonably good taste is understandable. Censorship to prevent the spread of 'immoral ideas' is difficult to administer intelligently—even for an intelligent board—but undoubtedly warranted by public opinion.

"But censorship openly wielded for political objects is intolerable."

Ohio censors some time ago banned "Spain in Flames" and "The Greater Promise," and suits are pending in the Ohio Supreme Court to compel the board to release both pictures.

Political "censorship" by way of the boycott method appeared in St. Louis, where Reinold Freytag, German consul, protested to Bernard Dickmann, mayor, against the showing at the Municipal Auditorium of an anti-Hitler picture, "Der Kampi" ("The Struggle").

The film, made by the Soviet and released here by Amkino, had been advertised as a reply to Adolf Hitler's autobiography, "Mein Kampf" ("My Struggle"), and the German counsul protested it "was inflammatory and insulting." Mayor Dickmann prohibited the showing.

The German-American Club, the St. Louis Civil Liberties Committee and the St. Louis Communist Party thereupon entered the argument with protests against the Mayor's ban, and independently screened the picture in Hibernian Hall.

Pacifists Protest Against Use of U. S. Military Forces in the Filming of Universal's Picture "Wings Over Honolulu"

Protests Navy Personnel in Films

The latest move by a political group to censor the Government for aiding Hollywood producers was made on Monday by the National Council for the Prevention of War, in Washington, which took action in the specific instance of cooperation of the United States Navy with Universal Pictures in the making of "Wings Over Honolulu," now in work in California.

Quoting an article appearing in the April 10th issue of The Army and Navy Register, a "service" periodical, Albert Benham, director of the motion picture department of the council, released a bulletin calling attention to the fact that officers and enlisted men and the wives of some of the aviation personnel of the aircraft carrier Ranger actually took part in the making of "Wings Over Honolulu."

Mr. Benham at the same time urged that all members of his organization write letters of commendation to the Fox, Universal, Paramount and Hearst newsreels for the "peace sentiment" displayed in their pictures of the Army Day celebration, April 10th, but criticized Universal newsreel for its advertising of the feature "Wings Over Honolulu" in a newsreel showing navy planes taking off on a non-stop flight to Hawaii, in which Graham McNamee closes his descriptive narrative with the phrase "wings over the Pacific—wings over Honolulu."

Basis Complaint on Taxes

The Army and Navy Register article recited how, having forgotten to bring along a naval captain "in Honolulu makeup," H. C. Potter, Universal director of "Wings Over Honolulu," prevailed upon Captain Patrick N. L. Bellinger of the U. S. S. Ranger to take the part. Lieutenant Commander Valentine Schaffer, air operations officer at the naval air station at North Island, officers and enlisted men of the Ranger and some of the wives of the carrier's aviation personel also appeared in the picture.

"But this is not the important thing." Mr. Benham said he condemned the Navy's policy on the ground that it offers opportunity for Navy propaganda; means expenditure of taxpayers' money for private profit, and is unfair to professional film actors.

"Incidentally," he pointed out, "in view of the mounting taxes for tremendous military budgets, isn't it inconsistent with the plea for a larger and larger Navy that the time and services of officers and enlisted men of the Navy can be spared for 'emoting' for the movies?"

FILM MEASURES UP IN SEVEN STATES

Ontario Exhibitors Decide to Form General Committee on Legislative Matters

With state legislative sessions drawing to a close, the industry this week concerned itself with measures acted upon or proposed in seven states, and in Canada.

A law was passed in Indiana requiring annual theatre permits from the state fire marshal for theatres.

A proposed one per cent sales tax in Maine failed to pass.

Massachusetts appointed a special taxation committee to study the state's taxes.

In Missouri a substitute was drawn for the proposed two per cent sales tax measure.

The Keenan bill in New York, requiring one day of rest in seven for firemen in motion picture theatres, awaited Governor Herbert Lehman's signature, and distributors in New York City decided to drop their opposition to the city's sales tax on film rentals.

Defeat of Ohio's seven per cent sales tax bill was expected.

A measure regulating outdoor advertising was introduced in Wisconsin.

Plans for a general organization to handle motion picture problems in the Province of Ontario in Canada in connection with taxation and legislation especially, were considered this week at a meeting of nearly 100 Ontario theatre owners at the King Edward Hotel at Toronto under the auspices of the Toronto Board of Trade.

Headquarters of The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America gave up hopes of a reduction of federal admission taxation this year, when President Roosevelt, in asking Congress for $1,500,000,000 for relief proposed a study of the existing tax structure with a view to developing new and additional taxes early next year.

Tax revenues for the current fiscal year, ending June 30, next, will be $604,000,000 under the estimates made last January.

Meanwhile, Senator Burton K. Wheeler, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, was urged to seek legislation vesting supervision of motion pictures in the Federal Trade Commission instead of state regulatory bodies, in a letter from David Garrison Berger, attorney, now associated with Condor Pictures.

Other national legislation included the introduction of a new copyright bill by Senator Joseph F. Guffey of Pennsylvania, a companion measure to that introduced by Representative J. Burwood Daly, to protect interpreters' musical compositions. The new bill differs from other copyright measures in that it protects not the composition itself but the interpretation given composition by orchestra leaders, or actors.

A definite decision not to appeal from the court of appeals ruling that film rentals within the city of New York are subject to the two per cent municipal sales tax was reached by United Artists this week. The New York United Artists exchange was the defendant in the test case recently decided by the state's highest court with a unanimous decision in the city's favor.

The new Indiana law effective July 1, under which every place of amusement in the state will be required to obtain a permit annually from the state fire marshal is expected to double the revenue available to the marshal's department. The new rules also prohibit the crowding of aisles.

A special commission has been appointed in Massachusetts to examine the state's taxation and the new body immediately asked the legislature to defer action for another year on the proposal to limit real estate taxes to $25 per $1,000 of valuation. Adoption of this measure would have meant a marked increase in theatre real estate taxes.

Missouri Sales Tax Bill Reported

The Missouri Senate ways and means committee has voted out the two per cent sales tax measure passed by the house, with recommendations that it pass. Of interest to exhibitors is the amendment allowing retail merchants, which include exhibitors, three per cent for trouble and losses in collecting, if the tax is paid before due date.

According to present indications in the Ohio legislature at Columbus, the pending seven per cent increase in the admission tax will not be enacted and exhibitors are beginning to take a much more optimistic view of the situation.

Amended Roxy Plan Presented by Committees

Amendments to the present proposed plan of reorganization for the Roxy Theatre Corporation in New York were presented to Special Master Addison S. Pratt Tuesday. The amendments favor the bondholders and noteholders, with no provisions for the stockholders, and were the results of conferences between W. C. Michel, executive of Twentieth Century-Fox, and counsel for the various protective committees.

Under the amendments first mortgage bondholders are to receive four per cent on their bonds instead of three and one-half per cent for the first three years and four per cent thereafter as proposed under the original plan. Provisions for amortization have been changed to $65,000 annually for the first 10 years and $70,000 thereafter. This represents an increase from the previous setup which provided for an increasing schedule with a $65,000 maximum.

A new provision has also been inserted which prohibits the new company from declaring dividends except out of earned surplus after creation of a $110,000 annual depreciation reserve. Twentieth Century-Fox is to have complete control of the reorganized company according to the amended plan with "uncontrolled discretion" to select pictures for exhibition at the Roxy.

Holders of $1,548,000 sinking fund gold notes are to receive 7,740 shares of $3 dividend cumulative preferred non-voting stock. The preferred stock is callable at $102 with the right to participate before the common stock to the extent of $100 per share in the event of liquidation of the new company. The original plan provided for 15,480 shares of Class A stock for the noteholders.

William Hofmeister, 86, treasurer and director of a group operating in Baltimore under the trade name of Associated Theatres, died there last Friday, after a short illness.

Quigley Speaks at Princeton on Films and Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., April 30.—Martin Quigley delivered a lecture yesterday (Thursday) at Princeton University on the subject of Public Opinion and Motion Pictures. The lecture was in connection with the course of studies based on the general question of what the student of public opinion and, more particularly, the leader of public opinion should know about the specific agencies of communication.

Mr. Quigley's lecture dealt principally with a discussion of the following motion picture trends as affecting public opinion:

1—The efforts on the part of special interests to make the films specifically a pleader of special interests.

2—Efforts on the part of pressure groups of various classifications to compel exhibition in theatres of subjects regarded as suitable to their purposes or, on the contrary, to prevent exhibition of subjects held to be undesirable.

3—The Legion of Decency as typical of an organization of public opinion under responsible direction.

4—The rising tide of nationalism as affecting international distribution of motion pictures and influencing and limiting the international exchange of ideas through the film.

Princeton's course on public opinion is under the direction of Professor Harwood L. Childs.

"Midnight Bathe Nudite" Chicago Stage Feature

The Balaban & Katz Chicago theatre on Friday of this week was to open "Casino Parisien" as its stage show, featuring a scene called "Midnight Bathe Nudite." The show is a French Casino production and is famous for nudity. It played the Morrison Hotel in Chicago for two months.

House Passes Ban On Salary Publicity

The House of Representatives in Washington on Tuesday passed the Doughton Bill repealing the Revenue Law provisions which require the annual publication of the names of officials and employes of corporations receiving salaries in excess of $15,000 a year. The bill has been sent to the Senate for concurrence.

First "Color Stand-In"

Jack Leeman, former teacher of French and English in Hollywood High School, this week laid claim to being the industry's first "color stand-in." He was selected to "stand-in" for Fredric March in a recent feature because his hair and facial coloring resembled the star's.

Rick Ricketson, division manager for Fox Intermountain Theatres, this week closed the Kit Carson theatre at La Junta, Col., and the Plaza, at Las Vegas, N. M.

GOVERNMENTS AIM QUOTA ARROWS AT HOLLYWOOD

Film Blocs and Demands for Export-Quotas or Cash Equivalent All Devised As Impetus to the Home Industry

Surge of Political and Economic Self-Consciousness Erupts in Adverse Restrictive Measures and Direct Competition

Governments and motion picture industries abroad, large and small, are becoming acutely conscious of the political and economic importance of their home film product and are moving with determination to build their industries, both by restrictive measures and by entering into direct competition with Hollywood.

Methods already adopted, or proposed, range from the crowding out of American product, as in the case of the German-Italian-Japanese "international film bloc", to the government control of films that is proposed by the "Left Wing" Socialists in France, the 20 per cent "export quota" or "cash equivalent" now advanced as "protection" for England, and the new determination of the New South Wales Government to force American distributors into production in Australia under a stricter enforcement of existing N.S.W. quota laws.

Taking its cue from Lord Strabolgi's declaration that a "flourishing British film industry is of increasing importance," the House of Lords in London agreed last Thursday to continue the present quota law another ten years. However, a report from the joint conferences between the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, the Kinematograph Renters Society and the Producers Film Group boils down to an entirely new proposal of whether, in return for a lower quota, the American companies could give British producers the equivalent in extra revenue by participating in a 20 per cent export quota, or paying the cash equivalent. Bruce Allan, from London, writes on the new turn in England's proposed restrictions on page 25.

Korda Says Market Is Open

On the other hand, Alexander Korda, one of England's outstanding producers and apparently more successful than any of his colleagues in marketing product in America, now urges British companies to win for themselves a place in the American market with quality product. He charges that restricted markets comprise one of the prime causes of the difficulties of some of the permanently established producing companies in England. Mr. Korda's views appear on page 22, including his advocacy of government help to the British industry through the proposals of the socalled Moyne Committee for a governmental commission to administer a revised Film (quota) Act, operate a flexible quota (yearly variable), and control a quality test of product presented for British Quota registration.

KANSAS THEATRE MARK FOR BULLETS

One Kansas theatre operator has been as close to labor trouble as he cares to come. In a fight between labor factions at Galena on April 11th stray bullets fired by one side struck the Maywood theatre, operated by N. W. Huston, while a matinee was being shown. Most of the audience were children. They fled by a side door and no one was wounded.

The French scheme to eliminate Hollywood and other foreign films has been drawn by Robert Jarville, secretary of the Cinema Workers' Syndicate—the "Left Wing" Socialists. It would effect a sweeping reorganization and complete nationalization of the industry, an idea that already is causing consternation among oldline French film leaders, who charge M. Jarville with "demagogy," adding that the 120 films now made annually in France scarcely recover their cost, yet the proposed project would require 450 to be made at home. Pierre Autré, from Paris, reports on the full text of the new plan, on page 26, and observes, "It is obvious that the French trade unions would like to make the French cinema a means of propaganda, as already has been done in Russia."

Further warning of more severe British restrictions on Hollywood product came last week from the unexpected source of a forum conducted by the Pacific Coast Section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in Hollywood. Explaining "economic aspects of the British film industry and its relation to the film industry of the United States," Gerald F. Rackett, a studio technician, told how "vigorous efforts will be made to establish the British film industry on a quota exceeding 20 per cent." Mr. Rackett's remarks appear on page 24.

Reisman Sees Dangers

American distributors in New York are speaking ominously of the growing quota restrictions abroad against Hollywood product.

The new quotas of New South Wales and of England with its new proposal of a 20 per cent export quota, or "cash equivalent," were cited as "serious sales problems" by Phil Reisman, foreign sales manager of Radio Pictures, Inc., on his return to New York on Monday from a four months trip around the world.

Germany's new "international film bloc" with Japan and Italy, aimed at Hollywood exports, was called a "menace" to American films by other distributing executives in New York.

The increase in the number and stringency of quota laws in practically all of the 12 countries he visited was cited by Mr. Reisman.

Of the New South Wales quota act, Mr. Reisman said that if its provisions could not be relaxed, the American companies, much against their wish, would be forced out of that market.

He added, however, that he believed a satisfactory solution could be worked out upon the early arrival in New York of a delegation headed by Frederick Daniell, which the New South Wales Government is sending to discuss the act's provisions.

Mr. Reisman estimated that American companies have lost approximately $3,500,000 in receipts in England under the quota requirements of that country, and said that the same companies would lose approximately $3,000,000 in 1939 if the Australian quota is enforced. In comparison, the American companies' profits from the Australian market is about $3,500,000 annually, he said.

The New South Wales quota, now in its second year, was not enforced against American companies last year because domestic production could not meet the demands for pictures, but efforts are now being made by the Government there to apply it. The act, covering a period of five years, imposes a seven and one-half per cent quota this year, graduated up to 15 per cent in 1939. It would require production in Australia of four pictures by RKO this year and from 50 to 70 by all other American companies, Mr. Reisman said.

He pointed out that other nations are considering similar restrictive laws which, if enacted, would mean that American companies would subsidize the film industry for each of them.

New Zealand Proposal

Mr. Reisman said that New Zealand is discussing establishment of a committee to regulate film rentals in that country.

"RKO Radio pictures, for one, will be compelled to withdraw from New South Wales if the law there is enforced," said Mr. Reisman, "because the Act would demand distributors to 'acquire' 5 per cent of their pictures from Australian studios at present, and 15 per cent in three years, and there is nothing like that quantity of good product available in Australia. So the New South Wales Government interprets the Act to mean that the American companies must produce a sufficient number of films over there to fill the quota.

"Obviously, such a program is impossible. With only two studios in Australia, equipment and talent are far too scarce, and the cost of transporting producing units from Hollywood is prohibitive.

"Enforcement would mean that we shall simply have to get out of business in New South Wales, for we would have to spend more money than our total profits on distribution there would cover."

Protests "Quality Clause"

The Act has a "Quality Clause" which Mr. Reisman considers particularly dangerous. It sets up a board to determine whether a picture has sufficient merit to be shown in the state.

"Even under the best producing conditions in Hollywood," he said, "there can be no guarantee that the finest equipment and talent will result in a satisfying picture. Things go wrong unaccountably. If only a few productions made in Australia were barred from distribution on the judgment of an official board as to their quality, the result would be calamitous."

Mr. Reisman, in an interview in RKO's home office in Rockefeller Center, made it clear that he was speaking for RKO Radio Pictures only, but said he did not see how any American companies could remain in business in New South Wales under the quota law.

"And that would mean serious losses for the state's exhibitors," he pointed out, "as there is very little product other than American going into Australia.

"RKO Radio will gladly help the Australians in the development of their own industry in every feasible way, even to the extent of distributing their pictures at cost," Mr. Reisman announced.

FOREIGN MARKET RAISES BARRIERS

Emissary To Be Sent to U. S.

Mr. Reisman spent an afternoon in Australia with Premier Stevens of New South Wales, presenting the American case. Following that discussion that government delegated Frederick Daniell to visit the United States for further discussion of the law with American distributors.

"Every country in the world wants to produce pictures like Hollywood," the RKO foreign chief observed, "but they want America to foot the bills."

Mr. Reisman sailed for England last January, then traveled across Europe and through the Suez Canal to visit Bombay, Colombo and Singapore, then to Australia for stops at Perth, Adelaide, Melbourne and Sydney, to Auckland, New Zealand, the Fiji Islands and Honolulu, to San Francisco.

He reported theatre business good in all places he visited except on the European Continent. There, he says, the motion picture industry is suffering from the unsettled political and international conditions, which now are beginning to find new national expression in the building of home film industries.

Newspaper Flare-up

The New South Wales quota situation took on an even more serious color the other day when a serious newspaper flare-up in that country developed out of the determination of the N.S.W. Government to force American distributors into production in Australia and the equal determination on the part of American companies not to produce there.

The airmail brought from Melbourne, via London, reports that American distributors are threatening to withdraw from and completely cease operations in the Australia market.

The same dispatch brought an explanation of the government's attitude, clearly defined, by Premier Stevens, who said: "In introducing the quota legislation in 1935, the Government desired to encourage the film industry, and certain obligations were placed upon the distributors and exhibitors of imported film. Apparently some doubt existed in the minds of a number of distributors, and for this reason exemptions were granted in 1936. The granting of exemptions for 1936 is not to be construed as a precedent.

"The Government looks to the distributor to see that for this year and subsequent years the requisite number of Australian-made films is included in his distribution program."

The Act provides for a penalty not exceeding $500 for failure to comply with the quota regulations, unless the distributor can prove that the reasons for his non-compliance are beyond his control.

Insufficient Local Product

American distributors in Australia generally insist that they did their part in the first year in making an effort to fulfill their requirements, but that there was an insufficient number of local pictures available to enable them to comply. They hold that it is the local Australian producers' job to provide quota footage, not theirs.

The airmail dispatches on the Australian quota situation received in New York on Tuesday told how the American distributors in that country are citing Phil Reisman's lengthy explanations of the American distributors' position, which Mr. Reisman made while visiting Australia.

Mr. Reisman on his trip told the Australian press that, "By 1939 we should be losing anything up to $3,000,000 a year on our quota films produced in Australia. But the gross profits which go to America from the operations of American companies in Australia amount to only $3,750,000.

"You will ask whether we must necessarily suffer such big losses in quota productions—also, whether production in Australia would cost us as much as production in England. My reply is that the American companies have made a serious effort with their English quota pictures—they did not willingly lose $3,500,000 on British quota productions.

Lose Money on $25,000 Purchase

"For some of our English pictures we paid only $25,000," continued the Reisman Australian press interviews. "But even then we lost money. The cost of printing film, advertising and distribution can at times exceed the amount of receipts from film rental. You know, only 10 or 15 per cent of our Hollywood pictures, which are produced under the most favorable conditions possible, make money."

The Australian newspapers also quoted Mr. Reisman on the disastrous potentialities of the New South Wales "Quality Clause" which vests in a government board the power to decide the standard of quality of quota films. "The members of the board judging quality might be suffering from liver on the particular morning they saw the film, and thus might turn their thumbs down on our effort," he said, with the conclusion, "That would kill the picture."

"Sentence of Death"

"We have seen already how the board's adverse verdict on the Australian picture, 'The Burgomeister' has prevented that production from gaining a screening in any theatre. We cannot afford to face such a sentence of death. A single total loss like that would completely upset a company's balance sheet for the year.

"Apart from anything else, the American companies simply cannot send their top-line actors and technicians and writers all the way to Australia. Even for our home productions, we cannot find nearly enough first class talent. Supply and demand run up salaries to staggering figures.

Precedent to Other Countries

"The trouble with the quota in New South Wales is that, if we sacrifice ourselves for the sake of the local industry, it will establish a precedent. All the other Australian States will bring in quotas. What is to stop China from enforcing a quota, as well—and Brazil and South Africa and Peru? We have world interests to consider. Australia is only part of our field. We have already withdrawn from Czechoslovakia and Mexico because of exorbitant demands. Those countries found they could not do without us; and called us back again.

"We do not address the Government in a mandatory spirit," Mr. Reisman explained. "We assure the Australian people that we are willing, in any practical way, to help in the establishment of a local film industry. We will train Australian technicians in our Hollywood studios. We will submit to a tax on our earnings as a subsidy to Australian studios. But produce in this country we will not and can not."

This week's Australian dispatch brought word that most local newspapers there believe that the American distributors' threats of withdrawal are not taken seriously in official circles, and from Canberra, the seat of Federal Government in Australia, the press reported that the argument was advanced that because of the device of making copies from a master film which alone pays duty, American film exporters to Australia are in a much more advantageous position than almost any other foreign manufacturer.

The same source, however, failed to point out that while it is true that distributors pay eight pence a foot duty only on the master negative, the copies from it were made free of duty in order to establish an Australian film processing industry, which, since the lifting of the duty on duplicate prints, has flourished.

Germany's Agreements

Distribution executives in New York said this week that the series of reciprocal agreements recently negotiated and planned by the Nazi Government in Germany, in an "international film bloc" with Italy and Japan, are designed specifically to undermine the dominant position enjoyed by American product abroad, and that they are further intended to recoup the serious losses incurred by Germany's film exports within the last two years.

It was pointed out in distribution offices of New York companies that the latest arrangement between Germany, Italy and Japan, for cooperative motion picture activity, comes at the same time as the increase of the dubbing tax on imported product in Italy, although the arrangement is declared in Rome not to be aimed at American pictures.

Germany admittedly fired the first salvo, two weeks ago, in a new international motion picture trade "war," when it moved, in Berlin, to form a film bloc made up of the Nazi's "ideological" allies for propagandistic and "cultural" cooperation to fight their most powerful rival, Hollywood, and all "liberal" and communistic motion picture influences of the world.

Italy and Japan were the first two countries to actually ratify the new alliance with Germany; Austria and France have had motion picture trade pacts in existence with the Nazis for some time.

Italian Dubbing Tax

The increase in the Italian film dubbing tax, made effective on April 21, is not, as was first supposed, merely an increase from the previous 30,000 lire per film to 50,000 lire ($2,500). Actually the dubbing tax is a graduated levy and is based on the gross receipts in Italy of each picture. The minimum tax is 50,000 lire and applies to films which gross up to 2,500,000. On pictures grossing more than 2,500,000 lire the dubbing tax will increase 15,000 lire for every 500,000 lire of gross receipts exceeding 2,500,000 lire.

Thus, if a picture were to gross 4,500,000 lire the dubbing tax on that film would total 110,000 lire ($5,500) as compared to the previous dubbing tax of a straight 30,000 lire per picture. Italian law requires that all foreign product be shown in Italy in the Italian language, and that the dubbing must be done in that country.

Topnotch Films Hurt Most

It has been estimated that most of the pictures imported into Italy from the United States would fall within the 2,500,000 lire classification, and that approximately 10 per cent would come into the 4,500,000 lire group. Thus, the better American pictures are most heavily burdened by the dubbing tax. There is no maximum dubbing levy under the new Italian regulations.

Germany has recently concluded arrangements with Japan for cooperative effort and with Austria, which was placed in the position of acceding to the German demands in order to improve the market in Germany, "A STAR IS BORN" is the most beautiful picture I have seen in months and if I were giving out Academy awards that's the picture I would give it to.

KORDA ENDORSES PLAN FOR GOVERNMENT HELP

U. S. Market Could Be Made "Well - Paying" by Real Effort, British Producer Says

Restricted markets and high costs of production are the prime causes of the difficulties of some of the permanently established producing companies in England, and "with a real effort" the British companies "could establish themselves in a modest but well-paying way," in the opinion of Alexander Korda, chairman and managing director of London Film Productions, Inc. The producer is now on his way to New York with prints of "Knight Without Armour."

Mr. Korda endorses the proposals of the socalled Moyne Committee for a governmental commission to administer a revised Film Act, operate a flexible Quota (yearly variable), and control a quality test of product presented for British Quota registration, he told The Financial News of London in a recent interview.

The expressed views of Mr. Korda were given a large significance in the British industry because he has been taking an important part in the discussions with a view to finding a national policy in regard to Flm Act revision, as demanded by the government. Participating in the conferences have been the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, the Kinematograph Renters Society, and the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries, for the producers.

Praises Moyne Report

Furthermore, individuals close to the British scene predicted, Mr. Korda's views are likely to prove more or less identical with those ultimately to be expressed by the British production interests as an entity.

"Generally speaking I consider that the report of the Moyne Committee is an excellent and most intelligent document," Mr. Korda was quoted as saying. "I think that an active Government Commission would be a great help to the maintenance and protection of British film production. . . . In certain sections of the industry there is a misplaced and unjustified fear of the Commission."

Without commenting on the practicability or otherwise of the detailed supervision of industry operations implied by the provisions just mentioned, Mr. Korda saw Government aid as invaluable in any attempt properly to exploit the market resources of the British Empire.

"You can visualize," he said, "the consequences of the great moral and propagandist effect if the British film were to penetrate the entertainment of the Colonies and Dominions."

Next to Government aid, he said, the big need of the British industry was better financial methods. (One of the missions of the Films Commission would be to encourage financial aid for sound projection projects.)

"So far," said Mr. Korda, "there may be many millions invested in the cinema in this country, but there is very little money really put into the production of the film itself. The money put in is very often only for short term credits. It is obvious that no industry can be built on this basis. . . . It is a different speculation to try to make one or two films and risk the failure of one or all of them, than to finance year after year a certain output of pictures which does not depend on the success or failure of one of its films."

"Amateur Administration"

The heavy losses incurred in British production he put down to the fact that so many films have been made by persons who became producers "without any qualifications whatsoever save that they could promote finance for the making of the pictures." He ascribed the losses to "amateur administrations and inexperience, coupled with the most unwise form of financing, where the short-term loan often costs them 12 to 15 per cent per annum." Of this type of producers he remarked, "Apart from the present damage they have done to the whole of the film industry, their short-lived existence will not do any permanent harm."

The difficulties of the permanent, established producing organizations he ascribed chiefly to costs and to restricted markets. He defended these companies against the charge of extravagance, saying that technicians had to be imported in the first instance but that "the salaries of the top executives at the Denham, Elstree, Pinewood or Ealing are lower than those of executives of lower rank in the American industry."

There is, however, he added, loss of money in marketing. "It is imperative," he declared, "that sales and distribution methods should change. At present a British film producer pays about 30 per cent for distribution in this country. The cost of distribution for the big American companies is 9 to 11 per cent of their gross." Sometimes, he said, a British producer has made a loss on a picture while the distributor has made unduly large profits.

Calls U. S. Market Improving

On the American market for British films, Mr. Korda lent no support to the "boycott" theory. Conceding that a difficulty lay in the control of key theatres by American producers and in the cost of adequate distribution organization in America, he said that "the American market is getting better and better from the British film's point of view and, with a real effort, we could establish ourselves in a modest but well-paying way."

He blamed British producers for the fact that "there has never been a concentrated effort to use all the many means of propaganda and publicity which are such an overwhelming feature of American life, in an attempt to help the sales of British films." Despite these drawbacks, he said, London Films itself draws fifty per cent of its revenue from territories outside England.

Nazis Seek Ban On Fosdick Film

The German Government in Berlin this week was reported about to make an official protest to Washington against further exhibition of the motion picture known in New York as "Modern German Christian Martyrs," which was shown Monday in the Riverside Church. At the same time, the Associated Press reported from the German capital that Berlin theatres featured newsreel portrayals of American strikes with commentators pointing out the "serenity" of workers under the Nazi regime.

In what was probably preparation for the request to the American government to ban the pictures which feature Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick appealing for $400,000 to aid German Christian refugees, the entire German press took up the cry against this film on the basis of the report of the semi-official German News Bureau featured under such headlines as "Scandal in New York Church."

The news agency report characterized the picture as "a new method of brazen Jewish propaganda in America" and charged it with falsifying remarks of National Socialist leaders.

The press comment, which runs along the usual identical lines, calls on the American people to repudiate this "Jewish agitation brought into Christian churches under false pretenses," and points to General von Steuben, Carl Schurz and innumerable unnamed Germans who contributed to America's development as witnesses that the German nation was not as pictured in the film.

Four Washington Houses for Warner

Warners will start immediate construction of four new theatres in the Washington, D. C., territory, to cost approximately $2,000,000, it was announced this week by John J. Payette, general zone manager.

Neighborhood houses will be built in Tenleytown, Bethseda, Silver Springs and Northeast Washington. Each will seat between 1,000 and 1,500 and be equipped with air conditioning apparatus. Mr. Payette called the plan of the houses an extension of the building program announced in December, 1935. Since that time, four new theatres have been added to the circuit, the Penn, Uptown, Sheridan and Calvert, which will open May 6.

Indiana Society Elects President

Mrs. Ferd Lucas of Greencastle, Ind., this week was elected president of the Indiana Endorsers of Photoplays at the 22nd annual convention of the organization at Fort Wayne. She succeeds Mrs. Earl Peters of Fort Wayne, who had served five terms. The 1938 convention of the group will be held in Indianapolis.

Oregon Censors Report

The censor board at Portland, Ore., has turned down only three pictures of the 115 viewed during the past year, it was reported this week. In each case preponderance of the sex element was the reason ascribed.

SEVERE RESTRICTIONS COMING, SMPE TOLD

More Vigorous Competition from England May Be Expected, Says Gerald K. Rackett

Some pertinent disclosures on the subject of quota restrictions in England and their possible effect on Hollywood came unexpectedly the other day out of a forum on "Economic aspects of the British industry and its relationship to the industry in the United States", conducted in Hollywood by the Pacific Coast Section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Gerald K. Rackett, for one, warned that more severe restrictions are threatening. Mr. Rackett has studied the insides of the British producing industry, in his various studio technical capacities with Technicolor, from 1930 to 1936, and as manager of the technical bureau of the Associated Motion Picture Producers, in Hollywood.

Mr. Rackett's remarks follow:

"The rapid rise of British motion picture producing facilities and productions which characterized 1936, followed by the financial curtailment and critical reaction which the British industry suffered, now invites us to evaluate this situation and determine its future potentialities. This is timely also because 1937 sees the end of the Cinematographic (Quota) Act which has occasioned the British Moyne Committee to recommend quota legislation for the next period. These recommendations will include quota requirements which will markedly affect English markets for American pictures and will probably be the occasion of incursions into the American market of English pictures.

"A statistical study will show that in the United States there are upwards of 15,000 sound-equipped theatres as compared with 4,950 theatres equipped for sound in England, establishing an approximate box office ratio of three to one. Recent British estimates place the annual American box office take at £140,000,000 ($700,000,000) as compared with £35,000,000 ($175,000,000) in Britain, from which we deduce a further relationship of approximately four to one. Again we may observe that there are approximately 70 sound stages equipped in England as compared to 130 to 150 in the United States.

"All of this points clearly to the fact that we may not expect a continuation of the present 20% quota, for there are economic bases for assuming that this quota may be more soundly rated somewhere between 25 and 35%. The Moyne Committee has given consideration to an ultimate quota ratio of 50%, so it is certain that vigorous efforts will be made to establish the British film industry on a quota exceeding 20%.

"Beyond this, we should be cognizant of the fact that the talking motion picture is expanding English as a universal language. Foreign audiences viewing pictures with superimposed titles develop a desire to understand the original dialogue, and it may be expected that little by little marked expansion of the use of English will result from this. Of course, there are those countries whose tradition, religion and customs will not re-act to such a development.

"We may look forward, however, to an expanded audience for the English-speaking picture and to the two great English-speaking nations of England and America supplying the product therefor. We may expect more vigorous competition from English-producing units and more inter-related and inter-allied financial control of American and English companies with an exchange of creative, technical and administrative talent, which perhaps in the long view will unify their efforts towards securing world domination for the English language peoples. As engineers, then, we must be cognizant of this trend and exert our efforts in those directions which will best meet the expected competition, but without a vigor which will discourage the strength of a unified domination.

"There is apparent the British tendency towards substantial capital investment in fixed producing facilities but a timidness in the longer gamble of investing in production. There has been surprisingly little exploitation in the cartoon production field which is strange in view of a whole-hearted reception of the large American cartoon output.

"The releasing facilities in England are such that more than a year may elapse before substantial returns from the box office are felt for expenditures in production, while in the United States as much as 50 per cent of the cost of the picture may be returned in four to six months. Modifications of all of these conditions may be expected and the Engineers committed to a careful study of all of these factors in seeking the common denominator, or universal factor, which generally guides the Engineer in his planning."

1936 Unexposed Film Exports Hit $4,360,000

Motion picture films, sensitized, not exposed, reached a new high in exports during 1936, totaling a dollar value of $4,360,000, according to a special survey made by foreign commerce departments of the United States Chamber of Commerce in Washington. According to the report, there was exported in 1936, 284,319,000 linear feet.

Nathanson Going Abroad

N. L. Nathanson, president of Famous Players Canadian, will accompany Barney Balaban, president of Paramount Pictures, when he sails for Europe this week on the Normandie. Arthur Lee, Gaumont British vice-president, was scheduled to leave on the same boat but cancelled his passage. He leaves next week.

George Crane has joined C. King Charney, Inc., distributors of Agfa film, as sales contact. He will be located in Hollywood.

K. of C. Hits at Propaganda Films

Edward J. Shea, Bronx County deputy of the Knights of Columbus in New York, this week began an investigation of motion picture distributors who furnish communistic propaganda films to schools, organizations and theatres and in an interview with the New York American, he said:

"One local film distributor is known to provide films carrying radical propaganda to more than 400 schools and colleges. We propose to keep patriotic organizations everywhere informed in matters of this kind. The distributor in question is said to operate as a subsidiary of the Communist Party."

Through the efforts of Mr. Shea some of the New York theatres now showing "Spain in Flames," which depicts the Popular Front side of the Spanish Civil War, have deleted parts which Mr. Shea and other organizations considered objectionable.

Agriculture Department Announces New Films

The United States Department of Agriculture in Washington this week announced the availability of the following pictures:

"C. C. C. at Work—Lake States." A two-reel silent picture showing CCC activities in the National Forests of the Lake States, such as nursery operations, reforestation, recreational developments, disease control and fire detection and suppression.

"Home Demonstration Work—What It Is and Does.." A two-reel subject, available either with or without sound, illustrating the major activities in home demonstration work.

"Trout Stream Improvement." A sound one-reeler showing types of structures and control means used to restore trout streams, and the rearing and planting of trout. Step by step construction of various types of dams, deflectors, and covers in flat country streams are pictures, with reasons for use and effect on streams.

The pictures are available on both the standard 35mm. stock and on 16mm. film.

Panama Protests "Swing"

The Lions Club of Panama City has protested against the Paramount feature, "Swing High, Swing Low," which, they allege, is derogatory to Panama and offensive to Panamanians, according to a special cable to the New York Times. The organization plans to present a memorial to the Foreign Ministry requesting that the showing of all Paramount pictures be banned until "Swing High, Swing Low" is suppressed.

EXHIBITORS ON SIDELINES WATCH BARGAINING OVER BRITISH QUOTA

Discussions Boil Down to Whether Americans, in Return for Lower Quota, Can Give Equivalent in Extra Revenue

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

The most detailed information thus far made available of the proceedings in the joint discussions of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, the Kinematograph Renters Society and the Film Group, aimed at an agreed alternative to the Moyne Report, has come from the report of the CEA representatives to the General Council meeting of the association at Portsmouth.

Significant as an indication of the existing trade situation was the statement that the exhibitor representatives "found themselves present in an auditory capacity, as it was perfectly obvious that the line of solution desired by the British producers was one which either gave them an entry into the American market, or the cash equivalent thereto. Consequently the discussions that proceeded were mainly between producer and renter—and American renter in particular."

"In the end," said the report in another significant passage, "the discussion boiled down to an examination of whether, in return for a lower Quota, the Americans could give the British producers the equivalent in extra revenue."

Saying that they were keenly interested in these discussions, the CEA representatives also express the opinion that they represent "the first practical step which has been made towards a lower Quota than 20 per cent upon renters, which experience has proved for all practical purposes is impossible."

Concessions from Distributors

It is important to remember that the triangular conference followed upon two-sided discussions between the exhibitor and distributor organizations, at which the main points of debate were statutory arbitration, overbuilding, the standard contract and booking methods. The official CEA statement that it was hoped to present a joint CEA-KRS report to the Board of Trade registering an agreed settlement of these matters is also highly important. It indicates that exhibitors have obtained, or hope to obtain, very substantial concessions from distributors in regard to trading problems.

Just what influence that may have had in leading the CEA to adopt the role of ring-keeper in the Quota fight is a matter on which every individual can draw his own conclusions. Practically, the situation exists that the debate on the Moyne quota recommendations is between distributors and producers and that, if they come to an agreement, exhibitors will not interfere, provided always that the exhibitor gets what he hopes for from the earlier talks with the KRS. Essentially, according to those who should know, he wants statutory arbitration, and won't be happy till he gets it.

HOUSE OF LORDS VOTES 10 MORE YEARS' QUOTA

The British House of Lords after long debate has agreed to a motion that the quota should be continued for 10 years.

Walter Runciman, president of the Board of Trade, had declared earlier in the day, Thursday, in Commons that the Government had accepted the recommendation of the Moyne committee for the continuance of the quota.

Mr. Runciman said that he proposed to introduce the necessary legislation before the end of the year.

Lord Strabolgi in the upper House pointed to the present crisis, where floor space for 58 features is occupied by only 13. That number, he said, would not fill the present quota.

He said it is practically impossible for British producers to get their product into the United States, yet he declared American producers could not make profits without England's market.

He urged a trade agreement with the United States, including a 20 per cent British film quota there.

Lord Ponsonby spoke of the "nauseous, vulgar bathos" of American films and their bad influence on the language of children, who have learned to say "Yep."

Lord Templemore, speaking for the Government, said it "is determined to find means to meet the quickie problem."

If this reading of the situation is accurate, the new demands put forward by the Film Group are of great importance. That they should take the form of what is known here as reciprocity was not unexpected though it is perhaps somewhat surprising that a representative body should find a new policy on a point of major film politics like the Quota after it officially has made other recommendations to the Government.

So far as one can judge the situation without any official details of the proposals either of producers or distributors, it appears to stand thus:

The Film Group is willing to agree to a reduction in the British film Quota in the case of American companies who give a bona fide release to British films in America.

Its definition of American release implies definite bookings to American theatres of the British films involved. In the absence of guarantees to that effect, it wants American companies to purchase British films for America for a fixed amount.

What the Distributor Wants

The policy favored by the KRS has a superficial resemblance to, but a vital difference from, these proposals. Distributors want, in a nutshell, the right to spread their British production expenditure on a few expensive pictures or a larger number of inexpensive ones, at option. They want to be free of the footage obligation. American release is implied for the better pictures they make here, but is not guaranteed. In any case, these pictures will probably be made by the American companies concerned and not by British companies.

American Companies Regard Export-Quota Idea As Another Form of Hold-Up Principle of the Internal Quota

Americans Opposed

American companies are strongly opposed to the institution of a policy of "forced exports," as espoused by the Film Group.

They regard the export-Quota idea as just another manifestation of the hold-up principle behind the present internal quota.

In its extreme form, such a quota, in the opinion of many distributors, amounts to a request that American companies shall buy inferior British films at the pistol point and shelve them in New York instead of in London.

Compromise Awaited

It is possible that a compromise will still be arrived at between these policies and that, especially if exhibitor aid is forthcoming at the critical moment, distributors will carry their point about negative costs and escape their present strangling footage obligations without incurring the worse obligation of purchasing for America British films of purely problematic appeal in that market.

At the moment, producers appear to be firm for a policy with a distinct resemblance to the Kontingent operating in various Continental countries, where native film is a marketable commodity. It seems possible, at any rate, that export cover certificates would become a feature of the British trade under the Film Group scheme as it is understoood. It is important to remember, however, that no formal statement of the official reciprocity suggestions of the Group is so far available in writing.

Want U. S. Release Guarantee

From such accounts of the KRS-Film Group conversations as have become unofficially available, it appears that the results obtained from British films which have been released in America were frequently cited, and were declared to have been unsatisfactory. In other words, producers are not satisfied with a formal American release. They want a release with a guarantee, and they appear to want the guarantee to include booking of the film by major American circuits—that or "a cash equivalent."

This, in principle, appears to be the situation after the first contact between KRS and Film Group. Sitting on the sidelines, the CEA remembers that the Board of Trade wants an agreed trade policy, and there is no danger whatever of forgetting that its own members want many things, but, it must be repeated, most of the things they want may be obtained by statutory arbitration.

Parks Joins MPPDA

Thomas Parks has been appointed to succeed Andrew Pentland, who resigned last week as assistant to Frederick L. Herron, head of foreign department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. Mr. Parks is new to the industry, but has had considerable experience as foreign representative for various American interests.

FRENCH FILM LEADERS ALARMED AT PLAN FOR GOVERNMENT CONTROL

120 Films Made Annually in France Scarcely Recover Cost, Yet Project Would Require 450 Made at Home

by PIERRE AUTRE
in Paris

Now that the motion picture industry in France has learned details of the plan of the Syndicat Des Travaillers du Film (Syndicate of Cinema Workers), which is one of the sections of the French General Trade Unions (Confederation Generale du Travail), for a sweeping reorganization and complete nationalization of the business, there is consternation in all branches here.

The plan, drawn by Robert Jarville, general secretary of the Syndicate, is reproduced in this issue. It appeared in the daily newspaper Le Peuple, official organ of the trade unions.

Many say that Mr. Jarville, in his proposal to "save" the industry "by taking it from the hands of its present masters", has been more interested in demagogy than in really serious work.

All in the industry agree that it at present is impossible for France to produce 450 features a year, because no matter whether the State or private concerns should make them it would be impossible to recover the cost.

If this result were achieved, however, it at once would stop nearly all imports of films, and that has always been in the mind of the trade unions.

The Franco-American trade treaty does not agree with what is planned by the Syndicate.

It is obvious that the trade unions would like to make the cinema a means of propaganda, as already has been done in Russia.

The Syndicate, in agreement with the "Left" organization, named "May 1936" and "Cine Liberte," is preparing a film which will be the "first experience of a vast program for renovation of production."

The film, temporarily called "La Marseillaise," which is to be made by Jean Renoir, well known for his extreme "Left" ideas, has as its theme the 1789 French Revolution.

The picture is to be financed in a new manner. The $150,000 capital will be obtained from the people, by means of 1,500,000 subscriptions at 2 francs each (10 cents). The Army and owners of castles and national and historical monuments will lend their help. The CGT already has deposited 50,000 francs to cover the first costs and the Syndicate also has deposited 20,000 francs.

The subscribers will be paid back their 10 cents when they go to the cinemas to see the film.

Doubt is expressed in film circles as to whether the picture really will be produced.

A few weeks ago a large meeting was held in Paris, organized by the Syndicate of the Cinema Workers, and the "Comite de Coordination du Film" (Film Coordination Committee), bringing together the extreme left cinema organizations, "Cine Liberté" and "Mai 1936."

There were twelve speakers, among them

Text of Workers' Syndicate Plan For National Control of Films

Following is the text of the plan proposed by the Syndicate of Film Workers for nationalization of the industry in France, as it appeared in "Le Peuple", newspaper of the Syndicate.

The insecure state of wage earners in the cinema industry and the urgent necessity of putting before the people the motion picture expression, the direct means of propaganda and of culture, has brought us to consider a complete reorganization of the bases of production. Thus, the plan which we put forward is inspired by concern for uniting the particular interests of the workmen, and of the technicians of the factories, studios and laboratories, with the general interest of the nation, which cannot leave the future of the cinema in the hands of adventurers who are ready to use the cinema to propagate theories contrary to the emancipation of the working world.

Consequently it is necessary to consider, fearlessly, the creation of a national cinema, placed under public control, and at the service of the people.

By "plan of economical construction" is not to be understood a certain number of onerous measures destined to invigorate, for a length of time which methods now used would render short, the actual system of production.

It is by breaking definitely with the original rules and by taking the film industries out of the hands of their actual masters that we shall save it.

There is no better solution than to place the cinema under the control of the public which is the first concerned in its development.

The nationalization will be placed under a tripartite administrative council, composed of delegates for the producers, for the patrons, and for the political powers.

I. REORGANIZATION

The essential problem consists in knowing whether the actual production equipment would be sufficient to assure the necessary activity in a film industry readjusted to the possibilities of a normal market, taking into consideration that the making of each film would allow work for two sets for two months.

Work in the laboratories depends less on the number of buildings than on the hiring of a large number of workers.

Means of Production

The film industry in France is characterized by the geographical concentration of the means of the production in the Paris area. A small proportion is to be found in the vicinity of Nice and at Marseille.

This inventory shows 43 sets, most of them large or medium.

Therefore French production could be at the rate of 20 films per month, or 240 films per year.

But annual production has been declining all the time, in spite of the development of the market value of French production.

Actually, the number of films made in France is only half of that which could be produced without having to build new studios. The home market roughly reaches 450 films a year.

Reorganization of the industry ought to rest on the following essential principles:

1. Nationalization of the means of production.
2. Creation of a nationalized production.
3. Control of free production.
4. Control of distribution of films.
5. Control of exhibition.
6. Creation of a State Institute of cinematographic technic.

II. NATIONALIZATION

Means of Production

Formal solution rests in total nationalization of laboratories and studios, after having taken them from their present owners and making the indemnities stretch over several years, with deduction of annuities from the profits of this administration.

One could not pretend to extract, at the start of an impoverished industry, the circulating capital necessary for national production. It is thus necessary to place these means of production in the hands of private concerns which would dispose of them to clients.

Special conditions of payment ought to be allowed to those who would present to the administration committee, scenarios likely to enrich artistic culture.

Cooperative production units of the workmen and technicians would be greatly helped if it were possible to reduce to a minimum the cost of renting studios and the price of labor.

Nationalization ought to allow for construction of a factory which would manufacture positive and negative film.

Nationalized Production

An annual State credit should be allowed for production under the responsibility of a tripartite administrative committee.

This would allow us to place on the market films costing half the price of pictures produced by private concerns.

It would have to break with certain customs, which bear more resemblance to "the laws of the jungle" than to a normal economy.

Nationalized production ought to serve the ideological and technical evolution of the cinema:

(1) By the making of pictures expressing the real thoughts and aspirations of the people.

(2) By the making of research pictures, which would include technical novelties, out of which would be born a new era of the screen.

Nationalized newsreels must be produced. The private companies now operating, by their subjective methods of presenting facts, have a considerable importance in the political life of the country.

Control of Private Production

In order to be able to remove motion pictures from the influence of hostile forces for social progress, it is necessary to exercise a serious control, even before the starting of work on the scenario. The administration committee would estimate the classification of the film in question, would ask for what modifications it would deem necessary, and would give permission to start "shooting."

Special facilities for the making of films would be effected, in certain cases, by an agreement for reduced taxes.

The tripartite administrative committee, after the film is completed, would have to verify whether it agrees with the scenario already authorized.

Control of Distribution

The actual system of distribution abroad as well as in France is greatly responsible for the downward trend of the cinema.

One must fight against the practice of guarantees or of scandalous discounts, which are the reasons of the higher cost price.

There should be created a system of control of sales abroad and of distribution in France as of the greatest importance, with a central office under the tripartite administrative council.

This system ought rapidly to supplant private concerns.

Control of Exploitation

The indignant protest of exhibitors each time the question of control over their receipts has arisen, for example, in reference to authors' rights, indicates sufficiently clearly that this control is indispensable for the "cleaning up" of the industry.

This control would be exercised also over the ways of exploitation of enterprises, conditions of program renting and of the launching of films.

Institute of Technics

There can be no real construction of a national cinema unless one immediately sets up effective technical operation, both new agencies and improvement of those existing.

This double task necessitates establishment of a State Institute of Motion Picture Technics, independent of any existing institution, an institute which will blend theoretical study with practical work.

Classes ought to be held in quarters common to laboratories and to the sets, so that the pupils may be in permanent contact with the reality of the subject.

A "students' fund" will be created to allow the pupils to pursue their researches. They will be given a trial in the making of nationalized productions.

This institute will also be under the control of the tripartite administrative council.

The Administrative Council

A council composed of delegates of the producers, patrons, and the political powers will take over administration of this nationalization.

On this tripartite council will sit:

(A) For the producers, that is, the workmen and the technicians, delegates appointed by the General Film Workers' Syndicate.

(B) For the patrons—delegates appointed by the big organization, "Ciné Liberté" and May, 1936.

(C) For the "collectivity," delegates chosen by the political powers, from lists presented by the main State concerns.

TAX ON THEATRES' RECEIPTS REDUCED

The pauper tax of 10 per cent of gross receipts paid by all theatres in France has been reduced in Paris to 8.75 per cent. The difference will be made up by a special tax on radio broadcasting advertising.

A similar reduction was obtained in Nice some time ago, but all other exhibitors continue to pay the 10 per cent tax.

The tripartite administrative council will have the general management of the industry.

It will judge the scenarios.

It will make out the plan of the nationalized production.

It will direct the Institute of Cinematographic Technics.

The delegates for the producers and for the patrons will be revocable by their electors.

The administrative council will work in union with the production council.

The production councils, more especially charged with the organization and the direction of the work, will be elected by the workers of each enterprise. The production councils also will be charged with aiding the council of industry in its own work, notably in the examination of completed films.

Transitory Period

The nationalization ought to have as its first stage the nationalization of the GFFA (Gaumont).

The bankruptcy of Pathe cinema justifies the same intervention of the unions for the preservation and utilization of the facilities of this company.

Each of these companies has developing and printing factories, studios, and involves production, distribution and exploitation.

The tripartite administrative council will function in this field also.—Robert Jarville, General Secretary of the Syndicate of the Film Workers Industry.

$75,000 Fee for Steuer

In a unanimous decision the appellate division of the New York supreme court upheld a ruling of the lower court that Max D. Steuer should have a fee of $75,000 for his services as counsel in behalf of the Knickerbocker Theatres Corporation which several years ago were in litigation over leases with the Greater New York Vaudeville Theatres Corporation.

Temple Contract Renewed

The Twentieth Century-Fox studio has exercised its option on the continued services of Shirley Temple who is beginning her fourth year with the company. She recently completed "Wee Willie Winkie," her 14th picture for Twentieth Century-Fox and next month she will begin "Heidi," her first for the new season.

Paul Benson has left New York for Hollywood, where he will open his own publicity office.

Henri Jeanson, a dialogue and script writer; Marceau Pivert, representing "Mai 1936," and a member of Premier Léon Blum's office, with special regard to cinema and radio; Jean-Paul Dreyfus, technician formerly at the Pathé Cinéma Studios; Germaine Dulac, wellknown woman director; Jean Renoir, director who will make "La Marseillaise"; Robert Jarville, author of the Nationalization plan; Pierre Renoir, actor and brother of Jean Renoir; Vaillant Couturier, a Communist deputy, who spoke in the name of the Communist Party, and Léo Lagrange, of the Ministry of Recreation.

It was announced that if "La Marseillaise" is a success, new propaganda pictures of the "Popular Front" will be produced with the proceeds of this first one.

Many in the industry see potential harm to exhibition in the plan, as strong protests would be expected from the part of the patronage which does not agree with the present Government.

The Coordinating Committee is working on the script of "La Marseillaise" under the supervision of Jean Renoir.

One will note that foreign pictures are not mentioned in the plan for nationalization, but in another issue of the CGT organ Le Peuple, Mr. Jarville has arrived at a conclusion which constitutes the greatest menace that foreign film ever have faced in France.

First, there is a protest against the fact that all negative raw film used by French producers is not made in France but comes from foreign factories: America (Eastman Kodak), Germany (Agfa), and Belgium (Gevaert).

The only factory making raw film is Kodak-Pathé, which makes only positive raw film and has been practically sold by Pathé to an American concern: Eastman Kodak.

While even 120 French pictures a year do not easily recover their cost, it is true that production costs are lower in France than in America and England.

One of the best French productions in a long time, "Pépé le Moko" (reviewed in Motion Picture Herald issue of March 20), did not cost more than $100,000. The same picture wold have cost five or seven times this price in England.

It seems that Mr. Jarville would like to apply to France the procedure followed in U.S.S.R., to allow practically no foreign films, or to reduce the number sharply as has happened in Germany.

French producers think the competition of foreign pictures is absolutely necessary. In the previous year, they have wanted only a comparatively slight limitation of pictures imported, so that exhibition of French pictures would not be impeded. But they always have agreed that with a maximum of 150 French films a year, there is much room for the best foreign pictures.

Further nationalization is essentially a matter of political maneuvering and one must not forget the wide power now held by the General Trade Unions, which represent now more than three million workers.

It is wellknown that the present government, the "Front Populaire," presided over by Mr. Blum, is more or less under constant pressure by the General Trade Unions, especially the extreme left—communist—of the Syndicates and Trade Unions. Mr. Jarville is known as a communist "militant."

A Star is Born

(UA-Selznick)

Romantic Melodrama

For weeks David O. Selznick's publicity department has been assuring everyone that no one would be disappointed in the entertainment and commercial values of "A Star is Born." The audience, divided about equally between professionals and lay customers, which saw the public preview in Grauman's Chinese theatre, was emphatic in placing its stamp of approval upon the production. Reactions of the patrons, to many of whom the theme is intimately familiar, indicated that they considered it of the class and character and appeal that should make it a front runner in any theatre.

Hollywood stories are not new to the screen. Many times the public has not been as favorably responsive as the sponsors of such pictures anticipated. In the case of "A Star is Born," however, there is ample reason to expect that theatre goers, whether they are patrons of big city picture palaces or get their entertainment from the screens of rural houses, will be as enthusiastic for "A Star is Born" as Mr. Selznick himself.

With Technicolor amplifying the production's glamour, and evidence that money, time and brains were liberally applied in making the film, the picture's predominant charm is its human interest story. Presenting a new Janet Gaynor, who should emerge from this picture a greater star than ever before, and Fredric March, and featuring a long list of accomplished players, among them Adolphe Menjou, May Robson, Andy Devine, Lionel Stander and Guinn Williams, the show is entertainment all the way.

In a country town "Esther Blodgett," played by Miss Gaynor, dreams that one day she will be a great picture star. Her family ridicules the idea, but "Grandmother Lettie" (May Robson) is sympathetic, and gives the girl the money to come to Hollywood. Here she meets "Danny McGuire," assistant director, played by Andy Devine, who gets her a job as waitress at a swank party where the glamorous star, "Norman Maine," played by Fredric March, falls in love with her. He persuades "Oliver Niles," producer (Menjou), to give her a screen test. A success immediately, a star is born. Simultaneously "Norman Maine," whom she has married, hits the skids. Happy for his wife's success, but saddened by his own passing into oblivion, "Maine" commits suicide. Disconsolate, she wants to retire from the screen. "Grandma Lettie" arrives to provoke the announcement that she will continue her career.

While audiences follow the story thread, they are taken for visits to many famous Hollywood spots, into studios and on location to see how pictures are made, and much of the important action takes place at the Santa Anita race track in Beverly Hills, at the Hotel Ambassador, in the Biltmore Bowl for the occasion of the Academy Awards, in a small theatre for a preview, in the Hollywood Legion Stadium, at Malibu Beach and in the forecourt and interior of the Chinese theatre.

But the glamour of Hollywood is secondary to the appeal of the motivating story. That and the names of Miss Gaynor, March, Menjou, Miss Robson, Devine and the other principals look to be the angles to concentrate upon in stimulating interest. Much can be promised for it.

As Good as Married

(Universal)

Comedy Romance

Smart showmen will do well to draw a ring around this picture on their program schedules, as it may be expected that the company will do considerable pointing with pride to "As Good as Married." It has reason to do so, for, like "Three Smart Girls," the show is audience entertainment every foot of the way. Likewise, it is a showman's show that gives managers plenty reason to become enthusiastic in their copy, and in expectation of favorable comment from customers a lively campaign is in order to get as many persons as possible to the first presentations.

The picture is gay comedy romance, to which farce sophistication has been deftly applied. Good dialogue and situations which make possible good performances on the part of stars and featured players plus high class production embellishment, combine to give a formula story a unique character. Experiencing income tax and woman troubles, philandering architect "Alexander Drew," played by John Boles, decides that becoming married is one way of beating both bugaboos. He makes a marriage of convenience, which both understand is simply a business proposition, with his secretary, "Sylvia Parker," played by Doris Nolan. But the women won't let him. It's all right with him, but he can't stand having the rival architect, "Fraser James," played by Walter Pidgeon, flirting around with "Sylvia." His jealousy becomes indignation when "Sylvia" makes him the victim of his own game. The treatment convinces him that he really loves his office wife.

Gay and airy, so geared that the laughs keep cropping up regularly, the film has appeal for classes and masses. Its farce smartness, handled by a director, Edward Buzzell, who specializes in giddy, semi-nonsensical entertainment, prevents the story from going high brow or seriously dramatic. It can be billed as a laugh show.

Woman Chases Man

(United Artists - Goldwyn)

Comedy

An entirely different sort of picture from Samuel Goldwyn, the audience which saw the preview agreed with the producer's advance opinion, quoted in the HERALD two weeks ago, that "Woman Chases Man" is "nonsensical comedy, for laughing purposes only." Comedy is the essence. Sometimes it's broad humor that verges on slapstick. As often it is suave comedy, lively.

In promising a different kind of picture, Mr. Goldwyn also promised a different Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea. Neither let him down. Miss Hopkins has followed in the pathway blazed by Carole Lombard in "My Man Godfrey" and later by Irene Dunn in "Theodora Goes Wild," to become a comedienne of high rank. Similarly, McCrea has shed his dramatic character to be revealed as a fun maker. Aided and abetted by Charles Winninger, Erik Rhodes, Ella Logan and Leona Maricle, the leads quickly swing into the spirit of the piece.

The story is gay. Occasionally it becomes so funful, in contrast with what is expected of Mr. Goldwyn, that it seems as though some one who had specialized in comedy all his life had made it. Thus it provides an element of surprise that has definite amusement and commercial value.

Once "B. J. Nolan," played by Charles Winninger, and "Virginia" (Miss Hopkins), both of whom have grandiose real estate ideas but no money with which to develop them, understand each other, they make things exciting for "Kenneth Nolan" (McCrea) and amusing for audiences. With "Virginia" as the spearhead, they combine brain power to wheedle "Nolan's" tight fisted son (McCrea) out of the necessary finances. The action has complications that add to the gayety. To effect the illusion that "Nolan, Senior" is rolling in wealth, "Virginia" mans the family mansion with two ex-movie theatre ushers as maid and butler and serves the arriving "Kenneth" and his chiseling guests played by Rhodes and Miss Maricle, with a dinner cooked in a backyard barbecue. Not dense by any means, "Kenneth" gradually becomes aware that some funny business is being practiced on him. But when Mr. Cupid stings him, and the ensuing action has the cast hung in a tree like Christmas tree ornaments, the chisening guests are foiled and the boy succumbs to "Virginia's" "reasoning" to assure successful development of Nolan Heights.

Selling the picture should not be difficult for anyone. Besides the pair of established names to work with, the novelty of the idea and the fact that the film is radically different from anything the producer has attempted in some time look to be the angles on which to concentrate. Assure audiences of an all-laugh show and word-of-mouth comment should do much.

Comedy

That old entertainment standby, the country yokel outslicking the city slickers, is given another and pleasing airing in this picture. Modernized in development of the theme, but with the basic comedy premise practically untouched, the film is based on George S. Kaufman's play, "Butter and Egg Man," which First National has had in storage since it was made as a picture nine or ten years ago. Played with spirit by Stuart Erwin, Jean Muir, Glenda Farrell, Allen Jenkins, Addison Richards and Chester Clute, the photoplay has the elements of appeal to urbanites and ruralites.

Hick from the sticks, "Andy Tucker," played by Stuart Erwin, is more anxious to get into the showbusiness than the fly-by-night producers, played by Allan Jenkins and Charles Foy, are to get out of it. These two worthies have a play featuring "Bobbie Benson," played by Collette Lyons, which they very well know is destined to be a flop. Past masters in the gentle art of hoodwinking suckers in a manner that makes them like it, they make "Tucker" a willing victim despite the interference of "Fanny Morgan" (Glenda Farrell) and the advice of "Mary Mathews" (Jean Muir). The trio take their opus to a wayside town for a tryout. It is so bad the producers gladly give "Tucker" an option to buy their interest. But after hornswoggling "Gussett" (Chester Clute) in the same manner that got him into the show business, "Tucker" takes the play back to New York. Again the performance is terrible, but the critics write it up as a travesty, with the result that the S.R.O. sign is always hung up. Making a barrel of money, "Tucker" sells the piece back to the original producers for three times as much as he paid. Then he retires to the country, taking "Mary" with him.

Once audiences get into the spirit of the thing they should derive much enjoyment from it.

Make Way for Tomorrow

(Paramount)

Melodrama

Up until now, Paramount hasn't done much talking about this picture. But after what happened Wednesday night, April 21, in the Fox Wilshire theatre, it is safe to predict that the company will undertake an advertising and publicity campaign that should cause those whose business it is to be interested in what the production organization is doing to wonder why the company chose to remain so silent.

There may be many possible reasons for the company's comparative mumness. On paper the idea of "Make Way for Tomorrow" may not have looked so attractive. The recent production record does not reveal over-enthusiasm of the public in such stories. Without big stars in the cast, it is a general belief that a picture seldom gets anywhere, and there are no great stars in "Make Way for Tomorrow." There is no love element, as that element is generally understood, nor are there exciting production effects. There is a fine musical accompaniment, but only in one sequence does it seem possible that anyone will remember that there is any music.

"Make Way for Tomorrow" is only honest, human interest melodrama with a powerful emotional appeal. It got under the skins of the adamant sophisticates—and there were a lot of them in the house—just as completely as it affected those whose emotions are more easily stirred. There was, alternately, hearty laughter and the nose blowing and coughing that are commonly resorted to as devices to conceal crying.

Time and fortune have not been kind to the old couple. They must seek shelter, unwanted, in the homes of their children. The mother is taken into the home of her eldest son; the father goes to live with an older daughter. The lot of each is far from happy. Like all mothers-in-law who try to do the right thing, but always succeed in doing the wrong, the old lady is in constant though subdued conflict with her daughter-in-law. The old man would rather be any place but in the home of his daughter, and she makes arrangements to unload him onto a sister who lives in California. Son and daughter-in-law plot to send the mother to a home for the aged.

In New York the old couple are brought together for what everybody knows will be the last time they will ever see each other on this earth.

Rich in human melodrama and pathos, the picture is also rich in homey, human humor. First entertainment, it is secondly a sermon more powerful than idealistic concepts of sociologists and welfare workers.

Victor Moore and Beulah Bondi are cast as the old couple. In support are Fay Bainter, Thomas Mitchell, Porter Hall, Barbara Read, Maurice Moscovitch, Elizabeth Risdon, Minna Gombell and Ray Mayer. All more than know their way around. In any analysis the production is a happy combination of story telling, directing and acting ability.

Only once before, when Carl Laemmle, Sr., previewed "Be Mine Tonight," has this writer seen a production executive given such a wholehearted reception as that which was given Adolph Zukor after the show. Maybe Mr. Zukor found a parallel in the picture.—G. M.

You Can't Buy Luck

(RKO Radio)

Romantic Melodrama

Not one but several entertainment ideas, calculated to give the picture wide appeal, are included in the production. RKO-Radio has considered it a Class B film, but if audiences who see it accept it in the same manner as did the crowd at the Hillstreet Theatre, Los Angeles, its popularity is quite likely to upset the early estimates.

Usually films that include many different entertainment elements are pretty much jumbled up. This one isn't, as all the jumbling is for a purpose. In the beginning it looks like a race track picture and there are several bits of action to bear out the illusion. Gambler "Baldwin," played by Onslow Stevens, believes that if he has the good will of everybody, he will have luck in his betting. Worldly wise "Jean" (Maxine Jennings) is his rabbit's foot. When it rains on a day that an orphanage is planning a May party "Baldwin's" horse loses, and because he thinks the kids were sore at him for bringing clouds when they wanted sunshine, he makes up for it by giving them a circus-vaudeville show. Then, as a legitimate romance develops with "Betty" (played by Helen Mack), the film takes on a dramatic aspect as "Baldwin" informs "Jean" that he is through with her. "Jean" is murdered. Circumstantial evidence convicts "Baldwin." Escaping the police, he and "Betty" combine efforts to uncover the real murderer, "Paul," played by Vinton Haworth.

Fast moving and understandable all the way, the picture blends its melodrama with comedy, and action with suspense. The work of the

Lefthanded Law

(Universal)

Western Melodrama

The things that Buck Jones is generally expected to do are done with zest, appropriately and repeatedly in this account of the taming of bad men and, of course, the winning of a good girl. There is hard, fast riding, plain and fancy gun play, a bit of bronco busting and a deal of man-to-man slugging. The customary billing based primarily on the Jones personality and performance would appear to be in order, possibly with a shade of emphasis on this as an especially coherent Jones medium.

The star is cast as an express company investigator sent into New Mexico to round up a gang held responsible for stage coach robberies, cattle rustlings, bank hold-ups and kindred deviltries. The rancher chiefly harassed by the gang has a daughter and the investigator takes time out occasionally to win her affection. The gang turns out to have four leaders and he meets and disposes of these in one-two-three-four fashion. This involves quite a bit of shooting and a measure of manual combat. When he has done the last of the bandits to death he arranges to marry the girl.

Mademoiselle Docteur

(Films Trocadéro - United Artists)

Woman Spy Story

After "Pepe le Moko," reviewed in the issue of March 20, "Mademoiselle Docteur" gives new evidence of the capability of French studios to turn out productions of quality.

"Mademoiselle Docteur" is a spy story based on the real life of a German spy, Anne—Marie Lesser—who died a few years ago in a sanatorium in Switzerland. The life of the same spy was the subject of "Stamboul Quest," made by MGM and starring Myrna Loy.

"Mademoiselle Docteur" was made in France by the wellknown German director, G. W. Pabst, who made "Modern Hero" in Hollywood, but is known, above all, for his "Beggars Opera," and the silent "The Street Without Joy," both of which were made in Germany.

The action of "Mademoiselle Docteur," the first film made by Pabst since his return from the States, takes place in the Great War, in Paris, in Switzerland, and chiefly in Salonika. "Mademoiselle Docteur" is sent to Salonika to reestablish communications between the Secret Service at Berlin and the German spies in Greece. Posing as an American journalist, she falls in love with a French officer. To try and catch her the French use a "double agent," a Greek, Coudoyan, who is spying for Germany as well as for France. She tries to steal some important documents, but is denounced by Coudoyan's girl friend. She goes mad and we see her finally in a sanatorium in Switzerland after the war.

The picture is full of quick action, thrills and suspense, and the atmosphere of Salonika during the war has been admirably captured. The scenery is well photographed, the lighting is good, the bombardment of Salonika by German planes most realistic. The musical accompaniment by Honnegger is also worthy of mention.

The German star, Dita Parlo, has the title role. Pierre Blanchar is "Coudoyan," and Pierre Fresnay the French officer, with whom "Mademoiselle Docteur" falls in love, Louis Jouvet, a German spy, and the new French player, Viviane Romance, plays a chorus girl.

"Mademoiselle Docteur" should have a real international appeal.

The Gold Racket

(Grand National)

G-Man Melodrama

Fashioning its plot from routine but nevertheless thrill action material, the expose of gold smuggling activities offers the spectator some 60 minutes of rapidly paced G-Man drama. Attuned primarily to that element of the audience whose screen preference runs to melodramatic themes, the story naturally has appeal chiefly to the youthful and the adult male patrons. A love story, supplied by what may be designated as a G-woman, has been added to perk up feminine interest.

The forces of law and order are represented by Conrad Nagel and Eleanor Hunt in the roles of Government agents. The leads make an energetic and capable team. Some song and comedy is provided by Fuzzy Knight. Frank Milan, Charles Delaney, Warner Richmond, Ed Le Saint and Karl Hackett have roles as a collective manace to the wellbeing of the principals.

"Alan O'Connors," working with "Bobbie Reynolds," has traced a gang of gold smugglers to their headquarters near the Mexican border. By using the musical ability of "Bobbie," "O'Connor" places his partner in the job of a cafe entertainer and thus is able to work on one gangster's evident weakness for the fair sex. After a series of situations of the fist and gun fight variety, the culprits are caught and the young couple temporarily suspend their sleuthing for a romantic fadeout.

The closely fashioned story advances through its paces so rapidly that plot weakness is overlooked.

Thank You Madame

(American Tobis)

Operetta

Operetta may not be precisely the word for this, but it's the one that seems most appropriate for quick definition and for billing purposes. The story is an original by Otto Longhi written around the singing of Jan Kiepura, the scene is Vienna, and music of both popular and classical character provides plot and purpose and principal appeal. The Kiepura voice carries the interest and it is of record that when Kiepura cuts loose, as the saying is, the persons who paid to get in to hear him are glad they did. This score gives him a theme song in the popular vein, which he delivers in a manner to suggest the possibility of its catching on in a big way, and he has a tremendous opportunity, of which he makes the most, in a long finale showing the opera, "Turandot," staged in the Vienna Opera house.

The story traces the rise of the principal character, played by Mr. Kiepura, from taxi driver to opera star. Through a road accident for which he is imprisoned, unjustly, he meets the wife of a celebrated singer, the woman really responsible for the incident. To compensate him for suspension of his license, she takes him into her home and finances the training of his voice. He becomes enamored of her and, ultimately, estranged from his flower girl sweetheart. When his benefactor has brought about his triumphant introduction as an opera star, he learns that she has done so in order to discipline her temperamental husband and returns to his sweetheart. (There are other story phases and characters affording comedy elements.)

The film is elaborately staged and English titles translate the dialogue without dimming the musical content. Continuity is abrupt and subtle by turns, in the Continental manner. Technical handling is competent and a sprightly tempo is maintained throughout.

The Gang Show

(Wilcox - G.F.D., London)

Boy Scout Musical Comedy

The origin of this Herbert Wilcox production is somewhat unusual. Five years ago troupes of Boy Scouts in London put on a revue, under the direction of Ralph Reader, at the Scala theatre. Their object was to raise

Night Must Fall

To exhibitors who graciously took our word for it and advertised "Night Must Fall" as the next Big M-G-M sensation we gratefully say, "Thanks and you'll be happy you did it!" The industry knows now how right we were! This picture is the talk of every Film Row because it's another instance of M-G-M's showmanship alertness! And here's what your patrons are getting: a big international stage triumph; a star (Bob Montgomery) who wins new box-office stature by a terrifyingly daring change of characterization; a startlingly unique and different thrill-entertainment; a great M-G-M production under the expert guidance of Hunt Stromberg, the consistent hit-producer of "Great Ziegfeld", "After the Thin Man", "Maytime" and countless more. We repeat again and again: Sell your patrons with all the showmanship skill at your command because: funds for Scout activities and the show was so successful that it has become an annual event.

"NIGHT MUST FALL" (and so must your house records!)

Translated to the screen, story continuity has been added to the song, dance and humor of the original and Reader becomes leading player as well as producer. The appeal remains largely that of a high-spirited amateur show. Presented in London at a charity performance attended by the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester, the film faded out from a mass Scout chorus on the screen to a stage full of the genuine article singing the same number. That gives a line on the exploitation angles.

A young song-writer, who is also a Scout troop-leader, tries unsuccessfully to sell either his numbers or his personality to London theatrical managers and agents. He falls in love with the secretary of one of the managers and, when his troop asks him to produce a stage show to raise the rent of their meeting place, he persuades the girl, left in charge of the theatre while the owner is in Paris, to substitute the Scouts' "Gang Show" for "Faust" for one night only. The manager, returning unexpectedly, is kept out of the wings until the show has become a definite success.

Reader sings and writes some good numbers. The Scouts put vigor and enthusiasm into their contributions, and there is talent in their ranks. Ensembles are of fair standard, with the note of boisterousness predominating.

It will be interesting to watch the reception the picture gets at the Scouts' Jamboree at Washington, whither the producer is due with a print.

The audience at the London premiere, which included a large percentage with Scout affiiations, received it enthusiastically—Bruce Allan.

Navy Blues

(Republic)

Comedy, Romance

Here is an unpretentious production into which have been incorporated all available elements, despite a weak story, to bring forth a very entertaining and pleasing combination of comedy, romance, and a touch of intrigue. There are sparkling dialogue, some comedy situations appealing as well as funny, and an engaging climax.

While the title implies that this is another sea-going adventure with the men of the Navy, that is only true in so far as it refers to the adventures of four sailors on shore leave. Turning in a performance that shows signs of making a name for himself Richard Purcell has the male lead. Mary Brian capably handles the feminine lead. Warren Hymer, Joseph Sawyer, Edward Woods, Chester Clute and Lucille Gleason contribute good characterizations.

"Rusty" (Richard Purcell), self-styled lady killer of the Navy, makes a bet with three of his buddies that he can date any girl they pick out. The girl they choose is Doris Kimball (Mary Brian), sedate and spectacled librarian. "Rusty" spends his first day shore leave at the library with Hammersmith's Algebra. He accompanies "Doris" home, but finds he has competition in "Julian" (Edward Woods). "Rusty" borrows the algebra book and promptly forgets about it.

When "Rusty," who has been passing himself off as a candidate for Annapolis, is exposed as being over age, he changes his story, inferring that he is connected with Naval Intelligence. "Julian" turns out to be a member of a criminal ring, whose code is in Hammersmith's Algebra, which "Rusty" unknowingly has placed in his locker aboard ship. Meanwhile "Doris" has spruced up and with her spectacles removed is quite a different person. "Rusty" is kidnapped by "Julian," manages to escape and foil their plan to assassinate a visiting prince. "Rusty" wins his bet.

The Wave

(Garrison)

Mexican Melodrama

Quite a lot of writing about this film has been done by the by-line critics in what may be termed the intelligentsia division and a lot of useful quote copy is thus available. It is hailed in these appraisals as an artistic achievement, a social document, a distinguished film and so on. Advertising copy might also describe it as the first of a series of films to be produced by the Mexican government. Probably it is as well not to wax too eloquent in describing it as entertainment; it is not precisely what is commonly understood by the general public when that word is used. The dialogue is in the native tongue, with English translation titles provided.

The picture sets forth the case of the fishermen of Alvarado, a village in the state of Vera Cruz, who are represented as underpaid and exploited by the politically allied company which buys their catch. One group of fishermen essays what might be called a strike and seeks by physical means to persuade another group to do likewise. In the fight that follows one of the strike leaders is killed and his death converts the dissenters to his way of thinking. The two groups then amalgamate and at that point the picture ends, leaving the plain customer used to Hollywood pictures wondering what may have happened after that. (In the opinion of the aforementioned intelligentsia, of course, that wouldn't be important.)

The film is plainly produced and excellently photographed, with a good deal of attention to artistic effects and emphasis on the slow, steady tempo of action and story. A program note says the project was initiated by Carlos Chevez, a Mexican composer and conductor, which no doubt accounts for some striking uses of musical background. Paul Strand, an American, is credited with the camera accomplishments.

Lest We Forget

(All Large Exchanges and National Screen Service)

Will Rogers Tribute and Charity Appeal

In an appeal for contributions on behalf of the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital, and at the request of Major Leslie E. Thompson and Will Hays, a simple and sincere eulogy is paid to the beloved memory of the late star in "Lest We Forget." Gary Cooper and Harry Carey speak of the grand character Will was; Allan Jones sings a song of the hills, and Robert Taylor makes the direct plea to the audience for generous support of this worthwhile charity. Included to warm the memories of his vast legion of fans is a collection of shots clipped from some of Rogers' notable pictures.

The pictorial message has been carefully prepared. Frank Whitbeck is responsible for an effective continuity and expert direction. A striking musical accompaniment is credited to Dave Snell. Through cooperation of Jules E. Brulatour and National Screen Service, 5,000 prints will be distributed gratis to show in the week starting Friday. The players donated their services and the studios additionally provided production personnel. The entire subject is worthy in every degree of the great name which it commemorates and will make its exhibition a solemn and touching event. Running time, one reel.

MPTOA Group Confers on Radio

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America film-radio committee was to hold its first meeting Thursday afternoon in the offices of Walter Vincent, committee chairman, in New York. Out of town members of the committee were not available for the meeting originally scheduled for Wednesday.

The committee was to study complaints of radio competition received from exhibitors and consider plans which have been submitted for regulating the appearances of motion picture stars on radio programs and the use of motion picture material in broadcasts. Neither the production nor broadcasting representatives were asked to attend the meeting, Mr. Vincent said.

Members of the committee, in addition to Mr. Vincent, are Lewen Pizor, Philadelphia, Samuel Pinanski, Boston, and Arthur Lockwood, Middletown, Conn.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Sing and Be Happy

(20th Century - Fox)

Comedy Romance with Music

Twentieth Century-Fox, which has had quite a bit of success with pictures having radio broadcasting as a thematic background, again is calling upon that medium as substance for a production.

The story is an original screen play by Lou Breslow, John Patrick and Ben Markson. Music and lyrics are by Sidney Clare and Harry Akst. James Tinling is directing. The yarn concerns a girl clever at writing ad slogans and a boy who is a combination band leader, airplane enthusiast, radio crooner, gag man and all around play boy. Their parents are business rivals. To be near the girl, the boy goes into the advertising business. Both agencies are up for a big air contract. The program the girl plans to broadcast had been stolen by a snake in the grass who turns it over to the boy's father. When they are about to go on the air, the discovery is made that the programs are the same. The boy's stunt of scuttling his program almost drives his father to nervous prostration, but it saves the girl and of course is just the thing that convinces her that she should marry him.

The boy is Anthony Martin and the girl is Leah Ray. They were featured in "The Holy Terror." Miss Ray also has been in "One in a Million" and "Wake Up and Live." Martin's other appearances include "Sing Baby Sing" and "Pigskin Parade." Other players in the cast are Joan Davis, Dixie Dunbar, Helen Westley, Allan Lane, Berton Churchill, Andrew Tombes, Chick Chandler and Edward Cooper.

Taxi War

(Columbia)

Action Melodrama

The title establishes the atmospheric character of the production. A taxi war, the events leading up to it, the fury of its outbreak and the incidents it precipitates are the backgrounds for a melodramatic romance. The hero is a fellow whose fist swinging gets him into trouble and into jail. Paroled, he discovers that the man who caused all his trouble not only has usurped his position with the taxi company and fired all his old friends, but has moved in on his girl as well. Organizing the independent cab owners, the hero is again in open and lusty conflict with his nemesis. Bloody warfare ensues. But a new girl has come into his life. She inspires him to concoct a plan that will stop the bitter warfare, reveal the heavy as a killer, win for the hero a pardon and reinstatement in the company.

The story is an original screen play by Harold Shumate, who specializes in action melodramas. It is being directed by C. C. Coleman, who in the past several months has handled many of Columbia's secondary productions.

Don Terry and Rosalind Keith, whom Columbia is grooming for bigger things and who were together recently in "White Heat," are the featured players. The heavy is Ward Bond. Other players who have important roles are George McKay, Lucille Lund, Wade Boteler and John Tyrrell.

The Thirteenth Chair

(MGM)

Mystery

Going over its list of properties filmed earlier, MGM came upon "The Thirteenth Chair." Deciding that it was a good story with a good title, the studio felt that all that was necessary was the selection of a good cast. How correct the company was in that decision remains to be seen. At any rate, for the modernized presentation of Bayard Veiller's story and play, the company assigned George B. Seitz to direct and named for important roles Dame May Whitty, in the just previewed "Night Must Fall," Lewis Stone, Madge Evans, Elissa Landi, Henry Daniell, (Robert Taylor's rival in "Camille"), Thomas Beck, Janet Beecher, Ralph Forbes, Charles Trowbridge, Matthew Boulton, Holmes Herbert, Heather Thatcher, Robert Coote, Elsa Buchanan and Neil Fitzgerald.

It's not a big budgeted picture nor was it allotted a lengthy shooting schedule, but it's one in which each player knows what he has to do and how to do it, and Mr. Seitz is seeing to it that all go to their work with vim and gusto.

Here is what the characters have had to do. Take a clueless murder and try to force a confession from the culprit by scaring all the suspects. The thirteen sit in a room to which there is no ingress or exit. All hold hands; a medium goes into a trance, and another murder is committed. Then the police are called in and what previously was a ghost-pointed mystery now becomes an exposition of practical and scientific crime solution. The customary complications, fears, menaces are all included. And of course there is a love story threaded into the mystery melodrama.

Ever Since Eve

(Warner)

Comedy Romance

Marion Davies and Robert Montgomery are starred. Patsy Kelly, Frank McHugh, Marcia Ralston, Louise Fazenda, Barton MacLane and Allen Jenkins are featured. The support includes Frederick Clark, William Davidson, John T. Murray, Pierre Watkin and Harry Hayden.

The story is comedy romance. Montgomery has the role of an author whose weakness is women, particularly blondes. Disguised as a brunette, the secretary, played by Miss Davies, gets a job with the author. Trouble is in the offing for both when the author's jealous girl friend, played by Marcia Ralston, discovers the secretary's ruse. The girl quits. But he has to have her back to finish the book. Thinking he is talking to her blonde chum, the undisguised brunette sends the author on a wild goose chase that brings much excitement. He is happy to discover that the secretary is a blonde when the book is finished.

The yarn is an original by Gene Baker and Margaret Lee. Four writers, Lawrence Riley, Earl Baldwin, Lillie Hayward and Jerry Wald, combined their talents in preparing the screen play. Lloyd Bacon is directing.

In the Mexican Quarter

(Tentative Title)

(RKO Radio)

Melodrama

The story used in this production originally appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine several years ago. The screen play is by Lionel Houser, whose recent credits include "She's Dangerous" and "I Promise to Pay." It is being directed by Lew Landers, maker of "You Can't Buy Luck" and "The Man Who Found Himself."

Although much of the action takes place on a cattle ranch across the Mexican border, the story is not essentially a western. It tells how a Texas cattle man befriends a young tenderfoot who saved his life. After extricating the lad from financial and romantic troubles, the pioneer cattle man and the boy combine forces to clean out a gang of racketeering rustlers.

Harry Carey, making his third picture appearance for RKO-Radio in the past six months, and John Beal, seen in "We Who are About to Die" and "The Man Who Found Himself," are teamed in the leading roles. The girl is Armida, lately better known on the radio and in night clubs. She was seen, however, several years ago in "Under a Texas Moon" and "Under the Pampas Moon." A newcomer, Marjorie Lord, wellknown New York stage actress, makes her screen debut, but the others of the cast are experienced and known film players. Included are J. Carroll Naish, George Irving, Dudley Clements, Walter Miller and Paul Fix.

Release date: May 28.

Right Guy

(Columbia)

Melodrama

A race track picture without a horse race should be, at least, novel. The theme of "Right Guy" concerns itself, however, with gambling, in particular, crooked gambling.

A member of a state racing commission is the hero. Dedicated to the purpose of ridding legitimate racing of the menace of gangster gambling, he learns that the smart crooks have brought in a ringer to "take the suckers for a ride." Romance compensating the melodrama, the gamblers kidnap the secretary with whom the commissioner is in love. Her safety is the price of his loyalty to duty. Things happen at a fast pace in the climax when the commissioner hits upon a plan of freeing the girl and also breaking up the gambling ring.

Paul Kelly is the commissioner and Jacqueline Wells, whom Columbia is building for bigger things, is the girl. The Number One gangster is Robert Emmett O'Connor. Other players are George McKay, C. Montague Show, Wade Boteler, Edward Earle and John Turell.

It is from an original by Richard Wormser. Harold Shumate, long with Columbia and adept in transcribing action pictures, did the screenplay. D. Ross Lederman, who has handled many stories which Shumate prepared, is the director. His recent credits include "I Promise To Pay," "Speed Mad" and "Lady Of New York."

SCREEN ACTORS AND CASEY OPEN DISCUSSIONS UNDER WAGNER ACT

IATSE Proceeds with Vertical Union Activity; Studio Utility Employees File Complaint with Labor Board

The spectacular growth of the labor problem in general and unionism in particular in recent weeks has focused the attention of producers on the question of whether discussions and negotiations begun this week in Hollywood will be the deciding factor in labor's long struggle for a strong position in motion pictures or whether they presage a situation similar to that which has rocked other industries of the country in the last year.

Two threats of strikes rumbled on the Hollywood horizon over the week-end, from the Painters' Union which voted to walk out May 28th unless their demands for a union shop are met and from the Studio Utility Employees' Union which also approved a strike but did not set a date.

Attorneys for producers indicated that the film business is interstate and not intrastate commerce and that consequently the companies must negotiate under the terms of the recently validated Wagner Labor Relations Act. This they proceeded to do.

Pat Casey, delegated by the producers to handle all negotiations, met with representatives of the Screen Actors' Guild and the Painters this week for the first of what was expected to be a long series of conferences with studio employee organizations, totaling close to 50, both well established and recently organized, and including studio workers of all classifications from culinary help, plumbers, machinists and stationary engineers up to the white collar workers, art directors, publicity men, and others.

The Guild, before its representatives met with Mr. Casey, found that the negotiations might be delayed if the producers insist that it prove that it represents a majority of artists in each studio.

Rivalry of Unions

In the background there remained the possibility that the industry may be made the battlefield for a struggle between the American Federation of Labor, now strongly entrenched because of the affiliation with it of the large motion picture unions, and the Committee for Industrial Organization, with which many of the newer organizations may decide to cast their lot.

In the theatre and exchange fields the AFL affiliate, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, was continuing its intensive organization drive among all types of employees not previously unionized. It has been reported that this drive would finally take the form of vertical unionism and that it was being conducted with the consent and cooperation of producer and major circuit heads. It was pointed out this week, however, that even though the companies might favor IATSE unionization rather than CIO control because of previous amicable relations with the IATSE, the law prohibits the fostering of particular unions by employers.

ACTORS' GUILD HEADS SET FOR REELECTION

All officers of the Screen Actors' Guild have been nominated for reelection May 9th. They are: Robert Montgomery, president; James Cagney, first vice-president; Joan Crawford, second vice-president; Chester Morris, third vice-president; Noel Madison, treasurer; Murray Kinnell, assistant treasurer; Kenneth Thomson, executive secretary, and Boris Karloff, assistant secretary.

Nominations to fill 11 vacancies on the board of directors are: J. Edward Blumberg, Lucille Gleason, Porter Hall, Russell Hicks, Mr. Karloff, Victor Kilian, Mr. Kinnell, Ralph Morgan, Jean Muir, Mr. Madison, Erin O'Brien-Moore, Irving Pichel, Edwin Stanley, Gloria Stuart, and Franchot Tone.

After gaining a temporary victory in obtaining producer recognition for negotiations, a split in studio union ranks is threatened as a stumbling block for labor. The Studio Utility Employees' Union, with a membership of approximately 500, last week filed a jurisdictional complaint against the IATSE with the National Labor Relations Board. The argument concerns the classification of laborers and grips, over which the IATSE was attempting to exercise jurisdiction, according to the complaint. The matter was submitted to the NLRB after conferences between Mr. Casey for the producers; Joseph Marshall, acting for the labor group, and Dr. Towne Nylander, Los Angeles regional director of the NLRB.

The problem of the SUE group is to convince both IATSE and the producers that the new organization is separate and distinct from any other and capable of handling its own affairs. Support of SUE was pledged by Mr. Marshall, international vice president of Hod Carriers, Building and Common Laborers Union who promised that he would provide man power for picket lines in the event of a strike.

As an off shoot of the recent producer-labor conference in New York at which the requests of the Screen Actors' Guild and the Painters' and Scenic Artists' group for inclusion in the basic agreement between the studios and five IATSE unions was deferred, a new union federation boasting approximately 16 unions with AFL affiliation was formed. The Actors' Guild is a member.

Members of the Painters' Union, with whom are associated scenic artists, makeup men and hairdressers, approved affiliation with the new Federated Crafts at the same meeting at which they voted to strike. The union, whose representatives also conferred with Mr. Casey this week in a first attempt to work out a mutually satisfactory agreement, was not so fortunate in winning allied support as the SUE. The Transport Workers Union decided not to recognize picket lines if the painters and their affiliates strike.

Several years ago, painters, paperhangers, scenic artists and makeup men solidified their strength by combining in one union. Later the salaries of makeup artists moved to a higher plane than that of their union brothers and this group drifted, although no definite break was recorded. At the New York conference the painters refused to become a part of the basic studio agreement unless the makeup artists were included. Mass meetings on the Coast followed and the federation, which includes many other crafts, resulted. The Studio Utility Employees this week were reported considering joining the new federation.

Action of Producers in Naming Casey to Meet with Crafts Seen as Move to Forestall Any Inroads by CIO

Seen as Strategy Against CIO

In spite of differences between the federation, representing the strongest groups not now included in the basic studio agreement, and the IATSE unions, it was the consensus of union and guild heads that all labor unions now concerned in the situation would cooperate fully in the event of any major quarrel with the producers.

The action of the producers as a unit in delegating Mr. Casey to handle all negotiations with the various crafts, thus opening the door to any organized group wanting to confer, was seen in Hollywood as a definite step to forestall any inroads by the CIO. Any deals Mr. Casey makes will be endorsed and accepted by the producers. Where the craft representatives cannot agree the matter will go to the producers as a committe of the whole of the Producers' Association or to subcommittees to be appointed later.

Following the conferences on Monday and Tuesday of this week which were viewed as having delayed any crisis Mr. Casey said, "As these demands are matters concerning crafts and producers,they will not be made public until after the meetings have progressed further toward completion."

IATSE Cooperation Denied

That vertical unionization of unorganized motion picture employees of all classifications by the IATSE was being fostered by the companies either through promises of cooperation or through less tangible encouragement was denied this week by Mr. Casey's New York office and by representatives of the major affiliated circuits.

C. C. Moskowitz, executive of the Loew circuit, said: "To my knowledge there was no discussion of vertical unionizing of studio workers, or any other workers, at the meeting here in New York recently. I am sure there was no mention of theatre unionization at that time. If those matters were ever discussed at any other time by Mr. Browne (president of the IATSE), or Mr. Casey, they were not brought to my attention. I know nothing of any promise of cooperation made by this organization, either."

Frank Phelps, of the theatre department of Warner Brothers, substantiated Mr. Moskowitz's version of the meeting as well as a similar denial made by Mr. Casey's secretary in New York. "I know of no mention of a promise by our company or any other company of cooperation with the IATSE on a vertical unionization plan," Mr. Phelps said. "Our relations with the IATSE have been cordial, and although there might be an attempt to unionize the exchanges I don't look for it. If such a move was made, however, I am sure that we would not oppose it."

Reports of organization moves this week indicated that the IATSE was proceeding with vertical unionization with or without active company cooperation in at least some of the centers which its drive has encompassed. In St. Louis John P. Nick, IATSE vice-president, announced that he was heading a move to organize all theatre and exchange employees into one union on vertical lines. Exchange Employees Local 16, organized about two years ago, would be assimilated in the group, he said.

Approximately 50 per cent of the exchange employees in New York have agreed to join a labor organization, it was claimed by officials of Local 306, IATSE operators' union, under whose supervision the drive to organize exchange and theatre employees is being conducted. Joseph Basson, president, and Frank Ruddock, vice-president, are in charge.

AFL membership applications circulated in Kansas City were signed by over 100 exchange workers, IATSE officials in that city said. An organization meeting and election of officers was set for this week. Cleveland shippers, inspectors and poster clerks who originally voted to join the packers' and wrappers' union asked for an auxiliary charter to Local 160, the IATSE operators' union. IATSE representatives called a meeting of Philadelphia exchange employees to discuss organization this week.

Schism in Laboratory Union

Following the signing of a new one-year contract between Consolidated Film Industries for its Fort Lee, N. J., laboratory and Local 699 of the film technicians' union, a direct affiliate of the IATSE, members of the technicians' union broke away from the alliance and formed a new group, the Film Technicians' Independent Union. During the strike which preceded the signing of the contract the Fort Lee workers at first moved for affiliation with the United Theatrical and Motion Picture Workers of America, an avowed CIO group, but later applied for membership in the IATSE local and the new contract was closed within 10 days thereafter.

The latest action was taken last Saturday at a regular IATSE meeting when certain demands of the technicians were refused by union officials. The new group claimed a total of 600 members, representing, they contended, a majority of the technicians working in the eastern plants. The insurgent group complained to Richard Walsh, vice-president, of undemocratic leadership and the vote on a new, independent organization followed.

Vito Marcantonio, former Congressman, who was named business counsel for the group, said the union had no quarrel with the film companies and was not planning a strike. He added that the union would move for recognition and collective bargaining rights. Officers besides Mr. Marcantonio include John H. Rugge, president; John Race, vice-president; Murray Stern, secretary, and William Vermont, treasurer.

The agreement with Consolidated provides for wage increases up to a maximum of 42 per cent for some employee classifications and for a reduction of seven and one-half hours a week in the working schedule, according to Mr. Walsh, who represented the union in the negotiations. The new wage schedules range from a minimum of $22 for a 40-hour week for apprentices to a maximum of $88 for eye-timing.

Claim Official Authorization

The United Theatrical and Motion Picture Workers, under which the Fort Lee workers were organized, this week claimed official authorization for the sponsorship of any and all CIO unionization of the motion picture industry. The claim was made by the group's national secretary, Bernard Deckoff, in New York.

According to Mr. Deckoff, any individual or organization applying for a charter under the CIO must do so through his office because his group was the first to seek recognition from the CIO. Purported proof of this was offered in a letter from John Brophy, CIO director, photostatic copies of which adorned the Deckoff office walls and which said, in part: "I wish to advise that your application for a charter from CIO has been received and in due time will be acted upon by the executive officers of the CIO."

UNION AGENT FINED FOR IMPERILING 1,700

Joseph Kelban, business agent and delegate of Local 306, Motion Picture Operators' Union, convicted of endangering the safety of persons in a public place, was fined $200 in special sessions court in Brooklyn, N. Y., last Saturday.

On December 12th Mr. Kelban demanded $500 from the management of the Folly theatre, Brooklyn, claiming that the money was due in wages to members of the union. When the request was refused, the agent, according to witnesses, pulled a switch and threw the theatre into darkness. More than 1,700 persons were in the house at the time.

Mr. Deckoff also said that various individuals who have applied to the CIO for admission and for charters have all been referred to his office. Applications from over 500 employees alone from New York City have been received during the past few weeks, he continued, and more come in daily.

Over 80 cities in the United States are reported to be covered by the organization and many more units located in other towns were expected to be taken into the fold soon by the United Theatrical and Motion Picture Workers when the official recognition from the CIO was expected.

Edward Hirschberger, national president of the motion picture workers' union, was in Washington this week conferring at CIO headquarters.

Mr. Deckoff said that his union had been in operation, but "very quietly," for some time. "We did not need any publicity nor did we want any," he said. "We know what we have and we felt that we were correct in going right ahead with our work without recognition from the press.

"However, we have nothing to hide and we would like the fact published that we are the official motion picture and theatrical unit of the CIO and that any other organization claiming CIO recognition is making false claims."

Paramount Authorized To Sell Properties

Paramount Pictures, Inc., was authorized last week by Alfred C. Coxe in federal court to sell or mortgage its property and assets free and clear of prior liens. Authorization was required because an order made in June, 1935, while Paramount was being reorganized, was regarded as a cloud on the title of real property which Paramount owned.

"Wake Up and Live" Breaks Roxy Record

"Wake Up and Live," according to Twentieth Century-Fox, hung up a new attendance record last Saturday when 33,145 persons paid admissions at the Roxy in New York to see the picture. The previous record was established by the same company's picture, "The Cock-Eyed World" on August 7, 1929, when 32,861 admissions were registered.

Old Australia Sound Action Is Dismissed

Justice Julius Miller in the New York supreme court has granted a motion made by Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and co-defendants to dismiss a suit instituted against them September 16, 1930, by D. Davis and Company of Australia. The defendants were served with a summons in 1930 but never were served with a complaint so they were unaware of what the suit demanded. Brunswick, Balke-Collender Company and the Brunswick Radio Company were the co-defendants.

Mulvey, vice-president of Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., in New York, was host Tuesday night at an informal dinner at the Lafayette Hotel and a preview screening later of "Woman Chases Man" at Loew's Sheridan Square theatre. Among those attending were George J. Schaefer, Sam Rinzler, Ed Swazey, Max Fellerman, Don Mesereau, Chester Bahn, Jack Harrower, Terry Ramsaye, A-Mike Vogel, Floyd Stone, Joseph Gallagher, Ben Shlyen, Abe Bernstein, Barry Baremore, Peter Harrison, Charles Lewis, W. G. Van Schmus, A. W. Smith, Jr., Charles Leonard, Harry Gold, Harry Buckley, Linton Wells, Monroe Greenthal, Sam Cohen, Myer Beck, Burt Champion, James Ivers, Lynn Farnol, James A. Cron, J. W. Jerauld, Leo Justin, Jack Schlaifer, Guy Eysell and John Wright.

Win "Zombies" Appeal

The court of appeals at Albany, N. Y., on Tuesday granted the motion of Producers' Laboratories, Inc., and AmerAnglo Corporation for leave to appeal to that court in connection with the judgment which American Securities Corporation obtained against Academy Pictures, Producers' Laboratories and AmerAnglo. The contention was that the defendant's film, "Revolt of the Zombies," conflicted with the plaintiff's "White Zombie." The appellate division had sustained the judgment.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Studios Speed On

Production continued at high pitch during the week. Twelve pictures started. Eleven were completed. The total number of pictures in work, as well as the number started and finished, is in excess of the quota for the same week last year. Two reasons account for the seemingly abnormal pace. Studios are doubling up in order to make up for time lost during the late winter months when sickness and inclement weather caused delays in the schedules. Also, as sales convention season nears, production is hurried to clean up the remaining items on the 1936-1937 schedules.

Much as some people might like to have the impression created, the veiled threat of labor unrest has nothing to do with the activity. Strikes, either by professional, technical or labor crews, are not seriously contemplated in Hollywood.

Columbia Starts Three

Columbia's three starters are of pretty much routine caliber. In "Taxi War," which C. C. Coleman is directing, Rosalind Keith, George McKay, Don Terry, Lucille Lund and Ward Bond will be seen. "Texas Cyclone" will feature Charles Starrett and Barbara Weeks with Hal Taliaferro, Al Bridge, Dick Curtis and Jack Lipson. Leon Barsha is directing. With John Brahm directing, Douglas Montgomery, Otto Kruger and Jacqueline Wells are the leads in "Professional Juror."

Under its own sponsorship, Paramount started "Exclusive." Fred MacMurray, Frances Farmer, Charles Ruggles, Lloyd Nolan, Fay Holden, Ralph Morgan and Irving Bacon are the important players. Alexander Hall is the director. The second picture, a Harry Sherman production, "Rustler's Valley," which Nate Watt is directing, features William Boyd, George Hayes and Muriel Evans with Russell Hayden, Stephen Morris, Lee Cobb, Oscar Apfel, Claudia Coleman and John Beach.

Two new pictures are under way at Republic. "Rhythm in the Clouds" will present Patricia Ellis, Warren Hull, David Carlyle, Joyce Compton, Zeffie Tilbury, Richard Carle, William Newell and Esther Howard. John Auer is directing. In "Doomed at Sundown" Johnny Mack Brown, Iris Meredith, Warner Richmond, Mary McLaren, Dick Curtis, Earle Hodgins, Charles King, Frank LaRue, Al St. John and Steve Clark will be seen. Sam Newfield is directing.

Warners Launch Two

Warners also started two. Leslie Howard and Olivia De Havilland are featured in "A Gentleman After Midnight" with Eric Blore, Spring Byington, Bonita Granville, George Kane, Patrick Knowles and Mary Treen in support. Archie Mayo is directing. The second production is "Varsity Show." It will present Dick Powell, Lee Dixon, Fred Waring and his band, Rosemary Lane, Priscilla Lane, Scotty Bates, Johnny Davis, Polly McClintock, George MacFarlane and Ferne Buckner. William Keighley is the director.

After several delays MGM finally got "Saratoga" going. Clark Gable, Jean Harlow and Lionel Barrymore are the principals. Jack Conway is directing.

OFFER 5,000 PRINTS OF ROGERS MEMORIAL FILM

The greatest day-and-date opening in the history of the screen was anticipated for "Lest We Forget," the Will Rogers subject to be used in soliciting funds for the Memorial Hospital at Saranac Lake, N. Y., when facilities of the National Screen Service and eight major distributing companies were tendered to handle the 5,000 prints of the film offered theatres for release on Friday. The picture is reviewed on page 37, column 3.

Eleven Films Completed

Four companies, each of which completed two pictures, and three which turned in a singleton respectively, are credited with the 11 finished features. Universal's two are "The Road Back" and "Black Aces," a Buck Jones production. The sequel to "All Quiet on the Western Front" will present John King, Richard Cromwell, Maurice Murphy, Slim Summerville, Andy Devine, Larry Blake, John Emery, Henry Hunter, Noah Beery, Jr., Barbara Read, Jean Rouverol, Louise Fazenda and Etienne Girardot. James Whale directed. Jones is starred in his own show with Kay Linaker, Fred MacKaye, W. E. Lawrence, Robert Frazer, Raymond Brown, Robert Kortman, Eddie Cobb, Frank Campeau, Charles LeMoyne, Charles King and Arthur Van Slyke. Les Selander directed.

Radio finished "Sky High," formerly "All Is Confusion," a David Loew production. Joe E. Brown is starred with Florence Rice, Guy Kibbee, Vinton Haworth, Marlan Briggs, Anthony Nace and Benny Burt. Edward Sedgwick directed. In "Mexican Quarter," tentative title, which Lew Landers directed, Harry Carey, John Beal, Armida, Marjorie Lord, J. Carroll Naish, George Irving, Leona Roberts, Walter Miller, Dudley Clements and Paul Fix will be seen.

Paramount Finishes Two

First of the finished Paramount pictures is "Hotel Haywire." Leo Carillo, Mary Carlisle, Lynne Overman, Collett Lyons, Benny Baker, John Patterson, George Barbier and Spring Byington are included in the cast. George Archainbaud directed. Second, a Harry Sherman production, "North of the Rio Grande," will present William Boyd, George Hayes, Russell Hayden, Stephen Morris, John Rutherford, Bernadene Hayes, John Beach, Walter Long and Lee Cobb. Nate Watt directed.

Both of the completed Warner pictures promise to be in the big feature classification. Important personalities in "The Singing Marine" are Dick Powell, Doris Weston, Hugh Herbert, Allen Jenkins, Lee Dixon, Jane Darwell, Marcia Ralston, Guinn Williams, Veda Ann Borg, Jane Wyman, Eddie Acuff, Larry Adler, Berton Churchill, Robert Barratt and Pierre Watkin. Ray Enright directed. "The Deep South," which Mervyn LeRoy produced and directed, will present Gloria Dickson, Claude Rains, Otto Kruger, Edward Norris, Allyn Joslyn, Linda Perry, Lana Turner, Cy Kendall, Donald Briggs, Elizabeth Risdon, Leonard Mudie, Claudia Coleman, Eddie Acuff, Trevor Bardette, Clinton Rosemond, John Ridgely, Clark Roth, E. Allyn Warren, Elisha Cook and Sybil Harris.

Condor completed "Marked Money" for Grand national. The cast includes Vince Barnett, Frank Milan, Wilma Francis, Wheeler Oakman, Charles Delaney, Philip Dunham, Syd D'Albrook, Pat Gilam and Nat Carr. Louis Gasnier directed.

MGM's contribution to the completed roster is "The Thirteenth Chair," which George B. Seitz directed. It will present May Whitty, Madge Evans, Lewis Stone, Elissa Landi, Thomas Beck, Henry Daniell, Janet Beecher, Ralph Forbes, Holmes Herbert, Heather Thatcher, Charles Trowbridge, Robert Coote, Elsa Buchanan, Lal Chand Mehra, Neil Fitzgerald and Louis Vincenot.

Last picture on the list is "Love Under Fire," 20th Century-Fox. Don Ameche and Loretta Young are featured with Sig Rumann, Katherine DeMille, Frances Drake, Walter Catlett, Borrah Minevitch, E. E. Clive, Harold Huber, Don Alvarado, Clyde Cook, Dan Collette and Joseph Shildkraut. George Marshall directed.

Plan Profit Sharing

For years various persons in Hollywood have toyed with the "profit sharing" production plan. About 1930, when David O. Selznick and Lewis Milestone were contemplating unit production, "profit sharing" was discussed as a part of the setup. Later, when Mr. Selznick had become associated with RKO-Radio and dropped the idea, Mike Levee, who had severed his connection with Paramount, spent some time endeavoring to organize talent and finances along a mutual plan. He, in turn, dropped the idea to become an artists' manager.

Now Dudley Murphy, the veteran director, has formed Associated Artists of America as a subsidiary of Associated Artists of London, England. The idea of A. A. is that producers, players, writers and directors participate in the financing of the pictures with which they are associated and, in addition to receiving a salary, will participate in the profits derived from the productions.

Production of prestige and class pictures is the intention of Associated Artists. Already financed, Mr. Murphy has interested Leslie Howard in the scheme and he will be seen in two forthcoming productions. His first will be "Bonnie Prince Charlie," a Hugh Walpole story, scheduled for production next September. Mr. Howard is also slated to do one production annually taken from the New York Theatre Guild's properties. In the first of these Theresa Helburn will be associate producer.

Set for production in July, "This King Business," starring Nancy Carroll, will be A. A.'s initial film. The story is by Dashiell Hammett, author of "The Thin Man."

EIGHT MORE STATES ACT ON CHANCE GAMES

Barred by Illinois Court; "Bank Night" in 5,700 Theatres, Says Chicago Sales Manager

A fresh series of legal or legislative attacks on chance games were noted this week in Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska, Texas and Wisconsin. Despite these developments and the complete elimination of the practice by large New York circuits, Claude Ezell, general sales manager for Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., of Denver, owners of the Bank Night plan, claimed in New York this week that the game is being used by 5,700 theatres. Where circuits or independent houses have dropped the system, others have picked it up, he said.

In Illinois, the games were outlawed entirely by the supreme court.

In Missouri, exhibitors are making a concerted effort to eliminate them from theatres.

When the case of Helen Slagle, who had sued the Construction Progress Exposition at Denver for possession of an automobile, claiming she held the lucky ticket, was taken to the Colorado supreme court this week, the court ruled that holders of "lucky numbers" on admission tickets have no legal right to the gift prizes offered. The only legal question involved, the court said, was whether there was a complete gift, and it found that "there was no gift, for a gift presupposes an effectual delivery."

The appeal of the case of the State of Connecticut against David Magliora, operator of the Rialto theatre at Windsor Locks, has been placed on the current docket of the supreme court in Hartford. The Windsor Locks town court fined Mr. Magniora and enjoined him from running Bank Night in his theatre because of the proxy card system used, which, though not part of Bank Night, was considered a lottery by the state.

Outlaw Bill in Florida

A bill which would outlaw Bank Night, Bingo, Screeno and all other games, including cards, in Florida, has been introduced in the House of Representatives there by Carl Gray of Bay County. Violation would mean a fine of $100 to $500, or imprisonment from 90 days to six months.

The state supreme court at Springfield, Ill., ruled that Bank Nights were lotteries and refused to restrain local authorities from interfering with them. The ruling was handed down in an appeal by the Iris Amusement Company, Balaban and Katz and others from an adverse ruling by Judge Niemeyer in the supreme court some time ago. The defendants, however, announced they would appeal the decision to the United States circuit court of appeals. State's Attorney William D. Roberts said, nevertheless, that he would push pending Bank Night cases against the Orpheum theatre at Springfield.

In New Orleans, however, another form of chance game made its appearance when the Coliseum theatre introduced the "Upsandowns Derby," invented by an anonymous exhibitor and his projectionist. The owners of the Coliseum have a financial interest in the game.

Although the majority of independent exhibitors in Kansas City want to eliminate giveaways, the refusal by two theatre operators to go along with the others have blocked the movement. Two committees, composed of E. E. Webber, C. H. Potter, Robert Rhoades and E. S. Young, named by the Independent Theatre Owners to determine the sentiment of independents toward elimination have reported that with the exception of Rube Finkelstein of the Belmont and Jay Means of the Oak Park and Bagdad all exhibitors want giveaways eliminated. Exhibitors favoring the move even went so far as to agree to give Mr. Finkelstein the 20 weeks he said he wanted to run off his contracts, but the Belmont operator refused flatly.

Charles Warden, nearby Jasper County's attorney, ruled that the games are in violation of the state's lottery laws and that he will issue warrants for theatre owners using them. As a result, Fox Midwest has discontinued Bank Night in Joplin and Carthage after appealing to Circuit Judge Wilbur J. Owen in vain for a restraining order to prevent the attorney from acting.

Nebraska Decision Waited

Meanwhile, District Judge Messmore at Beatrice, Neb., took under advisement last Saturday the Nebraska Bank Night test case and promised an early decision. It was indicated by both parties that the case would be taken to the state supreme court immediately, regardless of the decision. The single point at issue is the determination of whether a consideration is given for eligibility to win. The attorney general has contended that the patron's time, the effort at registration for Bank Night and his presence at the theatre constitute a consideration.

Bank Night, Jumbo and other similar cash awards will be discontinued at Nogadoches, Texas, the county attorney announced this week as he ruled that the drawings are in violation of the state's antilottery laws.

A discovery hearing before Court Commissioner George E. Ballhorn of Milwaukee, Wis., is being sought to solve the question as to how much time should be allowed for a Bank Night winner to claim his reward. The plaintiff in the action is Victor E. Neuhaus, who claims he was the winner of $450 in a drawing at the Wisconsin Amusement Enterprise's Tower theatre and was unable to make his way to the stage within the allotted three minutes and was therefore denied the money. It was indicated that if and when the trial takes place the court will be asked to rule on whether three minutes is a reasonable interval to allow claims to be presented on the stage.

David L. Loew Productions has signed an RCA sound licensing agreement for a number of features using the company's new system. Release will be through RKO Radio.

Koenig Resignation Reported at 20th-Fox

Reports in Paris this week indicated that Ernest Koenig, manager in France for Twentieth Century-Fox for the past two years, had tendered his resignation to the company to take effect with the start of the European sales convention of the organization there Wednesday. All of the company's branch managers and leading salesmen from England, the Continent and the Near East were to attend the meeting as well as Sidney R. Kent, president; Walter Hutchinson, in charge of foreign distribution; Frank Harley, manager in England; Stanley S. Crick, manager in Australia; Jason S. Joy, Truman Talley, head of the newsreel, and Les Whelan, assistant to Mr. Hutchinson.

The Twentieth Century-Fox foreign department in New York on Wednesday, in the absence of Mr. Kent and Mr. Hutchinson, said that it had not been notified of Mr. Koenig's resignation.

Allied Union To Seek Gotham Suit Dismissal

Harry Glover, as president of the Allied Motion Picture Operators' Union in New York, and others named as defendants in an action filed by the Gotham Amusement Corporation, along with the operators of six other independent houses, will ask Justice Ferdinand Pecora in the New York supreme court this week to dismiss the action.

In the present complaint, the plaintiffs ask for a judgment declaring that a contract executed between Allied and the Independent Theatre Owners Association on August 21, 1933, be permitted to run to its date of termination. They also ask that a contract in which Gotham agreed with Allied that the Allied-ITOA contract should bind them be held enforceable.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

ROB WAGNER, Ye Olde Editor of The Script, breezy magazine for California movie folk, has risen in rank from a "three-finger" film critic to a "one-finger" reviewer in one generation.

In Hollywood theatre lobbies on preview nights, one will note a little group of studio publicity gents who hand tickets and credit sheets to the various listed critics. As the critic passes through the wicket, one of these press agents is likely to hold up one, two or three fingers, which is a signal to the pretty usher gal under the spotlight inside. One finger means that the critic is the berries and must be given a good center aisle seat; two fingers mean that he is okay but not very darned important, so he is taken to the side; three fingers means that he is a critical leper from some small paper and that a seat up top side or near the fire exit will do.

For a long time Rob Wagner was a three-finger critic. And if he wasn't discommoding the pigeons in the topmost gallery, he was down front on the sides where Patsy Kelly looked like Slim Summerville and Slim looked like a stick of spaghetti. Then, suddenly, Wagner became a two-finger critic, entitling him to at least see the preview from the bourgeoise sections. Now Rob rates one-finger. So, with head high and chest out, he automatically walks down the center isle to the seats of the mighty, where he can not only breathe the same air as Louella Parsons and Louie B. Mayer, but actually sit right beside Shirley Temple or Gypsy Rose Lee.

Unruly prisoners at the reformatory in Granite, Oklahoma, were refused meals for a while as punishment. That idea did not work, and so Fred Hunt, Warden, denied them reading material, again without corrective success. Next he prevented their attendance at the weekly movie shows. But even that "last resort" failed to make the "bad actors" behave, perplexing the Warden no end, until he hit upon the idea of dressing them in pink bloomers and "Mother Hubbard" aprons, forcing rouge on their cheeks and otherwise causing them to be prettied up.

Warden Hunt no longer has a problem with unruly inmates, for the howls of glee by fellow inmates have stung the unruly pink-bloomer-boys deeper than the loss of all food, movies and reading matter together, forever.

The newsreels could give us a rest from the bellowings of some of those bloated politicians, for a shot of that old, old gentleman in Kentucky who, surrounded by reporters on his birthday, was asked to what he attributed his longevity. He replied he was not sure yet—but was dickering with several patent-medicine factories.

WHEN Lucile Gleason was in India a couple of years ago, she picked up a Myna bird and named it "Jimmy," after her husband, Jimmy Gleason, Hollywood actor and writer. But Lucile didn't like the bird and so gave him to the Frank Cravens—he's another Hollywood actor and writer, and the Gleasons' neighbors out on Beverly Hills.

"Jimmy" the Myna bird talks like a parrot. Since he's been with the Cravens, seeing a lot of Hollywood movie folk, he has grown a bit fresh, and upon several occassions has embarrassed the Cravens terribly. A friend went to their house to tell about the death of her husband, and just as she was relating the scene wherein, in his last hours, she had pleaded with her loved one not to leave her, this black crow from India—out of sight of the widow—burst into a raucous "Haw-haw-haw-haw!"

On another night, Frank Condon dropped into the Cravens for dinner, and when he saw a black bird with red spots behind its ears dip his soft beak into his champagne glass and take a long, long drink, he pushed the glass away and said he didn't care for any more. "When you begin to see ravens on the rim of the wine glass," he shuddered, "it is time to stop.

"Jimmy" the Myna bird escaped from the Cravens' house the other day, and when found by police, after a storm, several days later, in Hollywood, looking much the worse for wear and tear, he croaked to the coppers, "Now what the hell did I do?"

Cropping out among the month's oddities in the use of motion pictures is the engagement of a pastor solely on the merits of a film he made for the purpose.

Facing the necessity of choosing a new pastor, the First Baptist Church of Fremont, Nebraska, inclined towards the Reverend Winfield Edson of Oakland, California, who seemed to possess all the qualifications. But the Fremont parishioners did not want to engage him without seeing him—and railroad fares are high.

So they instructed the Reverend Edson to have a motion picture made of himself and family and send it to Freemont. This was done, and the minister was hired forthwith.

PASSERSBY got the itch, and nearby theatre owners got the competitive hebie-jeebies the other day in New Orleans when a flea circus parked at Tulane Avenue and Carrollton Street, in a traveling tent show. All traveling tent shows give exhibitors the heebie-jeebies.

"My fleas feed me, so I feed them," declared the flea trainer de luxe who conducts the flea troupe. So that no flea should go hungry, each one is allowed to park on the trainer's left forearm three times a day, to nibble breakfast, dinner and supper from a bulging muscle that would delight even a cannibal.

Each little flea has its own bedroom, a dog-fur-lined jewelry case, the lining made of choice fox-terrier. These boudoirs are shaken daily.

The smash act of the circus flea is the football game. Flea No. 1, when given a "football" the size of a pinhead, proceeds to kick it a distance of 12 to 15 inches; flea No. 2, given the same ball, lies on his back and juggles it with his feet in midair. Sally, Irene and Mary, three lady fleas, do the hoochie-koochie in paper skirts on top of a miniature drum. Hercules, finer and fatter than the others, pushes the "world's smallest merry-go-round" in a dizzy spin. Other fleas ride tricycles or tread treadmills, and one pushes a little wheelbarrow—faster than a WPA worker.

The fleas' prowess has been duly recorded by our own sports editor, J. W. Leigh, New Orleans, who fleetingly remarked, in the mail: "I am passing the 'itch' on to you."

On an invitation from the tobacco-chewing ironworkers and city officials, Miss West, last Thursday, was the first woman to walk across the San Francisco Bridge; the next day she received an invitation from Eugene W. Biscailuz, sheriff of Los Angeles County, to ride with a bunch of cowboys in the Golden Gate Fiesta, on May 27, and only last Friday she starred as a witness in Los Angeles for Clark Gable in an extortion case.

AMPA ELECTS, HOLDS AD AWARDS AND BANQUET

Ralph Rolan Named President; Winners of Advertising Exhibition To Be Honored Saturday

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., this week concluded the activities of its old administration with the second annual exhibition of motion picture advertising and publicity, elected new officers on Thursday, and will start the new regime at a banquet Saturday evening at the Hotel New Yorker, in 34th Street.

A regular organization nominating committee, composed of Paul Lazarus, Jr., Warner Brothers; Paul Benjamin, National Screen Service; James P. Cunningham, MOTION PICTURE HERALD; Vincent Trotta, Paramount; Edward Finney, Grand National, and Kenneth O'Brien of United Artists, selected the only slate of new officers presented, as follows:

For president, Ralph Rolan, March of Time; vice-president, Paul Lazarus, Jr.; secretary, Lester Thompson, MPPDA; and treasurer, Paul Benjamin, National Screen Service. With no opposition, the new officers were named to their posts unanimously at Thursday's regular luncheon-meeting, at the Edison hotel.

Retiring are Gordon White, as president; Ralph Lund, secretary and vice president, and Herbert S. Berg, treasurer.

Advertising Exhibit Held

Home office advertising and publicity departments, advertising agencies and accessory companies in the east cooperated with the AMPA in staging its second annual exhibition of advertising and publicity, held during the week on the second floor of Loew's State Building, in Times Square.

All American motion picture producing or distributing companies were eligible to submit material, also any person doing such work for an American company. Materials submitted as exhibits for awards must have been so used within the calendar year of 1936.

Herbert Berg, of Paramount, acted as director of the material placed at the exhibition, and awards will be presented on Saturday evening at the AMPA annual dinner dance, to be held in the Hotel New Yorker's grand ballroom.

The press book award goes to the company. All other awards go to the individuals creating the copy.

Committee and Judges

The committee in charge of the arrangements for the exhibition included: Vincent Trotta, general chairman; Paul Gulick, chairman of the judges committee; Hap Hadley, chairman of the exhibition committee; Ralph Lund, chairman of the advertising committee; Al Sherman, chairman of the publicity committee, and the following members: Charles Einfeld, S. Barret McCormick, John C. Flinn, Morton Blumenstock, Gordon White, Hy Daab, Marvin Kirsch, Ray Gallagher, Al Selig, Charles Alicoate, Paul Lazarus, Jr., A-Mike Vogel, Tess Michaels, Milton Weiss and Lillian Stevens, serving as secretary.

The awards judges were as follows:

Karl Egge, advertising director, Bloomingdale Brothers Inc.
G. C. Bacheller, vice-president, Frank Presbrey Company.
Howard Black, advertising director, Life Magazine.
Lester Thompson, MPPDA.
Fulton Oursler, editor, Liberty.

Collegians Participate

Participating at the exhibit, running from Monday through Friday, were—besides motion picture executives and advertising workers—members of the faculty and students of colleges and schools in the New York area which have art or advertising courses, also several hundred members of the art profession and schools in which motion picture study courses are given.

Mr. Lund, as AMPA secretary, reported on Tuesday that reservations for the Hotel New Yorker banquet already had exceeded 600. Plans called for the presence of film personalities and entertainers.

The announcement and presentation of the advertising awards will be made following induction of the new officers. Gordon White, as retiring president, will introduce the two principal speakers, Charles Presbrey, of Frank Presbrey Advertising Agency, and David Sarnoff, president of Radio Corporation of America.

The entertainment will be in charge of Henny Youngman, Broadway master of ceremonies, assisted by Sid Gary, radio baritone; Arthur Boran, comedian; Zeke Manners and his hill billies, and Hal LeRoy, dancer.

Theatres Warned On Censor Seals

Following discovery of several cases in which the seal of the New York State board of censors had been cut to less than half its original length, officials of the board this week pointed out that tampering with the seal is a misdemeanor under state laws. None of the cases brought to light so far has been prosecuted, the board having been satisfied that the shortened seals were the result of carelessness on the part of either exchange employees or projectionists.

It is possible, officials of the board said, for seals to be cut in half and thus used on pictures not approved by the censors but such cases are rare and usually discovered. Most of the cases investigated, it was said, are found to be old pictures in which the leader has been broken and spliced many times or to result from carelessness on the part of exchange employees in splicing the seal into the reel.

The regulation seal is 36 inches long and runs about three seconds.

Thomas McGrath Dead

Thomas McGrath, 79, veteran actor, died last Thursday at Lenox Hill Hospital in New York from a complication of diseases. His long stage career included roles in such productions on Broadway as "Abie's Irish Rose," "Sherlock Holmes" and others with William Gillette.

Blanche Sharp

Mrs. Blanche Sharp Handyside, known for many years to theatre and vaudeville audiences as Blanche Sharp, died last Thursday night at the Hospital for Ruptured and Crippled where she had been a patient for the past six weeks. Miss Sharp played the Keith and Orpheum circuits and was managed by Charles Frohman. She also appeared in Channing Pollock's play, "The Fool," in 1922.

Lucy Beaumont

Lucy Beaumont, who had played mother roles for many years in Hollywood productions and appeared last year on Broadway in "The Bishop Misbehaves," died at her home in New York Sunday. She was born in England in 1869 and was already a veteran of the English stage when she came to America in 1914. Her last motion picture role was in "Maid of Salem."

NEW SELLING SEASON LAUNCHED AS PRODUCT PLANS ARE SPEEDED

Programs Highlights for 1937-38 Announced; Many Large Circuits Are Signed; Independents Waiting, Says Allied

Independent Producers Prepare for Ambitious Supply of Pictures; Monogram Meets with Franchise Holders May 7th

Discussions of what the new season will bring have advanced to the door of the convention halls of distributors' sales conventions.

Home office and exchange delegations of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, the first in the parade this year, converged this week on Los Angeles where the sales meeting will open on Sunday in the Ambassador hotel. Next Friday Monogram will open its first annual session in Chicago and the middle of May will bring the Grand National delegates to Los Angeles in the second convention for that city. Universal, Twentieth Century-Fox, Republic, Paramount, United Artists and RKO Radio will follow in that order with all but United Artists convening on the coast. Columbia, Warner Brothers and Imperial are the only companies for which plans have not been announced.

Only the highlights of the programs for the 1937-38 season have been revealed but sales forces have been unusually active for so early in the year and many of the larger circuits have signed for new product. The smaller circuits and independent theatres have been more reticent in their buying, credit for much of this being claimed by Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors which has repeatedly requested its members not to listen to the blandishments of salesmen until after the Allied convention in Milwaukee, May 26th.

A recent Allied bulletin reported that of 170 theatres checked, only 13 had contracted for "product approximating their requirements for the ensuing year." The statement added that 14 houses had signed with one company each, 23 with two or three companies each and 120 had contracted for new product. A total of 21 exchange centers were represented in the survey.

Large circuits were reported this week to be making every effort to enter into long-term product deals. Such arrangements, it was pointed out, would obviate the need of long conferences each year and continued discussions through the summer months.

Last year National Theatres concluded a three-year arrangement with MGM and a two-year pact with Paramount. Film buyers for the circuit are now discussing new deals with Warner Brothers, United Artists and Columbia and were reported to have closed with Twentieth Century-Fox and RKO Radio.

Although the circuit has offered Warner Brothers a two-year arrangement, Gradwell L. Sears, general sales manager, has not committed himself to an agreement beyond next year's product.

Loew circuit executives have been holding a series of meetings with United Artists and Paramount sales heads on long-term deals. The circuit has 10-year franchises with both distributors which expire this summer.

Last season Nate J. Blumberg and John J. O'Connor of the RKO circuit completed arrangements with Warner Brothers for a four-year pact for the distributor's entire product in the circuit's houses in Greater New York.

MGM OPENS SEASON OF SALES MEETINGS

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, convening Sunday at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, will start the annual spring parade of sales sessions. Other companies, in chronological order, which have selected their dates are: Monogram, May 7th to 9th, in Chicago; Grand National, May 16th to 19th, in Los Angeles; Universal, May 17th to 19th, in Los Angeles; Twentieth Century-Fox, May 31st to June 3rd, in Los Angeles; Republic, May 31st to June 2nd, in Los Angeles; Paramount, June 10th to 13th, in Los Angeles; United Artists, starting June 14th with successive meetings in New York, Chicago and San Francisco; and RKO Radio, June 16th to 20th, in Los Angeles.

Columbia and Warner Brothers have not announced any date. Imperial is undecided, and Gaumont British has tentatively set two meetings in Hollywood and New York the first and second weeks of June.

Recently RKO signed the Schine circuit of approximately 80 theatres in New York, Ohio and Kentucky for three years. J. Mayer Schine and George Lynch of the independent circuit have similar arrangements with a number of other companies.

RKO's metropolitan circuit and Metropolitan Playhouses have 10-year deals with Twentieth Century-Fox which have some time to run.

The home contingent, consisting of twenty-three members of the New York executive force, includes William F. Rodgers, Thomas J. Connors, Edward M. Saunders, Silas Seadler, Joseph Vogel, Charles J. Sonin, Ernest Morrell, Herbert Morgan, Jay A. Gove, M. L. Simons, Harold Postman, E. W. Aaron, Joel Bezahler, William Brenner, Alan F. Cummings, Carlton Duffus, Charles Deesen, Charles B. Fogle, Harold Goldgraben, Jerry J. Jonas, Arthur Lacks and William D. Kelly. On the same train, leaving Grand Central, will be branch office delegations from Boston, New Haven, New Jersey, Philadelphia and Washington and the New York exchange delegation with William A. Scully and John J. Bowen.

Al Lichtman, Howard Dietz and William R. Ferguson went on from New York ahead of the convention special to make advance preparations for the gathering. Charles K. Stern, J. S. MacLeod and Edward Carrier also went on to California in advance of the regular train and Fred C. Quimby has been on the coast for some time.

Representing the MGM and Roach studios at convention sessions will be Louis B. Mayer, Howard Strickling, Barrett Kiesling and Hal Roach. One of the elaborate functions planned for the convention program is a dinner dance to be given by Hal Roach on Wednesday. The affair will be held on the set built for "Topper" at the Roach studios.

Additional pictures for the coming season, announced in advance of the convention, include "The Return of the Thin Man," a second sequel to "The Thin Man"; "Rendezvous with Love," an operetta by William Anthony McGuire, and "Hats in the Air," which will be an Eleanor Powell musical. As with the previous adventures of Nick Charles, the amateur detective; William Powell, Myrna Loy, and Asta, the dog, will be featured in "Return of the Thin Man." Albert Hackett and Frances Goodrich are preparing the script.

"Rendezvous with Love" has been designed for Betty Jaynes, 15-year-old singer, and for a mature soprano, probably Jeanette MacDonald, who will portray the lead character in later years. Writers have begun work on "Hats in the Air," which will follow Miss Powell's "Rosalie."

Monogram

More than 100 salesmen and franchise holders will convene at Chicago's Drake hotel on May 7th for the two-day Monogram sales convention. Distribution plans for the company's 42 pictures will be outlined by Edward Golden, general sales manager. There will be two business sessions on the first day to be followed by a dinner and meeting of franchise holders that evening. Additional sessions and the convention banquet will be held the second day. A special convention train will leave New York on May 5th.

Following approval by the Securities and Exchange Commission of the stock registration certificate on April 23rd, Mr. Golden announced that the company would operate its own exchanges in New York, Philadelphia and Washington. All other branches are to be operated by franchise holders which have been signed for most of the important territories.

Among these are Nate Schultz of Selected Pictures Corporation of Cleveland for the northern Ohio area and William Onie of Cincinnati for southern Ohio. Ben Welansky, president of the Monogram exchanges in Boston and Pittsburgh, has named Steve Brody, New England manager, and Dave Selznick, manager of the Pittsburgh office. Lon T. Fidler has organized Monogram Intermountain Pictures, with offices in Denver, and Monogram Film Distributors has been incorporated in Nebraska by L. O. Ringler and F. E. Judd.

A. M. Goldstein is directing the Seattle and Portland offices of Monogram Pictures Corporation of the Northwest and Sam Decker and William Hurlbut have incorporated Monogram Pictures in Detroit for the Michigan franchise. W. L. Norris, president of Consolidated Film Distributors has formed a Monogram company in Kansas City and Henri Elman will open a branch of his Capitol Films Exchange in Indianapolis to handle the Monogram franchise in Indiana.

"Blazing Barriers," with Irene Franklin, Edward Arnold, Jr., and Guy Bates Post, is now

Grand National

Grand National will release 12 "A" pictures next season, Edward Peskay, general sales manager, said this week. Three are expected to be ready for screening at the convention which meets in Los Angeles May 16th.

There will be eight Ken Maynard and a like number of Tex Ritter westerns among the 65 features to be announced at the convention, at which about 70 division managers, branch heads and salesmen will be present.

James Cagney who will star in two pictures next season, this week started on "Dynamite," his second for this year. Conrad Nagel, who has been appearing in a series of G-man features made by Condor for Grand National, will divide his time between acting and directing, having been assigned the direction of "Love Takes Flight," from an original by Ann Morrison Chapin. Rod LaRoque will be starred in four pictures to be produced by Max Alexander, the first to be "The Shadow," based on the radio character. Anna Sten will appear in "Georgeous," to be produced and directed by her husband, Eugen Frenke.

Mr. Peskay and Edward Finney, publicity director and producer of the Tex Ritter westerns, were in Los Angeles this week conferring with Edward Alperson, president, on the convention plans. Three or four branch managers, to be selected from among the winners of the current sales drive which will end May 15th, will be promoted to district managers at the meeting.

New star contracts completed by the company include those for Eric Linden, who will make four pictures starting with "Here's Flash Casey," and George Houston, who will also make four starting with "Wallaby Jim."

Universal

Universal's new season program, expected to approximate the 36 features and and six westerns listed this year, will be detailed to the sales force at the convention in Los Angeles starting May 17th. Final plans for the product were discussed this week in Hollywood by J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board; James R. Grainger, general sales manager, and Charles R. Rogers, production chief.

Starting dates for six pictures have been set, "West Coast Limited," May 3rd; "Radio Patrol," a serial, May 10th; "Heather of the High Hand," June 7th; "Broadway Jamboree," June 11th; "Scoop," June 21st, and "Carnival Queen," June 28th.

Twentieth Century-Fox

The Twentieth Century-Fox convention which opens at the Ambassador in Los Angeles May 31st will be attended by almost twice as many delegates as were present at last year's Chicago session, according to plans announced by John D. Clark, general manager of distribution. Every unit of the company will be represented for the first time.

Heading the home office delegation will be Sidney R. Kent, W. C. Michel, Sidney Towell, Felix A. Jenkins and Spyros Skouras. Coast executives at the meeting will be Joseph M. Schenck, Darryl F. Zanuck, William Goetz, Sol M. Wurtzel and Colonel Jason Joy.

SERIALS RETURNING IN MODERN DRESS

Although present day pictures are a far cry from the days of Pearl White and Francis X. Bushman producers are again turning to serials but in modern dress. Present production plans call for 12 pictures of this type, four each from Columbia, Universal and Republic.

The serial, in its new form, is directed as much at adult audiences as at juvenile patronage because modern education, radio and present day feature pictures have so educated the public that it is no longer possible to leave the hero hanging over a precipice or facing impossible odds at the end of each chapter.

The company's theatre holding corporations and other subsidiaries will be represented as will the foreign organization, Educational Pictures and Movietone News. A special convention train will leave Grand Central terminal, New York, at noon, May 26th, and arrive in Los Angeles on May 30th.

Business sessions are scheduled for the following Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday mornings and afternoons. New product and tests of new stars will be screened, prizes for the Kent Sales Drive will be distributed, and there will be conferences on sales analyses, distribution policies and production.

Schenck and Kent to Speak

Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board of directors, will address the convention June 1st and Mr. Kent, president, will deliver his annual address the following day. June 3rd will be devoted to inspection of the improved plant at Movietone City, and the convention special will leave Los Angeles on Friday afternoon, June 4th. The New York delegation will arrive home Tuesday, June 8th.

Those from the American sales forces who will attend the sessions include:

Home office: John D. Clark, general manager of distribution, William Sussman, William J. Kupper, W. C. Gehring, William J. Clark, Jack Sichelman, Martin Moskowitz, Edwin H. Collins, Clarence A. Hill, Theodore A. Shaw, Roger Ferri, Jack Bloom, Sam Epstein, Harry Mersay, Eugene McEvoy, I. Lincer and Deon J. DeTitta.

Production Department: Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president in charge of production; William Goetz, vice-president and executive assistant; Sol M. Wurtzel, executive producer; Colonel Jason Joy, Joseph Moskowitz, Robert Fairbanks, William Dover, Fred Metzler and Ed Ebele.

Educational: E. W. Hammons, president; Jack Skirball and Harvey Day.

Advertising and publicity: Charles E. McCarthy, Harry Brand, Arch Reeve and E. W. Wingart.

Advertising sales department: Lee Balsly, E. Hollander, Jerry Novat, W. W. Caldwell and D. Reed.

Guests: Sol Lesser, Dan Michalove, Paul Terry, Joseph Pincus, Frank Underwood, Miss H. G. Baker, Percy Heiliger, Charles Skouras, Arch Bowles, William Powers, George P. Skouras, Martin Fox, Alfred McNeill and E. W. Holmberg.

Foreign department: W. J. Hutchinson, Clarence V. Hake, R. Sutton Dawes, Charles Munro, Delbert Goodman, W. W. Sullivan, L. Giordano, A. Paucker, T. Isdahl, Jr., Gus Mome, Irving A. Maas and Leslie Whelan.

Paris Convention Held

The annual joint sales convention of the British and European organizations of Twentieth Century-Fox opened in Paris on Wednesday. With Mr. Kent heading the American delegation every unit of company activity was represented.

Mr. Kent was to be the principal speaker at the session Friday and at the banquet closing the meeting on Saturday night. F. L. Harley, managing director for British Isles, and Ben Miggins, European sales manager, presided over divisional sessions. The joint meetings were directed by Walter J. Hutchinson, foreign sales manager.

The production organization was represented by Colonel Jason Joy, Movietone News by Truman H. Talley, and the company's British producing subsidiary, New World Pictures, Ltd., by Robert T. Kane.

Annabella, star of continental and British pictures, has been signed by Twentieth Century-Fox for two pictures. One will be made at the Hollywood studios, the other at New World, Denham, England.

Paramount

Robert M. Gillham, Paramount's director of publicity and advertising, and Neil F. Agnew, vice-president in charge of distribution, were in Hollywood last week conferring with studio executives on the 1937-38 product.

Recently completed or now before the camera in the Paramount studios are 13 features including "Artists and Models," "Exclusive," "Easy Living," "High, Wide and Handsome," "I Met Him in Paris," "Mountain Music," "Angel," "The Last Train from Madrid," "A Night of Mystery," "Hotel Haywire," "The Great Gambini," "Midnight Madonna" and "North of the Rio Grande."

B. P. Schulberg announced that his releasing arrangement with Paramount would terminate on completion of the present schedule. The producer said: "With the marked trend away from the socalled 'B' pictures and toward exclusive 'A' product, we are desirious of making fewer and more distinguished pictures in the future. Under our Paramount contract we were required to produce four 'A' and four 'B' pictures. In the future we will direct our efforts to the making of only 'A' product. We have this year developed Edward Arnold into a positive character star occupying the position formerly held by George Arliss and Charles Laughton. We have brought out John Trent, who is hailed as a new and important star and we are to launch O'Brien Hayward."

Ben Piazza, executive vice-president of Major Pictures, the Emanuel Cohen organization which produces for Paramount, was in New York last week to engage new talent and examine story material. He announced that Stella Adler, legitimate stage star, had been signed by his company and that he was conferring with Beatric Lillie on arrangements for her first Paramount picture, which is to be produced by Major.

United Artists

United Artists will initiate a series of three sales conventions with a three-day meeting in New York starting June 14th. Immediately after this session is adjourned the home office executive force will leave for Chicago, where on the 17th, 18th and 19th they will confer with the midwest division representatives, and on the 21st, 22d and 23rd the scene of the conference will shift to San Francisco.

Second Meeting in Chicago

At the second meeting, in the Drake hotel, Chicago, the contingent from the home office will include Messrs. Schaefer, Smith, Schlaifer, Thompson, Poe and Greenthal. District managers Jack Goldhar and Haskell Masters will be present and the sales staffs of the offices in Chicago, Milwaukee, Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha, Minneapolis, Detroit, Calgary, Montreal, St. John, Toronto, Vancouver and Winnipeg.

The third and final meeting will be held at the St. Francis hotel, San Francisco, and will be attended by the staffs of the Denver, Salt Lake City, Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles offices as well as the home office representatives.

Samuel Goldwyn has prepared production budgets totaling $10,000,000 for the eight pictures he plans for next season's release through United Artists. Three of the group will cost $1,500,000 each.

Titles of the eight are "Stella Dallas," "Hurricane," "Dead End," "Adventures of Marco Polo," "Spring in My Heart," "The Real Glory," "The Goldwyn Follies" and "Folly and Farewell," "Hurricane," "Adventures of Marco Polo" and "The Goldwyn Follies" have been designated as $1,500,000 pictures.

Merle Oberon and Gary Cooper will be teamed in "Adventures of Marco Polo" and "Spring in My Heart." Miss Oberon will appear also in "Folly and Farewell."

Renowned Artists Organized

Capitalized at $2,000,000, Renowned Artists Corporation has been formed to finance production units headed by John Ford, Ronald Colman, Tay Garnett and others, the product to be released through United Artists. Sol A. Rosenblatt, formerly a divisional director of the NRA, will be one of the principal officers, and Lester Cowan, former executive secretary of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, will be the general manager.

The company will release a minimum of three pictures in the 1937-38 season, of which one will be "Trade Winds," with Ronald Colman.

Reports continue that Selznick International may transfer its releasing arrangements to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer at the expiration of the present United Artists commitments for eight pictures. Only three of these, "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "Garden of Allah" and "A Star Is Born," have been completed and released. "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Let Me Live" are in work, and "Tom Sawyer" will be started shortly. Selznick is preparing to produce "Gone with the Wind" and it is believed that this would be the first MGM release if the deal is consummated.

SITE IN DELAWARE OFFERED PRODUCERS

A tract of land between Milford and Rehoboth, Del., has been purchased by Edward M. Davis, Milford and Philadelphia financier, and will be presented by him to the first motion picture producing company to locate in Delaware under the new tax exemption law. The recently enacted law exempts from taxation for a period of 15 years land, buildings and equipment used in the production of pictures by any company organizing in the state after July 1st.

According to Mr. Davis representatives of two west coast studios are to confer with him next week. One of them, he said, may be financed by eastern capital while the second would us its own capital and may bring its entire production plant to Delaware.

United Artists is now preparing a feature unit to be titled the "Academy Award Revue of Walt Disney Cartoons," which will include five Academy prize-winning animated cartoons in color. Subjects will be "Flowers and Trees," 1932; "Three Little Pigs," 1933; "The Tortoise and the Hare," 1934; "Three Orphan Kittens," 1935, and "The Country Cousins," 1936.

RKO Radio

The sixth annual and third international RKO convention to continue for five days starting June 16th at Hotel Ambassador, Los Angeles, will be attended by approximately 200 home office executives and members of the sales staff. A special train will leave New York June 10th and field men will board it en route to the coast.

Jules Levy, general sales manager, said his office expects to have 4,500 contracts for the new season sold when the convention starts.

Condor Pictures will produce 10 features and 26 one-reel shorts for RKO release next season. Six of the features will star George O'Brien and of the shorts 13 will be musicals, starring stage, screen and radio personalities and 13 will be sports subjects.

David L. Loew Productions, Inc., will provide three "A" pictures with Joe E. Brown for RKO release.

Bert Gilroy has started production on an Edgar Kennedy comedy, the first two-reel short in a schedule of 36 for the coming season. The pictures will be released in six series.

Columbia

Details in connection with the Columbia convention, still unsettled as to date and place, will be set within the next week. Home office sales executives have completed a series of regional meetings on current product.

National exploitation campaigns of the same type as those provided for feature productions will be undertaken for promotion of its new serials. Tieups with national advertisers and specially planned publicity campaigns will be arranged. The first serial, starring Frank Buck, is planned for release September 1st, and a series of stories by Mr. Buck will run simultaneously in a national magazine.

Frances Marion's first picture under her new producer contract with Columbia will be an original by Courtney Riler Cooper and Frank R. Adams, who are now engaged in preparing the script.

Gaumont British

Gaumont British executives are discussing plans for 24 pictures but nothing will be set until Arthur Lee returns from conferences with the Ostrer brothers in London. Eight of the films will be made by GB in association with General Film Distributors under the arrangement recently completed.

George Weeks, general sales manager, whose contract expired May 1st, will remain with the company at least until Mr. Lee returns with definite details of the program for next season. Physical distribution of GB product is expected to continue through the Twentieth Century-Fox exchanges.

Present plans are for two regional sales conventions to be held in New York and Los Angeles the first and second weeks of June.

Republic

The Republic convention will be held at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, May 31st to June 2nd.

Moe Siegel, newly elected president of Republic, in Hollywood this week for conferences on new product, announced that the company plans to produce its pictures under a new unit system. The program includes 30 features to be made by six production units, 24 westerns and four serials from two additional units. The six feature divisions are headed by Herman Schlom, Leonard Fields, Joe Krumgold, Bert Clark, Al Levine and Harry Grey.

Mr. Siegel for a number of years has been associated with H. J. Yates, head of Consolidated Film Industries, and was formerly treasurer of Consolidated. His election to the Republic presidency followed the resignation of Nat Levine.

Warner Brothers

Although no convention plans have been announced as yet by Warner Brothers, the studios at Burbank are working at top speed completing films for release this season and laying the groundwork for next season.

Completed and awaiting release dates are 20 features, eight more are before the cameras and five are in preparation for early shooting. Those finished are "Kid Galahad," "Fly Away Baby," "Talent Scout," "Public Wedding," "Blazing Sixes," "Dance Charlie Dance," "The Prince and the Pauper," "Marry the Girl," "The Go-Getter," "Slim," "The Case of the Stuttering Bishop," "Don't Pull Your Punches," "Another Dawn," "Mountain Justice," "San Quentin," "Melody for Two," "Draegerman Courage," "Footloose Heiress," "Empty Holsters" and "War Lord."

Before the cameras are "That Certain Woman," "Devil's Saddle Legion," "Ever Since Eve," "Lady Luck," "The Life of Zola," "Confession," "The Singing Marine."

Mervyn LeRoy, who has just finished shooting "Deep in the South," will next direct a musical starring Fernand Gravet and Ethel Merman. In the meantime he will supervise two other pictures to be made under his name, "Mr.

Imperial

William M. Pizor, president of Imperial, announced this week that a decision on a national convention will be made within the next two weeks. A program of 32 features has been set by the company, divided into four series, six exploitation specials, ten Jewel productions, eight outdoor musicals and eight frontier action features.

Titles selected at present are: "My Wondering Daughter," "Beauty Racket," "Sophisticated Lady," "Back from Reno," "The Model Murder," "Honor Among Women," "Sky Girl," "Negligee," "Silver Linings," "Penthouse Love," "Night of Crime" and "Petticoat Lane."

Three New Companies

Three new companies have appeared in the independent field. World-Wide Picture Company has been organized in Hollywood to produce and distribute features and shorts. Eugene H. Roth is president and general manager and Alfred Grasso is technical supervisor. Allied Arts Productions, organized with Deems Taylor as executive vice-president, has plans for the production of full length features and shorts, based on operas. Associated with the company are Theodore Benedek, John D. Williams and Arnold Genthe.

Emil C. Jensen's new Artcinema Associates, Inc., has purchased the assets of Art Cinema Corporation, including about 30 pictures previously released by United Artists, and a number of unproduced book rights, original stories and stage plays. Plans are under way for reissues of some of the pictures, including 'Abraham Lincoln," and for the sale to other producers of certain properties which will not be used for production by Artcinema.

Joseph Steiner, sales manager of American Tobis, has completed a deal with Broadcast Pictures for distribution of the new Jan Kiepura musical, "Thank You Madame." The picture, directed by Carmine Gallone, was produced in Austria and has the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra and the Vienna Philharmonic Choir for musical background. A long sequence from the Puccini opera "Turnadot" is included. The picture has been approved by the joint boycott committee of the American Jewish Congress.

Richard J. Pearl has been signed as general manager of the Maurice Conn studio in Hollywood which is undergoing extensive alterations in preparation for next season's production. Cantabria Films, a Spanish company, has leased space on the lot and was to begin production this week on "El Camino de Hollywood."

Joseph Green, president of Sphinx Films, has announced he will produce three Jewish features next season at his studios at Warsaw, Poland. He will import Jewish stars from the United States for the leading roles.

World Pictures Corporation, distributor of foreign product in the United States, this week announced a program of 26 features, eight three-reelers and 13 one-reelers for 1937-38, as part of its expansion plan. The company intends to sell the product on a franchise basis in key cities and to open its own theatres in at least eight towns.

Westchester Council On Child Film Problem

The Westchester County Motion Picture Council met this week at White Plains, N. Y., to study the problem of keeping "detrimental" motion pictures from children. A solution, said a resolution, would be the classification of films into "universal" and "adult" groups, with children forbidden to view the "adult" pictures unless escorted by parents.

At the same time the Westchester County Federation of Women met at the Contemporary Club attacked "cheap" radio serials for adults and children and all "canned" music broadcasts because they deprive musicians of employment.

Family Type of Films Increasing, Say Chicagoans

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH

in Chicago

The Better Films Council of Chicagoland celebrated its fifth anniversary last weekend with the presentation of three awards of merit. Two film companies and one newspaper were the recipients.

Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation received a scroll in recognition of "their achievement in producing, year after year, the largest percentage of films rated for Family Showing."

To Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer went an award "in recognition of the definite change in production policy—from sophisticated, often highly objectionable films, to outstanding screen versions of classic literature, drama and light opera."

The Christian Science Monitor received a scroll "in appreciation of its contribution in printing consistently wholesome motion picture news and reviews."

The awards were presented by Mrs. Charles Holton, secretary.

In the last five years the review committee of the Council has reviewed 1,270 pictures from the various companies. It was on this basis that the ratings of the pictures were made. Pictures were classified into three groups: family, adult and young adult, and adult. Figures for the period in the "Family Pictures" classification reflect an increase in that type of product, as follows:

1932-33, 25.4 per cent; 1933-34, 27.1 per cent; 1934-35, 33.4 per cent; 1935-36, 39.3 per cent; 1936-37, 42.1 per cent.

Dr. Fred Millett, Associate Professor of English, of Chicago University, was the guest speaker at the luncheon in the Civic Opera Building, and reported on his research work in motion pictures. Other speakers included Clyde Eckhardt, president of the Chicago Film Board of Trade and branch manager of Twentieth Century-Fox Films, Miss Helen Rand Miller, Allen Usher, district manager of Paramount Pictures, Thomas Hungerford, of the Essaness Lake theatre, and Ken Maynard, western film star.

More than 200 women attended and paid tribute to the eight women who had started the Better Films Council.

Resigns 20th-Fox Post

A. W. McCormick, office manager for Twentieth Century-Fox at Pittsburgh, has resigned to go into the theatre business on his own. He has taken over a theatre at Beaver, Pa. C. J. Kennenberg, salesman, will succeed him and Jim Thorpe, booker, will become the West Virginia salesman.

Intervention in Reorganization Of RKO Is Denied

A petition by the Orpheum Circuit preferred stockholders represented by Isidor J. Kresel, attorney, for leave to intervene in the reorganization proceedings of Radio-Keith-Orpheum was denied last Friday by Federal Judge William Bondy in New York because of technical deficiencies in the motion papers. Permission to renew the motion was granted, however, but Judge Bondy observed that the Orpheum stockholders are protected at present by their right to be heard on the RKO reorganization plan without intervention.

The same committee also has a motion pending before Federal Judge Robert P. Patterson to compel Marcus Heiman, Orpheum trustee in bankruptcy, to intervene in the RKO proceedings. The latter motion is not affected by Judge Bondy's denial of the separate petition.

The hearings on the RKO plan of reorganization opened last Friday before Special Master George W. Alger with a creditors' attack on the provisions for settlement of the $9,150,000 Rockefeller Center claim against RKO. Carlos Israels, attorney for the unsecured creditors' committee, led the objections to the proposals for issuing 500,000 shares of new RKO common stock to Rockefeller Center in settlement of the latter's claim which is based on the termination of RKO leases on the Music Hall, Center theatre and certain office space in the RKO Building.

Consents to the plan were filed by RCA, which holds $4,893,327 of RKO debentures and 605,731 shares of common stock; by a group of secured creditors representing claims of $3,743,633; a second group representing claims of $1,118,500; Bank of America, N.A., with a secured claim of $481,000; Amerex Corporation, a secured claim of $35,000; Time, Inc., an unsecured claim of $1,198,000; Roy E. Larsen, an unsecured claim of $150,000; the Stillman Corporation, unsecured claim of $95,000, and Mary A. Moulton, unsecured claim of $5,000.

Hearings Resumed

Special Master Alger on Wednesday resumed hearings on the proposed reorganization plan and heard Oliver O. McMahon, RKO assistant treasurer, predict profits of $2,172,771 for the first six months of 1937. William Clark, RKO treasurer, testified the company lost $97,000 in 1936 in Spain.

Mr. Israels, attorney for unsecured creditors, said Wednesday that negotiations are still pending with the Atlas Corporation for settlement of his committee's differences. Wilfrid J. Merrill, consultant of Atlas, proponent of the plan, testified that he regarded the plan as fair, that interest payments could be met by the new company and that the picture division could meet obligations of the plan by itself. Mr. Merrill testified the Orpheum circuit presented no problem to effect the operation of the plan.

Colonel H. C. Rickaby, Atlas attorney, reported 45 per cent of the stockholders and 75 per cent of the security holders had already filed consent for the plan.

All officers of the Keith-Albee-Orpheum and the B. F. Keith Corporation, RKO subsidiaries, were reelected this week for another year at the annual meeting of the boards of the two companies. The officers of the two companies are identical and are Leo Spitz, chairman of the board and president; Malcolm Kingsberg, vice-chairman; Leon Goldberg, treasurer; O. R. McMahon, W. J. Kernan, William Murray and H. E. Newcomb, assistant treasurers; Louis Joffee, Harry M. Pimstein and William F. Whitman, assistant secretaries.

Monogram Enters Curb Market With Issue of 350,000 Shares of Common; SEC Registration Effected

Paramount Pictures' report of $6,012,250 net earnings for the 53 week fiscal year and the United States Government's report of a $66,000 jump in March theatre admission taxes, brought further evidence this week that motion picture theatre business has been steadily improving since the turn of the year. A third financial film development was Monogram Pictures' announcement that it had entered on the New York Curb Exchange 350,000 shares of new common stock.

Barney Balaban, president of Paramount Pictures, issued to stockholders on Tuesday the annual report of the company, which disclosed that operations for the year ended Jan. 2, 1937, had resulted in a total net profit of $6,012,250, computed after all charges including interest, federal taxes, depreciation, and contingency reserves of $632,500 and after applying $2,000,000 of special inventory reserve provided at the close of 1935 for certain high cost pictures, the amortization of which for the year 1936 is reflected in the amortization of film expense, and includes $331,819 and $123,230, representing respectively net capital gains and profit on acquisition of the company's six per cent debentures acquired for sinking fund purposes. There is not included approximately $331,000 representing Paramount's net interest as a stockholder in the combined undistributed earnings for the year of partially owned companies.

Paramounts 1936 earnings results by quarters were as follows:

Quarters	Results before application of special inventory reserve appropriated December 28, 1935	Portion of special inventory reserve applied	Total including application of inventory reserve
First	$ 81,078.20(Loss)	$ 800,000.00	$ 718,921.80(Loss)
Second	1,277,461.56(Loss)	800,000.00	477,461.56(Loss)
Third	1,813,764.70	200,000.00	2,013,764.70
Fourth	3,557,025.58	200,000.00	3,757,025.58
Year	$4,012,250.52	$2,000,000.00	$6,012,250.52

The accounts and operating results of Olympia Theatres, Inc., in receivership, are not included in the financial statement.

The consolidated balance sheet shows that cash and marketable securities on Jan. 2, 1937, amounted to $10,782,171, of which $3,158,490 represented balances in Great Britain and Dominions, and $141,663 in other foreign countries. The production department inventory amounted to $17,327,619. Total current assets were $32,441,957, with current liabilities of $9,501,547, leaving a net working capital of $22,940,409.

Last December cash dividends were paid aggregating $3,373,882.84, representing dividends on the six per cent first preferred stock for the years 1935 and 1936 and dividends on the six per cent second preferred stock for the year 1935. On April 1, 1937, dividends on the six per cent second preferred stock were paid for the year 1936, which, together with payments for the first quarter of 1937, completed the payment of all arrearages on preferred stock.

"Progress has been made in reducing interest charges," said Mr. Balaban. On Feb. 18, 1937, the company offered to the holders of its 20-year six per cent sinking fund debentures due January 1, 1955, the right to exchange them, at par, for three and one-quarter per cent convertible debentures due March 1, 1947. UPWARD MOVE OF EARNINGS SHOWN total amount offered was $15,000,000 and to April 1, 1937, the holders of $12,502,800 par value of bonds have made the exchange. Interest rates have also been reduced on bond and mortgage indebtedness of subsidiaries both domestic and foreign, through refunding and rate reductions. As a result the major part of such indebtedness now bears interest rates ranging from three per cent to four and one-half per cent per annum. Total annual interest charges of the company and its consolidated subsidiaries payable on debt existing as of January 2, 1937, after giving effect to subsequent interest reductions and savings due to refundings, amounted to approximately $1,950,000 as contrasted with approximately $2,800,000 payable as of December 28, 1935, the close of the previous fiscal year.

Net Fixed Assets Rise

The net fixed assets show an increase of $3,076,489 from $61,458,756 to $64,535,245. The additions include the acquisition in fee of the Alabama theatre property, Birmingham, Ala., as required under the plan of reorganization, and various other properties acquired mainly to round out existing units; also expenditures for restoring and improving existing properties and equipment.

On January 2, 1937, the company held in its treasury $2,376,000 par value of the company's six per cent debentures acquired during the year for sinking fund purposes.

During the year additional claims of $530,453 were allowed in the reorganization proceedings, involving the issuance of $265,226 par value of first preferred stock and $265,226 par value 20-year six per cent sinking fund debentures. The general reserve is considered ample for claims still pending and for other adjustments affecting the period prior to January 1, 1935.

The holders of $4,250,500 par value of first preferred stock and $3,900 par value second preferred stock converted their shares into 297,886 shares of common stock. As of April 1, 1937, 96,447 shares of first preferred stock and 42,230 shares of second preferred stock had been converted into 713,136 common shares, a total reduction of over $10,000,000 par value of senior shares.

Paramount Pictures, Inc. on Monday estimated its consolidated earnings for the first quarter ended April 3, 1937, at $2,011,000. These earnings include approximately $391,000 of dividends from nonconsolidated subsidiaries, and are computed after all charges including interest, federal taxes (except undistributed profits taxes), depreciation and reserves. Such earnings do not include approximately $640,000 representing Paramount's net interest as a stockholder in the combined undistributed earnings for the quarter of partially-owned companies, the announcement said.

It was explained that there were outstanding as of April 3, 1937, 155,890 shares of cumulative convertible $100 par value six per cent first preferred stock and 597,651 shares of cumulative convertible $10 par value six per cent second preferred stock. After deducting $323,482 of dividends accrued for the quarter on these outstanding preferred shares, the remaining $1,687,518 represent 72 cents per share on the 2,330,449 shares of common stock outstanding on April 3, 1937. Computed on the aggregate of the estimated consolidated earnings of $2,011,000 and the undistributed earnings of $640,000 referred to above, the earnings per common share calculated on the same basis would be $1.00.

"I like the MOTION PICTURE HERALD very much as it is helpful in making selections of pictures and provides other aids."

—RUFF BROS.
Main Street Theatre
Logan, Kan.

The consolidated earnings for the first quarter of 1936 amounted to $718,921 after applying $800,000 of the inventory reserve provided as of December 28, 1935, and Paramount's net interest as a stockholder in the combined undistributed earnings for the quarter of partially-owned companies totalled $480,000.

Interest Charges Reduced

These do not include earnings of Olympia Theatres, Inc., and its subsidiaries which were in receivership throughout both periods. This is the last of Paramount's major subsidiaries involved in reorganization proceedings, and the company said it believed the reorganization would be completed during the next few months, "thus strengthening the structure of Paramount in theatre operations, cash and earnings."

Each share of first preferred stock is convertible into seven shares of common stock and each ten shares of second preferred stock are convertible into nine shares of common stock.

"Progress has been made in reducing interest charges," the report said. "Total annual interest charges of the company and its consolidated subsidiaries payable on debt existing as of Jan. 2, 1937, after giving effect to subsequent interest reductions and savings due to refundings, amounted to approximately $1,950,000 as contrasted with approximately $2,800,000 payable as of Dec. 28, 1935, the close of the previous fiscal year."

Tax Collections Rise

Theatre business throughout the country has been maintaining its upward trend, it was indicated by the monthly reports of revenue collections issued by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, at Washington, in which admission tax collections in March are given as $1,539,408, compared with $1,473,353 in February and $1,505,676 in January. The month's collections, also, were shown to be more than $284,000 above the $1,255,393 reported for the corresponding month last year.

Revenue from admission taxes during the current fiscal year, ending June 30, next, will be substantially above that for the fiscal year 1936, it is indicated by figures compiled by the bureau for the first three quarters. For the nine months from July to March, inclusive, the tax returned a total of $14,738,614, an increase of $1,743,819 over the $12,994,795 reported for the corresponding period a year ago, it was said.

For the first quarter of the current calendar year, collections were $4,518,437, a gain of nearly $400,000 over the $4,119,924 reported for the first three months of 1936.

A special report on collections in the Third New York District (Broadway), placing March collections at $511,185 compared with $558,620 in February, indicates that the improvement during the month was largely outside the metropolitan centers of the country.

Box office tax collections in the district were $448,549 compared with $476,932 the preceding month. Collections from free or reduced rate admissions dropped from $7,552 to $2,939; tickets sold by brokers from $14,047 to $13,922; tickets sold by proprietors in excess of established prices from $5,052, to $2,458, and admissions to roof gardens and cabarets from $55,023 to $43,287, while collections from permanent use of boxes and seats increased from $14 to $29.

Monogram Stock

Monogram Pictures Corporation entered the market Tuesday with an issue of 350,000 shares of its one dollar par value common stock to provide additional capital for expanding its operations. Public offering of the shares by means of a prospectus, priced at $3.75 per share, is being made by J. A. Sisto and Co.

The company was organized recently to continue on a larger scale the business of its predecessor corporation of the same name known for its productions of lower-priced box office pictures. The management of the present company is headed by W. Ray Johnston as president. Mr. Johnston has been identified with the industry for 23 years and was president and organizer of the predecessor corporation.

The company proposes to establish its own distributing offices in New York City, Philadelphia and Washington, and distribution will be effected in other parts of the country through franchise exchange corporations, most of which have substantial stock interests in the company. Distribution in the United Kingdom is handled by contract with Pathe Pictures, Ltd., London, which already has acquired the 1937-38 output.

Authorized capitalization of the new company consists of 1,000,000 shares of common stock, one dollar par value, of which 83,333⅓ shares are outstanding. In addition to the 350,000 shares being presently offered the company has granted options on 500,000 shares on terms ranging from four dollars per share if exercised on or before December 28, 1938 to eight dollars per share in 1942. The remaining 66,666⅔ shares are reserved for issuance under certain conditions in liquidation of a five-year unsecured promissory note to Pathe International Corporation due in 1942 for $200,000.

Pro forma consolidated balance sheet of the company and its subsidiary at January 31, 1937, after giving effect to the present financing, to the issuance of 83,333⅓ shares of stock for cash and other assets and to the proposed issuance of 66,666⅔ shares of stock in liquidation of its $200,000 note, shows total current assets of $1,394,530 and current liabilities of $15,845.

The company has agreed to make immediate application to have its stock listed on the New York Curb Exchange.

Monogram's registration with Securities and Exchange Commission became effective Friday, 20 days after the final papers had been filed in Washington, W. Ray Johnson, president, said.

Pathe Net Put at $59,000

Pathe's net earnings for the first quarter of the year are expected to total $59,000, O. Henry Briggs, president, told the stockholders Tuesday at the annual meeting. This is exclusive of dividends to be received from DuPont which are expected to increase the earnings to approximately $130,000.

A net loss of $39,984 for the year ended January 31st was reported Tuesday by Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., and wholly owned subsidiaries. The statement does not include the company's equity in the undistributed net income of its 50 per cent owned affiliated companies, amounting to $260,019.

Foreign Theatre Policy Still to Be Set: Warner

No decision has been made as yet on opening theatres in various key cities throughout the world, Harry M. Warner, Sam E. Morris and Joseph Bernhard said this week upon their return to New York from Europe. "We've been looking and talking, but there is nothing definite," the Warner executives said.

Mr. Bernhard, who is head of the Warner theatre operations, emphatically denied that his company was interested in the Gaumont British circuit in England. "There is no truth to those reports," he said. Mr. Bernhard was away four weeks and limited his travels to London and Paris.

Mr. Morris, who has charge of the company's foreign affairs, said that "construction on the new Teddington studios has just been completed and 20 pictures will be made there next season."

Mr. Warner and Mr. Morris visited France, Italy, Sweden, Norway, Denmark and England. They were away seven weeks. Mr. Warner will leave for Hollywood in July for his annual summer trip but Mr. Morris will precede him by one month at least.

Arthur Carew, Actor, Takes Own Life

Arthur Edmund Carew, veteran stage and screen actor, shot himself through the head last Friday in an automobile camp at Santa Monica, Cal. He was identified by his brother, G. H. Arman, of Eagle Rock, Cal. Mr. Carew was 52.

Mr. Carew was born at Trebizond, Armenia, but came to America when a child and received his education at Washington, D. C. and in New York. He was a star for several years on Broadway and made his debut in motion pictures with Lasky and appeared in "The Phantom of the Opera," "Trilby," "The Silent Lover," "Matrimonial Bed" and more recently in "Thunder in the Night" and "Charlie Chan's Secret."

DeMille Wins Tax Appeal

The United States circuit court of appeals in San Francisco this week held that Cecil B. DeMille Productions, Inc., is not liable for deficiency income tax of $1,207,059 for the years 1924 to 1929, inclusive.

Johnson Renews Contract

Julian Johnson, head of the scenario department of Twentieth Century-Fox in Hollywood for the past five years, this week signed a new term contract with the studio.

Forms 16mm Company

Al Weiner, formerly of Embassy Pictures Service in Detroit, has formed Embassy Talking Picture Productions to produce 16 mm. commercial pictures and to make screen tests.

Paul Allison, formerly ad sales representative for Twentieth Century-Fox, has joined RKO as assistant to James Clark in New York.

March of Time in New Headquarters

March of Time officials in New York announced this week that all motion picture installations in their new headquarters at 369 Lexington Avenue had been completed and that work on their May release is now going forward without interruption. The radio division of March of Time is also expected to move in shortly from its present quarters in the Columbia Broadcasting Building.

The new headquarters are in a three-story building with the top floor housing executive offices, projection room and the editorial research and promotion departments, while the second floor is devoted to production and technical work.

Portable Circuits Show Increase

Exhibitors in the Kansas City section appear to be little concerned over the rapid growth during the past few years of the portable circuit. It is said that at least 15 new circuits of this kind have been or will be opened this spring, which will give the exchange area about 40. This is easily three times as many as there were two or three years ago.

The circuits have appeared during the depression, but it is questionable whether the depression was the direct cause of their coming into existence. Except in rare instances, the towns they serve are not theatre towns and are not likely ever to be. The exceptions are those spots where some adventurous exhibitor took a chance and failed, at some past time. The suggestion is made that with the increasing popularity of motion pictures, the towns with a population of six or seven hundred and under have grown to want pictures more than they did—several times a year.

A rough estimate indicates that almost 200 small towns and villages are being served by the portable operators. Apparently the portable circuit can successfully function only in a territory that is built up to a certain extent. In sections—the East, for instance—that are thickly populated, the idea doesn't appear to have grown; neither has it blossomed in such places as Wyoming and Colorado, where it is necessary to go long distances between towns and the expense of transportation makes the idea profitless. Those who have been successful with this type of circuit usually go about 25 miles or so in all directions from their headquarters town.

Non-theatrical accounts in Pennsylvania are reported also to be rapidly spreading and causing much concern to exhibitor interests in the state.

A representative who said he was acting for a high state official within the last week approached sales executives of several large companies in an effort to get groups of pictures. He is said to have offered one company a minimum of 200 school bookings with the possibility of increasing the number to 2,000.

The proposal is reported to concern shorts mainly with a few features tied in. The distributor has not made a decision, but is inclined to turn the deal down because it would conflict with exhibitor contracts now in effect.

Last week, the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners, through Contact, its house organ, criticized Columbia for selling a non-theatrical account. The deal is one of the few the company has made this season.

Robert Kreier has taken over the branch managership in Berlin for Twentieth Century-Fox, succeeding P. M. Brinch.

Three Exhibitor Units to Meet; Fourth Elects

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia, Allied of New Jersey and the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York this week announced future convention dates. The Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association at Akron, Ohio, elected Al Ploenes president to succeed Robert Menches, who had headed the group for seven years. Other officers chosen at the same time were Mr. Menches, first vice-president; Charles Stalder, second vice-president, and J. G. Deetjen, secretary.

The M. P. T. O. of Virginia has set Monday, June 14, as the date for its mid-summer convention which is to be held at the Cavalier Hotel at Virginia Beach. Plans are being completed by William S. Wilder, Norfolk, president, and Sidney J. Gates of Portsmouth, convention chairman. Two meetings are held by the group each year, with stress placed on business at the winter gathering and pleasure the main idea for the other.

Allied of New Jersey is planning to hold its annual convention in June, probably at Atlantic City, Lee Newbury, president, said this week. Last year the meeting was held in September but this year it will be earlier because of the advanced buying. Meanwhile, about 15 members of the organization will attend the Allied national meeting at Milwaukee on May 26-28.

Elections of the I. T. O. A. will be held May 5 at the Hotel Astor on Broadway with Harry Brandt nominated for the presidency for the fifth consecutive year, along with all the other officers. Four changes in the board of directors have been recommended, however. The new board will comprise Maurice Fleischman, chairman; Mr. Brandt, Bernard Barr, George Rudnick, Leon Rosenblatt, Maurice Brown, Louis Meyers, Abe Leff, M. Jonas, Percy Brown, Samuel Rhonheimer, S. Traversi, Leo Brecher, Bernard Pear, Irving Renner, Rudolph Sanders, David Weinstock, John Benas, Hyman Rachmil, Jack Hattem, Otto Lederer, Stanley Lawton and Abe Shenk.

Mr. Jonas, Percy Brown, Mr. Renner and Mr. Lederer will replace Sam Seelenfreund, Louis Shiffman, L. Cooper and Joseph Rosenbloom.

The Ohio exhibitor organization, at the time of its elections, also discussed availability dates for subsequent run houses, with the idea of establishing availability based on admission price. Present availability is based on seating capacity. It was voted to maintain the present policy, which provides an availability of 42 days for all houses, regardless of admission price, excepting only 10-cent houses. The group went on record also as favoring the presentation to the city law director of an ordinance to prevent further theatre construction in Akron. The move was prompted by a recent announcement that two de luxe houses are to be erected there this year.

BOOK REVIEW

HOLLYWOOD'S MOVIE COMMANDMENTS—A Handbook for Motion Picture Writers and Reviewers. By Olga J. Martin. Published by the H. W. Wilson Company, New York. Cloth, 301 pages, indexed.

by TERRY RAMSAYE

An ambitious and decidedly successful recording of what and how the Production Code Administration thinks about the Production Code and its application to the making of motion pictures in Hollywood has been set down by Olga J. Martin, identified on the title page as "former secretary to Joseph I. Breen, Director of the Production Code Administration of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, Inc." This would tend to make the document what might be called ex post facto official.

This compact, succinct and lucid little book tells just what the Code Administration is alleged to want done in relation to screen narrative about such diversions and materials as murder, rape, arson, sabotage, abortion, heroes, forgery, bandits, gangsters, perjury, kidnapping, gigolos, bastardy. There is, in fact, a discussion under most every heading but plain damned fools, against which no code could make the art secure.

In both what it says and what it implies Miss Martin's book is informative, indeed, but being so painstakingly explicit it also creates an opportunity not likely to be neglected to pick holes in the fabric of formulae. Just for instance, and for fun, on page 95 begins a discussion of "Themes Suitable for the Screen", in the course of which are presented comparative lists of apparently "moral" and "immoral" treatments in plot motivation of a theme. The situation is: "A woman is forced by circumstances to support herself—How does she do it?" The first array of treatments begins with: "(1) By making a wealthy marriage; (2) by becoming a plastic surgeon." The second, or bad example, list starts: "(1) By stealing another woman's husband; (2) by committing adultery." This reviewer sees little help or choice. It would appear that if the lady in the story set herself about "making a wealthy marriage", with that as her major purpose, she would be merely indulging in block booking, as opposed to the spot booking operations suggested in the second or naughty category.

The endeavour to formulate decency and taste has to be handled by deft fingers indeed to escape such absurdities. In fact, this reviewer suspects that unless writers and picture makers are inherently decent of intent, no laws, codes, rules or manuals will ever make them so.

Rules tend too often to create provocative inspiration for loop-hole loopers.

However, this is a discussion of a book about the Code. The fore part of it relates some phases of the history of the social relations of the motion picture and events leading up to and including the Code.

There is extensive quotation from the news and editorial pages of Motion Picture Herald in exposition of the importance and significance of the Code, most of them set down by the hand of this reviewer. In spite of this apparent acceptance of the authority of The Herald in such large matters, it is curiously ignored in the specific facts of the origin and history of the Code itself.

On page 19 of Miss Martin's volume appears the statement: "The Code was prepared under the direction of the Hon. Will H. Hays with the counsel and guidance of leaders representing several branches of the motion picture industry. The task of formulating the Code was an enormous one, since it had to be so designed as to embody the basic principles of Christian morality without touching upon the theological beliefs of any one denomination."

The author on page 38 quotes an expression from Terry Ramsaye in Motion Picture Herald of July 11, concerning the Papal Encyclical on motion pictures of July 2, 1936, but, seemingly by strange oversight, did not read in that same discussion the statement that: "It was to this association and to Mr. Hays that Mr. Martin Quigley, publisher of Motion Picture Herald, and its affiliated contemporaries, in 1930 presented the plan and document of the Production Code . . . "

Having laboured in Code service in Hollywood, the author of "Hollywood's Movie Commandments" might also have learned of the basic session of January, 1930, when the same Mr. Quigley in a preliminary session presented the Code idea and won its approval at a special meeting, in Hollywood, of the producers' association of which the Production Code Administration is now a department.

It should not be too much to expect of a volume addressed to writers as a "guide" to display journalistic and documentary accuracy on its own account.

Again, one cannot but take issue with Miss Martin's declaration that the Code "had to be so designed as to embody the basic principles of Christian morality without touching upon the theological beliefs of any one denomination".

That is most unfortunate in a book of this purported character. It was a human and civilized decency for the screen, not delimited by Christianity any more than by any of its creeds, that was, and is, the objective of the founders of the Code movement.

May one offer, in evidence, a declaration from Pope Pius XI, who in that same encyclical said: "Not only Catholics but also highminded Protestants and Jews and many others accepted your lead and joined their efforts with yours in restoring wise standards, both artistic and moral, to the cinema."

The Pope gave space at least for some recognition of even Pagan decency, so it be decency.

Rogers Film to Show on Friday

Theatres throughout the country will exhibit "Lest We Forget," the Will Rogers Memorial short subject, during the week of April 30 when a national collection drive will get under way for the maintenance of the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital at Saranac Lake, N. Y. Robert Taylor and Gary Cooper are starred in the subject which was produced with the coperation of several studios. Adolph Zukor, Will H. Hays, Harry M. Warner and others head the list of motion picture executives launching the campaign.

A Will Rogers Memorial broadcast as part of the campaign to raise the hospital funds was heard last Sunday afternoon over the Columbia Broadcasting System stations. Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, Dick Powell, Leslie Howard and a chorus took part in the program. Anning S. Prall, head of the Federal Communications Commission, closed the broadcast with a talk from Washington. Mr. Prall said, in part, "Even though Will Rogers never held public office he is regarded internationally as one of America's immortals. A hospital to perpetuate his memory was established for the care of the sick and needy in his chosen field—the theatre. I desire to endorse this worthy cause."

A. P. Waxman, who is handling the publicity for the drive, is now back in New York following a visit to Hollywood conferring with various studio officials.

LITTLE CAESAR EXPLODES A BOMBSHELL OF RAVES !

The man who rocked the screen with "Smart Money", "Little Caesar", "Silver Dollar", and "Bullets Or Ballots", now packs all Broadway into the Criterion!

.Y. POST:

"You'll be glad to have seen it—we guarantee!...this new offering does right by both Mr. ROBINSON and the customers...Miss LULI DESTE is as lovely as Merle Oberon and Myrna Loy combined."

N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE:

"An amusing and heartwarming offering . . . EDWARD G. ROBINSON is as brilliantly comic in 'THUNDER IN THE CITY' as he was sinisterly forbidding in his memorable gangster roles . . . acting throughout is of a high order . . . NIGEL BRUCE is splendid."

N.Y. AMERICAN:

"A good fun film . . . amusing sequences...but there's more than comedy to 'THUNDER IN THE CITY'. . . drama is present and romance accounted for...Mr. ROBINSON is ever alert, alive, vital, and brings a bounce to his part that is compelling and convincing all the way."

N.Y. SUN:

"Mr. ROBINSON plays with his customary brisk, effective style...'THUNDER IN THE CITY' is diverting . . . amiable."

N.Y. TIMES:

"Good wholesome fun . . . smoothness and pace."

N.Y. JOURNAL:

"A diverting item . . . neatly spun out."

Montana ASCAP Case Briefs Due May 30

Attorneys for the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and the State of Montana have until May 30 in which to exchange and answer briefs in connection with the test of the new Montana law barring ASCAP from music licensing within the state, Louis D. Frohlich of Schwartz and Frohlich, attorneys for the society, said in New York this week as he arrived from Helena where a federal court heard initial arguments in the case late last week. A decision is expected some time in June.

MGM Denies Conspiracy In Fuller Suit Reply

Unsatisfactory business relations with George Fuller was one of the reasons given by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for refusal to sell him pictures in Florida. The answer was made in New Orleans this week in reply to the suit involving MGM, six others and two Saenger theatre executives on charges of conspiracy. A hearing was set for the latter part of May.

Chaplin Accused of Plagiarism in "Times"

Charles Chaplin was charged this week with pirating scenes from "A Nous La Liberte," French picture, for use in his production "Modern Times." The charges were made in the supreme court in New York by the Films Sonores Tobis Societe Anonyme. The defendants, whom the French company would also permanently enjoin from further distribution of "Modern Times," are the Charles Chaplin Film Corporation and United Artists. The conveyor belt scene in "Modern Times" was allegedly taken bodily from the French production.

Bank Objects to Fox Brooklyn Claim

The Continental Bank and Trust Company of New York as successor trustee of the Flatbush Avenue and Nevins Street Corporation, owners of the Fox Brooklyn office and theatre building, have filed objections in the federal court in New York to the $2,296,797 claim against the corporation filed by Milton C. Weisman, receiver of Fox Theatres. The bank claims that under the order issued on April 23 by Federal Judge William Bondy approving the plan of reorganization, Fox Theatres, being an unsecured creditor, is not entitled to participate in the plan.

Suit Against RCA Dismissed

Federal Judge John W. Clancy has dismissed the complaint of John J. Aurynger in his infringement suit against Radio Corporation of America. The complainant claimed that his patent on a variable condenser had been infringed by one used in RCA receiving sets.

Fox Trustee Wins In Supreme Court

Another chapter in the William Fox receivership was written by the supreme court in Washington Monday when, seeing a possibility that the All-Continent corporation might be "party to a conspiracy to cover up the bankrupt's assets and keep them from his creditors," it reversed a ruling of the third circuit court of appeals and affirmed a decree of the New Jersey district court staying a suit brought in Pennsylvania by the company against Hiram Steelman, Mr. Fox's trustee in bankruptcy.

Back of this week's supreme court decision was a long story of Mr. Steelman's efforts to untangle the affairs of the All-Continent Corporation, declared by him to be a creation of Mr. Fox himself, who had supplied all of its capital and in doing so divested himself of a substantial portion of his property.

After refusal of Eva Fox, wife of the bankrupt and president of All-Continent, to submit to examination and her citation for contempt and a number of hearings of other witnesses, an order was secured directing the corporation to deliver all of its books and records to the trustee for examination and audit.

A stay of the order was secured and on the final day of its effect, All-Continent filed suit in Pennsylvania, as a Fox creditor, to remove a cloud upon the title of personal property claimed by the company originating in a third party subpoena issued out of a federal court in New York in proceedings involving the Capital Company, also a Fox creditor. The property involved consisted of securities exceeding $500,000 in value held by a brokerage house.

Mr. Steelman sought a stay of the Pennsylvania suit, which was granted by the court of bankruptcy; All-Continent appealed and the circuit court of appeals reversed the decree, holding the New Jersey court did not have the power to restrain a suit which the statute clearly authorized to be brought in the Pennsylvania court.

Reversing that decision, the supreme court, in an opinion delivered by Justice Benjamin N. Cardozo, pointed out that "All-Continent Corporation, if there is truth in the charges made by the trustee, is a party to a conspiracy to cover up the bankrupt's assets and keep them from his creditors."

Whether the charges of conspiracy are true, it was pointed out, was not before the supreme court, but if there is a possibility of such a conspiracy the estate should be kept intact until the entry of a decree adjudging the guilt or innocence of the putative conspirators, and to this end, the court held, the bankruptcy court is vested with sufficient power to order a stay of proceedings in the Pennsylvania case.

Liberty Pictures Enjoined

A permanent injunction has been granted Zona Gale enjoining Liberty Pictures Corporation from using her name and the title of her story, "The Way," in connection with their picture "When Strangers Meet."

Gilbert Miller, theatrical producer, has filed suit against Carl Laemmle, Jr., in superior court in Los Angeles seeking a decree confirming title to "The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse."

RCA and Phone Company Granted Injunction

A preliminary injunction in the case of RCA and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company against Collins Radio Company of St. Louis was granted in the United States district court of Wilmington, Del., this week by Judge John P. Neilds.

The plaintiffs alleged that Collins infringed on two DeForest patents which are known as feedback circuits for use with radio vacuum tubes in creating high frequency oscillating currents for radio transmission. Collins claimed prior invention and also that the plaintiffs had the chance of election for use of the Armstrong patent and the DeForest patent and that they first elected the Armstrong patent and that later, when the supreme court found the DeForest patent to be valid, the plaintiffs elected it and extended their monopoly.

Olympia Offer Gets Court's Approval

New England Theatre Corp.'s offer to purchase the assets of Olympia Theatres, bankrupt Paramount subsidiary, for $4,000,000 cash was approved last week by Judge Harold Williams in Superior court in Boston. Consummation of the sale will wind up the five-year-old bankruptcy of Olympia. No objections to the sale were voiced by any Olympia creditor.

Warner Hearing Set

Hearing will be held May 4th in the New York supreme court on the application of Warner Brothers for a bill of particulars in the $15,000 suit brought by Mary McFadden, executrix of the estate of Elmer Ellsworth McFadden, known professionally as Edward Esmonde, claiming that Warner Brothers illegally used the title "Girl Trouble" on a motion picture.

Paramount Sued

Anna L. Miller filed suit in federal court in Los Angeles against Paramount charging infringement of copyright on "Behold My Wife." She asks damages in excess of $5,000, an accounting and an injunction against further exhibition of the picture.

Greta Garbo Is Sued

Greta Garbo was served with a summons in Hollywood this week to appear in federal court at Los Angeles to answer the suit of H. Fitzpatrick, assignee for David Shratter, former head of the Trianon Film Company of Berlin, who is seeking to recover $10,500 which Mr. Shratter claims he loaned the star in 1924. Date of the action has been tentatively set for May 3.

Coast Studio Suit Settled

Approval by United States District Judge Paul J. McCormick of a plan to pay $4,500 down and $3,000 a month ended the ouster suit brought by L. A. Young for the Detroit owners of the studio at 516 Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood.

DUPLICATING FILMS

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

COME CLOSER, FOLKS: James Dunn, Marian Marsh—A nice little picture with Jimmy Dunn as a witty and unquenchable salesman. Average draw. Played March 26.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

CRAIG'S WIFE: Rosalind Russell, John Boles—Having seen this picture several months before playing it, I double billed it with Ken Maynard in "The Fugitive Sheriff." Opening night we had a slight increase over normal business but the following night was a great disappointment. This is a class entertainment that will be a big hit with a few but will fail to appeal to the masses.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

FUGITIVE SHERIFF, THE: Ken Maynard, Beth Marion—We played this with "Craig's Wife" in order to save the day and I believe it did. I cannot say we were satisfied at the box office.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

KING STEPS OUT, THE: Grace Moore, Franchot Tone—This was a good entertaining picture. Our patrons liked Grace Moore in this picture very much. Lots of comedy and was well received by our patrons.—Ruff Bros., Main Street Theatre, Logan, Kan. Small town patronage.

LEGION OF TERROR, THE: Bruce Cabot, Marguerite Churchill—Played on Take a Chance Night to only fair business. A good picture of its type. Played April 9.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAN WHO LIVED TWICE, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Marian Marsh, Isabel Jewell—One of the most unusual pictures we have played. Had a powerful story which held the audiences. Sold to us as a program picture, but it was as good as a lot of specials.—Ruff Bros., Main Street Theatre, Logan, Kan. Small town patronage.

MINE WITH THE IRON DOOR, THE: Richard Arlen, Cecilia Parker—A nice little picture, not a western but just the kind of outdoor scenes and excitement that our younger crowd loves to see. Played April 7.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur, George Bancroft—One of the best pictures we have played. Truly a wonderful picture with down-to-earth comedy romance.—Ruff Bros., Main Street Theatre, Logan, Kan. General patronage.

NORTH OF NOME: Jack Holt, Evelyn Venable—Program production which did fairly well and pleased in about the same proportion. Interesting locally because Holt & Co. were filming a production in this territory at the time. Running time, 62 minutes. Played April 9-10.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

PENNIES FROM HEAVEN: Bing Crosby, Madge Evans—Since one cannot turn on the radio without hearing snatches of this song, we cashed in on this very timely advertising and in spite of bad weather were pleased at the results. Played March 14.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

THEODORA GOES WILD: Irene Dunne, Melvyn Douglas—This is the second time we have played this film. It was put on with a local fashion show on the last date and outdrew the first date as a double feature. Irene Dunne has always been a favorite of mine and my neighbors must feel the same way about her, for they came in droves and enjoyed themselves. Thank you, Columbia. Played April 18-19.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

THEODORA GOES WILD: Irene Dunne, Melvyn Douglas—We take our hats off to Columbia and Irene Dunne for the merriest and most delirious comedy of this or any other year. Our audience just "ate it up," laughed long and heartily, and all but stood up and cheered at the finish of the picture. We'd like to give Irene Dunne a whole bundle of Winchell's orchids for her splendid characterization as Theodora, and in handing them out we would not forget Melvyn Douglas for his superb bit of teamwork. As for the producer, Columbia, all we can say is they have made a mark for other companies to shoot at with a perfect trilogy, "It Happened One Night," "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" and "Theodora." Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 17.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Rockefeller Center, New York

THEY MET IN A TAXI: Chester Morris, Fay Wray—Played on the same bill with "North of Nome." This proved a splendid comedy contrast. Program fare but better than average. Running time, 70 minutes. Played April 9-10.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

THEY MET IN A TAXI: Chester Morris, Fay Wray, Lionel Stander—We did not have to hide when the patrons came out after they saw this picture, as everybody wore smiles and congratulated us on this picture. Just give us more like this one. We consider this as good as a special.—Ruff Bros., Main Street Theatre, Logan, Kan. Small town patronage.

UNKNOWN RANGER, THE: Robert Allen, Martha Tibbetts—Our first picture with this new western star. We had a small crowd owing to a snowstorm, but think the picture made a favorable impression. The singing was especially good and that is what folks want in westerns nowadays.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

First National

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1937: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—A very entertaining musical. Good story and some very nice dancing. Somehow, these kind of pictures don't register at our box office as they used to. Played April 10-11.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

SING ME A LOVE SONG: James Melton, Patricia Ellis—Excellent. Good story, excellent cast with Zasu Pitts and Allen Jenkins stealing the show, at least, in my judgment. James Melton is plenty good and the entire cast give a good performance. Pleased. Running time, 79 minutes. Played April 10-11.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WHITE ANGEL, THE: Kay Francis, Ian Hunter—This picture did not have appeal for our audiences, but personally thought it a good picture. It would no doubt go over better in larger towns.—Ruff Bros., Main Street Theatre, Logan, Kan. Small town patronage.

GB Pictures

EVERYTHING IS THUNDER: Constance Bennett, Douglas Montgomery—A good title has been wasted on a very bad picture. Bennett was never worse. Poor audience comment.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

NINE DAYS A QUEEN: Nova Pilbeam, Cedric Hardwicke—A pompous affair that all school teachers should love. Heavy, humorless and magnificently produced, it appealed to the more literate patrons.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RHODES: Walter Huston—This is one of the finest pictures that Gaumont British has released. Unlike so many pictures which attempt to glorify a man and be epic in scope, this production never deviates from its purpose of logically presenting the highlights of his career without taint of hero worship. The audience response was unusually good; in fact, better than we expected.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SECRET AGENT: Madeleine Carroll, Peter Lorre, Robert Young, John Gielgud—Had it not been for the poor sound and the clipped speech of the English players, this film would have been highly rated by our patrons, who enjoy stories such as this. The title and stars had box office value but word-of-mouth did the picture harm.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Grand National

GIRL LOVES BOY: Eric Linden, Cecilia Parker—This one is a natural; a down-to-earth picture that will please 100 per cent. Linden is, as usual, very good; Cecilia Parker plays the best role I have seen her in yet, and those McCarthy Kids nearly steal the show, especially little Penny. A swell story, a little comedy, a little music, a possible tear, the most brilliant photography I have ever seen, fair recording, and with each character handling their part to perfection, makes this one of the best pictures I have ever had. The title is bad, but if you can get them in, they will go out smiling. Played to average business. Played April 10-11.—R. V. Rule, Gym Theatre, Beaverton, Mich. General patronage.

23½ HOURS LEAVE: James Ellison, Terry Walker, Arthur Lake—This comedy offering brought a lot of good, hearty laughs. Nothing big, but pleasing. Ellison handles his part well without overdoing it, and pretty Terry Walker is very good. The photography is superb, but the recording is not quite up to standard. Played to average business. Played April 3-4.—R. V. Rule, Gym Theatre, Beaverton, Mich. General patronage.

WE'RE IN THE LEGION NOW: Reginald Denny, Esther Ralston—A dismal flop here. Played April 15-16.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Invincible

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AFTER THE THIN MAN: William Powell, Myrna Loy—All to the good. Had good Sunday business, but did not hold up for three days.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ALL AMERICAN CHUMP: Stuart Erwin, Betty Furness—In spite of a good cast, this one did not please. Erwin is very good, but for some reason it failed to click. Running time, 64 minutes. Played March 31-April 1.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

BORN TO DANCE: Eleanor Powell, James Stewart, Una Merkel, Buddy Ebsen—It is a pleasure to run a picture like this, for you can meet your patrons when they come out and not have to apologize. Attendance not as good as the picture merits but it pleased one hundred per cent. In my opinion Eleanor Powell has the most pleasing personality of any star on the screen and that, together with her dancing, is enough to put over any show, but in this one she has an excellent supporting cast. Don't see why they do not give Una Merkel bigger and better parts, for she is plenty good. Buddy Ebsen is a one man comedy, and with a good story, catchy tunes and Dave Gould dance ensembles this one has everything needed for perfect screen entertainment. Running time, 108 minutes. Played April 16-18.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SUPREX CARBONS

HELP MAKE YOUR THEATRE Safe

Recently published records show that a major factor contributing to accidents in motion picture theatres is the low visibility experienced by patrons entering the darkened interior from the brilliant light of the street. Darkened interiors are necessary when the level of screen illumination is low, but SUPREX CARBONS provide an intensity of screen illumination which permits supplementary lighting adequate for comfortable vision from the moment of entrance.

CAMILLE: Greta Garbo, Robert Taylor—Distinctly not for this situation as the comments and box office returns all too plainly indicated. A mighty fine production of its kind but I only hope we don't get too many of this type. Our patrons will not turn out for them. Running time, 104 minutes. Played April 4-6.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

DANGEROUS NUMBER: Robert Young, Ann Sothern—Very, very ordinary screen fare from a company like MGM. Nothing to this and our patrons did not forget to tell us about it. Running time, 71 minutes. Played April 7-8.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

GREAT ZIEGFELD: William Powell, Luise Rainer, Myrna Loy—Showed this picture at an advance in prices and no one seemed to object. It is grand entertainment from the beginning to the end of its unusual length. It cannot help but increase the prestige of your theatre.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

LIBELED LADY: Jean Harlow, William Powell, Spencer Tracy, Myrna Loy—Much better than I figured it would be from seeing the trailer. We were pleased with the box office receipts that these great stars drew in and I think every one of our patrons enjoyed the picture. Played April 4.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

LONGEST NIGHT, THE: Robert Young, Florence Rice—I had read some adverse criticisms on this one and was rather afraid it would not click, but it seemed to please. Running time, 51 minutes. Played March 24-25.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MAN OF THE PEOPLE: Joseph Calleia, Florence Rice—Very good picture, with practically no name draw. We consider Joseph Calleia one of the finest of the coming screen players, but he is not of the romantic type and his name is not box office yet. Neither is Florence Rice, but she's a sweet gal! Running time, 81 minutes. Played April 14-15.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

OLD HUTCH: Wallace Beery, Cecilia Parker—A great picture. Wally Beery and his dog discover money hidden in the bank of their favorite fishing retreat and without spending a cent of it Wally undergoes a transformation that is delightful. Played March 21.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

OLD HUTCH: Wallace Beery, Cecilia Parker—If you can get this in they'll go out satisfied. A very fine picture. It opened up strong but fell down on us. Everybody liked it. We had a cloudburst the last day and feel this was the source of poor business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

VOICE OF BUGLE ANN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Maureen O'Sullivan—If you have any dog lovers you have a picture made to order, as the hunting scenes and sounds are next to perfect in this one. Played March 23.—Roy Pringle, Eureka Theatre, Fabens, Texas. General patronage.

WOMEN ARE TROUBLE: Stuart Erwin, Florence Rice—Everyone who saw this picture liked it very much. Stuart Erwin has always been a favorite with us. Played April 9.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BIG BROADCAST OF 1937, THE: Jack Benny, Burns and Allen, Bob Burns, Martha Raye—Better than average musical comedy, but action galore during the entire show. Running time, 100 minutes. Played April 4-5.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE HOLIDAY: Jack Benny, Burns and Allen, Martha Raye—Better than "Big Broadcast," but did not draw worth a cent. Probably played it too close to "Big Broadcast," and Paramount should have known better than to do this to us. Running time, 87 minutes. Played April 11-12.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE HOLIDAY: Jack Benny, Martha Raye, George Burns and Gracie Allen—This was a real surprise to us, giving us outstanding week end business. We were rather inclined to pull it, hearing and reading adverse criticisms, but now we're glad we didn't.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

FIVE CONTRIBUTORS JOIN THE REPORTERS

Five exhibitors who join the corps of contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" this week hail from the Middle West and Far West. They are:

John S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Michigan.

R. V. Rule, Gym Theatre, Beaverton, Michigan.

Ruff Brothers, Main Street Theatre, Logan, Kansas.

John A. Gavan, Broadway Theatre, Butte, Montana.

Claud Thorp, Gem Theatre, Ryan, Oklahoma.

Read the reports of these showmen in the columns of the department in this issue.

LADY BE CAREFUL: Lew Ayres, Mary Carlisle, Larry Crabbe—Dandy little picture. Drew an unexpected crowd, so all was well.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

ROSE BOWL: Eleanore Whitney, Tom Brown—More than pleased our weekend patrons. Was filled with plenty of comedy, sports and music, but not too much of any of them. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 2-3.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER: Ralph Bellamy, Katherine Locke, David Holt—Average program picture which, with Sweepstakes, pulled good business. Held the interest and built up to a good climax, but all in all nothing to get excited about. Running time, 66 minutes. Played April 14.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SWING HIGH, SWING LOW: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—This was O. K. Good in any spot. Well liked. Running time, 92 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

TRAIL DUST: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—One of the best "Hop-a-Long" series. Pleased. Played April 9-10.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

TRAIL DUST: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—About the best in this extra good series of westerns. All the kids as well as a lot of grown-ups want to know when "Hoppy" is coming again.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

DON'T TURN 'EM LOOSE: Lewis Stone, James Gleason, Bruce Cabot—A very good picture if you can get them in. We starved on it. The acting of Lewis Stone, as usual, is wonderful. Played March 17-18.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

LET'S SING AGAIN: Bobby Breen, Henry Armetta—A nice program picture. Bobby Breen has a nice voice. We played this old and did not do business. Played April 2.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

PARK AVENUE LOGGER: George O'Brien, Beatrice Roberts—George, I hope you never get too old to be in pictures. This is one of your best, and our town wishes you would make six a year.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PLOUGH AND THE STARS, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—Irish or English pictures don't go with my patrons. Their ideas of pictures are 20 years behind us. And patrons thought this was one of the worst. Running time, 74 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

RAINBOW ON THE RIVER: Bobby Breen, May Robson—They'll have to do better by Bobby than this. Overloaded on the sentimental angle and too much singing. This clicked at the box office but did not make any new Breen fans nor did it please too well those who had been fans before seeing this one. Running time, 87 minutes. Played March 31-April 1.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RAINBOW ON THE RIVER: Bobby Breen, May Robson, Charles Butterworth, Louise Beavers—Very good picture. Fair drawing power. Some comments.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

SEA DEVILS: Victor McLaglen, Ida Lupino, Preston Foster—Good melodramatic picture fare which pleased and pulled very well. However, think it better in small town situations to play it on a Friday-Saturday change. Running time, 87 minutes. Played April 11-13.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

WHEN'S YOUR BIRTHDAY?: Joe E. Brown, Marian Marsh—Not as funny as some he has made, but it's good and drew good business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Republic

COMIN' 'ROUND THE MOUNTAIN: Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford, Smiley Burnette—This Gene Autry picture did a capacity business for us. Gene Autry, with each picture, is becoming more popular, and is the only western star that has feminine appeal. Republic has the best westerns on the market.—John A. Gavan, Broadway Theatre, Butte, Mont. General patronage.

FOLLOW YOUR HEART: Marion Talley, Michael Bartlett—This picture has the unfortunate distinction of being too highbrow for the lowbrows and a trifle too undercrust for the upper strata. In other word, producer Nat Levine has spent a larger amount than usual on a musical that has neither mass or class appeal. Miss Talley, fine of voice, can hardly be referred to as one of the glamour girls of the screen, and if Republic has high hopes for her it is barking up the wrong tree.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth Texas. General patronage.

HEARTS IN BONDAGE: James Dunn, Mae Clarke—Dull but nicely produced. Because of its name value it was used as part of a double bill, for which purpose it sufficed quite satisfactorily.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MAN BETRAYED, A: Eddie Nugent, Kay Hughes—A very inexpensively produced picture that will need all the support it can get from a companion feature.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MANDARIN MYSTERY, THE: Eddie Quillan, Charlotte Henry—Eddie Quillan struggles valiantly but futilely to overcome the handicap of a badly written story which can lay claim to the worst dialogue we have ever heard. Strangely enough, however, our patrons seemed to enjoy the film.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BANJO ON MY KNEE: Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea—Thoroughly enjoyable picture. Stars good, but don't overlook the clever music and acting of Walter Brennan, and the singing and dancing of Buddy Ebsen. Anthony Martin contributes good song numbers. Locale: Lower Mississippi and New Orleans. Played April 11-12.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

CAN THIS BE DIXIE?: Jane Withers, Slim Summerville—This made a hit here. Played three days Started out slow, but picked up to a grand finish. It may be short on story and direction, but the song and dance numbers and the comedy put it over in great style.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE OPERA: Warner Oland, Boris Karloff—Very good. Pleased. Warner Oland, as Chan, has a good following here. Played April 7-8.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

COUNTRY BEYOND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Paul Kelly—This is an old picture that went over with a bang nevertheless. Some thought it the best they had ever seen. Played March 13.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

DIMPLES: Shirley Temple, Frank Morgan—I did not consider this as good as some of Shirley's shows, but it was good enough to please one hundred per cent. Frank Morgan gives an excellent performance, and the Hall Johnson Choir adds much to the entertainment value of the feature. Still, it is Shirley's show. Running time, 78 minutes. Played April 3-5.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

jou, Don Ameche, Ritz Brothers—Words fail me on this picture. It comes as close to being the perfect entertainment as we can ever hope to find in this world. It brought us the most business we have seen in a month of Sundays and, better yet, it pleased every single person to the nth degree. Fox has a real star in Sonja Henie, who is not only a marvelous skater but has a fresh and unspoiled personality which, if she retains it, will make her the best box-office attraction the screen has ever had. Where is that guy who said that Fox was all washed up a year or so ago? Personally, we'd like to meet Mr. Zanuck because he certainly has an uncanny knack of producing pictures that the public wants. I doff my hat to Fox who has my unqualified vote as the top producer of the year and the best bet for exhibitors everywhere. The fox has outsmarted the mighty lion! Played April 11-12.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

ON THE AVENUE: Dick Powell, Madeleine Carroll, Alice Faye—A thoroughly entertaining piece of film fare which for some reason failed to make a creditable box office showing. Pleased plenty of those who did turn out. Running time, 89 minutes. Played March 28-30.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

ON THE AVENUE: Dick Powell, Madeleine Carroll, Alice Faye, Ritz Brothers—The best musical we've had for a long time. Drew slightly above average.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PIGSKIN PARADE: Stuart Erwin, Patsy Kelly—Made to order for the small town. Pleased not only the football fans, but most of the other patrons. Patsy is plenty good in this one. Running time, 93 minutes. Played March 27-28.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SING, BABY, SING: Alice Faye, Adolphe Menjou, Ted Healy, Patsy Kelly—Pleased. Bank night helped draw a large crowd. Played April 14-15.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

STOWAWAY: Shirley Temple, Robert Young—One of Shirley's best. It is always a treat to have Shirley's pictures play.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

United Artists

ESCAPE ME NEVER: Elisabeth Bergner, Hugh Sinclair—I didn't know what to do with this picture. There seemed no place for it, either for Sunday, Saturday or Bank Night. So put it in on an extra day and was surprised to know it paid its way and pleased. Played March 19.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S.D. Small town patronage.

AGENCY, INC.

Three-mile-a-minute speed is no further away than your telephone. When minutes mean money, call any Railway Express office for the only nation-wide AIR EXPRESS service. It saves time, worry, and money because AIR EXPRESS flies your shipments 2500 miles overnight—offers you day and night service direct to 216 cities in the United States and Canada—and to Honolulu, Guam, Manila and 82 Latin-American countries. If it's RUSH, remember, phone RAILWAY EXPRESS.

THESE THREE: Merle Oberon, Joel McCrea, Miriam Hopkins—Proving that an old good picture beats a new mediocre one. This pulled and pleased. Running time, 93 minutes. Played April 7-8.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

THINGS TO COME: Raymond Massey—If anyone liked this one they did not mention it. If you have it bought, pay for it and don't run it. Most of those who came thought it would be similar to "Just Imagine" and were disappointed and told me so. Raymond Massey gives a fine performance but no star can put over a dud like this one. Played April 14-15.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Universal

FLYING HOSTESS: Judith Barrett, William Hall—Here is a splendid program-type picture. It is a picture we did not know much about, and knowing it would not draw with no star values, we reduced our admission to 10-15c on it. This was a big mistake. It will rank with many of the socalled specials. Boost it. You will have a real surprise. Played April 7-8.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

LOVE BEFORE BREAKFAST: Carole Lombard, Preston Foster—A fairly good picture. Would go in most any small town.—Ruff Bros., Main Street Theatre, Logan, Kan. Small town patronage.

MY MAN GODFREY: William Powell, Carole Lombard—This picture seems to have been well advertised. Everyone talking about it, and we were delighted with the results.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S.D. Small town patronage.

Warner Bros.

CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE: Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland—A wonderful picture that did not do business. We are one of the unfortunates who bought this on a 50 per cent basis. It is great to have the producers willing to share in your profits, but do not care to share your losses. Played March 20-21.—C. W. Bennett, Arcade Theatre, Middleville, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE: Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland—Just didn't bring them in on Sunday. Only a school matinee on Monday afternoon saved it from being a bigger loss than it was. My folks just aren't interested in English history films, as I remember only too well from having played "Cavalcade" some years ago. Played March 7-8.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FUGITIVE IN THE SKY: Jean Muir, Warren Hull—An air thriller that pleased. Mary Treen is especially good. Running time, 58 minutes. Played April 7-8.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GREAT O'MALLEY, THE: Pat O'Brien, Sybil Jason—Patrons all thought this was a good programer. Running time, 69 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

SMART BLONDE: Glenda Farrell, Barton McLane—Another of those short Vitagraph double-feature programers which just get across and that's all. Running time, 59 minutes. Played April 9-10.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

BOY AND HIS DOG, A: Color Rhapsodies—A little boy treats his dog rather roughly. Then, in a dream, the dog turns tables on him. Unusually good. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

OH, DUCHESS: Polly Moran—A good two-reel comedy with plenty of laughs and roughhouse, with Polly Moran her usual roisterous, boisterous self. A good filler for any program. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Educational

BLUE BLAZES: Buster Keaton—Buster is always liked here, and this gave satisfaction, although it is not his best. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CHEMIST, THE: Two-Reel Comedies — Swell comedy. Had all howling and pleased all.—Running time, 19 minutes.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

SALTY McGUIRE: Terry-Toons—Uninteresting.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TIN CAN TOURIST, THE: Terry-Toons—Very enjoyable.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AT SEA ASHORE: Patsy Kelly Comedies.—This comedy brought the house down. Well worth playing.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

BOSKO'S EASTER EGGS: Harman-Ising—Not too good. Running time, 8 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

EVERY SUNDAY: Deanna Durbin, Judy Garland—Very fine musical with a neat little plot. Worth advertising, for it will please. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

ST. HELENA AND ITS MAN OF DESTINY: FitzPatrick Travel Talk—Very interesting and beautiful, but there should be music or something to break the monotony of the commentator's voice. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TWO LITTLE PUPS: Harman-Ising—A cute color cartoon.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

Paramount

GRAMPY'S INDOOR OUTING: Betty Boop Cartoon—Good cartoon in the Betty Boop series. Running time, 7 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MUSICAL CHARMERS: Phil Spitalny and Girl Orchestra—Very much appreciated. Brought a good hand at the finish. Well worth playing.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

POPULAR SCIENCE: No. 6—Very good. Paramount shorts have been well worth playing.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

RKO Radio

BAD HOUSEKEEPING: Edgar Kennedy Comedy—Good laugh-getter. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SINGING IN THE AIR: Headliner Series—It isn't funny and the girl can't sing. Why they made it, I don't know. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SWAMP LAND: Struggle to Live Series—Another splendid short in the Struggle series. These have all been exceptionally interesting subjects. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

DONALD AND PLUTO: Mickey Mouse—One of the best Mickey Mouse cartoons we have ever screened, if laughter can be used as an indicator. Running time, 8 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

THREE BLIND MOUSEKETEERS: Silly Symphonies—Another dandy Silly Symphony. Running time, 8 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Vitaphone

BRING ON THE GIRLS: Big Time Vaudeville Reel—Very good single reel. Running time, 10 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CLYDE LUCAS AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—Another excellent Melody Master. Running time, 10 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

COLORFUL OCCUPATIONS: Colortour Adventure Series—Strange occupations in color. Interesting. Running time, 10 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

"GIVE ME LIBERTY": John Litel—Vitagraph certainly deserves the medal on this one for there is more entertainment in it than in lots of features. Beautiful color and good cast. Running time, 22 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PORKY, THE RAINMAKER: Looney Tunes—A laughable cartoon.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

816 Communities Using New Time

Daylight Saving Time will be used in approximately the same total of cities and towns in the United States and Canada this year as last, although there is a slight falling off in the total to 816 communities for this year in the statistics available.

New York towns registered a gain in favor of the added hour of sunlight. The total this year is 328, a gain of eight. Marked increases are also registered in Maine and New Hampshire. The Maine figure this year will be 76 as compared to 59 last year. The New Hampshire total will be 116 as compared to only 31 in 1936. Vermont also swung in favor of the change with 13 towns setting clocks ahead as compared to only three last year.

Statistics assembled by the Merchants' Association of New York show that all New Jersey communities will adopt the change again this year. In Pennsylvania, 90 communities are using it as compared to 93 last year. In Delaware, cities, towns and villages will make the change effective generally this year when only 11 used the added hour system last year. In Massachusetts the observance is required by state law and all Rhode Island communities will observe it also. Ohio will continue on Eastern Standard Time as it has done since 1927, with the exception of a few small towns.

Indiana will have 19 towns on the change while 20 observed it last year. Illinois remains unchanged at 93 communities. Michigan will use Eastern Standard Time except for a few communities while Georgia will have four towns on the new system and in Minnesota large business establishments will shift their schedules without changing their clocks. Idaho reports four Daylight Time communities and Colorado only one, Denver.

Seventy-two towns in Quebec, Ontario and the prairie provinces of Canada changed their clocks. This also is true in New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia. In Labrador and Newfoundland the change runs from May 1 to October 2.

Shumaker Again Heads Erpi Picture Consultants

E. E. Shumaker this week was re-elected president of Erpi Picture Consultants, subsidiary of Electrical Research Products, Inc., at the annual board meeting. Charles Olajos was elected assistant treasurer and John McGilvray assistant secretary at the same time.

Dickinson Adds Theatre

Glen W. Dickinson Theatres, Inc., has acquired control of the Peoples theatre at Pleasant Hill, Mo. Wayne Jenkins, former owner, will continue as manager.

Robin Opens Offices

J. E. Robin, formerly executive secretary of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association, Inc., is now operating as a wholesale sales engineer under the company name of J. E. Robin, Inc., in New York.

Poster Office Moves

The Chicago Poster Exchange moved from 726 South Wabash Avenue in Chicago this week to new quarters at 1257 South Wabash Avenue.

Siegel Head of Republic Studio

Moe J. Siegel this week was elected president and chairman of the board of Republic Productions, Inc., producing subsidiary of Republic Pictures.

Mr. Siegel started in the motion picture industry in 1917 with Selznick Pictures Corporation. He later joined Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., as a vice-president, and before coming to Hollywood served as president of the American Record Company, manufacturers of Brunswick, Columbia and other phonograph records.

A few months ago Mr. Siegel installed the unit system of production at the Republic studios and working under him now are the following producers: Colbert Clark, Leonard Fields, Harry Grey, Alvert E. Levey, Armand Schaefer, Herman Schlom and Sol C. Siegel.

Dismiss Erpi Action On Infringement Charge

Federal Judge Vincent L. Leibell has signed an order dismissing the infringement action brought by Thomas Bullitt Dixon against the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, Inc. The order follows an affirmance of the circuit court of appeals of the dismissal of the suit after trial. The action was commenced in February, 1932, alleging infringement on a patent covering amplifying apparatus used in radio and television receiving and producing and sound recording and reproduction for films and television.

CONCILIATION BOARDS OR SUITS, IS WARNING

MPTOA Sees Alternative Unless Distributors Cooperate; Trust Drive on Films Denied

A warning that a wave of anti-trust suits and attempts to obtain state and federal regulatory legislation can be expected from disgruntled theatre owners unless distributors cooperate in establishment of the projected conciliation boards was given exhibitors in a general bulletin of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, issued this week. The bulletin placed the responsibility for further work in setting up the boards on distributors.

Washington entered the trade practice situation this week with reports that the Administration is considering measures which will restore important phases of the NRA and with a denial from the Department of Justice that a "trust busting" campaign directed against the motion picture industry is being contemplated.

Preliminary bills dealing with the establishment of minimum wages and maximum working hours, the elimination of child labor, creation of a fair trade practices system for all industry, possibly to be administered by the Federal Trade Commission, and the elimination of spying on workers and the prohibition of strike breakers, were reported in Washington to have been shown to labor and industrial leaders for criticism and suggestions.

The labor and wage legislation was being studied by John Winant, former governor of New Hampshire; Thomas Corcoran, attorney for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; Benjamin Cohen, attorney, who helped to draft the Security and Exchange Commission laws, and James M. Landis, chairman of the SEC.

In denying any wide or purposeful campaign against the motion picture industry, Homer S. Cummings, attorney general, said that individual cases of violation of the anti-trust laws will be investigated and prosecuted. The department has a number of cases under consideration, it was reported, and several agents have been engaged for some time in studies of complaints involving film distributors. Details of the cases were refused.

Bulletin Points Alternative

The MPTOA bulletin posed the question, "Do distributors prefer to fight out the question of regulation of trade practices in court and invite federal and state regulation by statute and commissions?"

The present policy of delay, particularly in the matter of the conciliation boards, will inevitably lead to such a result, the bulletin continued.

Conceding that six of the ten proposals comprising the organization's trade practice program are dependent on the establishment of the boards, the publication said that the failure of distributors to take the initiative in setting them up is their "definite, direct responsibility."

The bulletin set forth that seven of eight major companies participated in the concessions granted under the program; that from the seven, a ten per cent cancellation privilege was obtained, where the program called for one of 20 per cent, and that four of the seven agreed to eliminate the separate score charge. Recalling that all of the companies rejected the proposal for a short form of contract, the bulletin expressed a doubt that the exhibitors themselves wanted one.

At the recent Miami convention of the exhibitor organization resolutions were adopted calling for the full accomplishment of the ten point plan without any compromise. Edward Kuykendall, president of association, plans a two month trip to lay before exhibitor leaders in all sections of the country a new plan of action for forcing distributor acceptance of the program.

Commenting on the passage of the Allied theatre divorce bill in North Dakota, the bulletin said, "It is reported to have cost this faction of exhibitors a lot of money to put this over, but they get exactly nothing for their contributions, not even good will."

UMPTO Protests Contracts

Members of the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Philadelphia at a meeting this week protested against buying films by number instead of definite stories or stars. Calling the contract sheet a variation of "the numbers racket," the protesting members said that a test case would be instituted.

The unit also heard further protests against the sale to non-theatrical accounts by Columbia. Without taking action as a body the group advocated that exhibitors pull dates on the company in protest. Universal also was accused of stimulating church accounts but it was said that the company has indicated that it would drop the practice.

Momand Suit in Boston

The anti-trust suit filed by Loretta L. Momand for $100,000 against major companies, charging conspiracy and restraint of trade against the Odeon theatre, Shawnee, Okla., is to be tried in the United States district court in Boston, the court having decided in favor of George S. Ryan, attorney for Mrs. Momand, who argued that the court should accept jurisdiction in spite of the defendants' contention that it would be more convenient for all concerned to try the case in Oklahoma.

A hearing on the defendants' request that the Massachusetts court decline to hear the case was held six weeks ago. The ruling was regarded as a precedent.

Kansas City Fight Continues

George Baker, manager of the Electric, and president of the Theatre Owners Association of Kansas City, Kansas, has written all distributors in his territory asking for a conference to discuss demands of Kansas City, Kansas, exhibitors for first run clearance. The majority of local exchange managers indicated that they will confer individually with the exhibitors as requested.

The demand of exhibitors in Kansas's largest city are backed by city officials, including judges and the mayor, the Kansas City Kansan, and last week the Chamber of Commerce added its voice to the others. Judge Joseph H. McDowell even carried the fight to the radio, and over KCKN asserted that "theatre owners should fight to remedy this situation. And the distributors, who are blamed for maintaining the system, should be forced to recognize Kansas City, Kansas, as an individual city."

Kansas City, Kansas, theatres want the Electric and Granada, which now play pictures 28-35 days behind first runs in Kansas City, Mo., to have film day and date with first runs in Kansas City, Mo. The other Kansas City, Kansas, theatres then would be "second run" instead of "third run," which they now claim to be. Top admission at the Granada and Electric is 25 cents.

James Lundy has joined the Walter Wanger publicity staff in Hollywood as a feature writer. He will work under Alex Gottlieb.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THOSE OUTSIDE CONTACTS

The member who dropped in to visit a few days back has been the manager of a subsequent-run independent theatre in a nearby Jersey spot for a short time. His theatre plays way back after the other houses in town all of which are circuit controlled. Having much less to spend for advertising it was difficult at first for the lad to obtain newspaper cooperation or hook his house to the better merchandising tieins.

Not a bit dismayed by the situation the young bucko gave the layout some thought and managed with the assistance of the Legion and other powerful local organizations to launch a series of drives that benefited worthy and highly-held charities. So well did he plan that the same papers which previously ignored him were forced by the news value of his campaigns to break sizeable stories on his doings, in which of course the theatre was prominently mentioned.

Then the big boys in the community including the leading merchants began to look with favor upon the manager's activities to the extent that he was recently tendered the post of chamber of commerce secretary and accepting, continued his fine work for the community. All this of course redounds to the credit of his theatre which has made such strides in gaining local goodwill and prestige that the house is showing a neat profit and the manager given a number of gratifying raises.

The snapper of the story, however, is this:

Serving on an important chamber of commerce committee with the Round Tabler is the business manager of the leading paper, which in the past has expressed no desire to cooperate on any of the theatre's campaigns. Recently the newspaper executive won over by the showman's civic activities thought it might be a good idea if the theatre and the paper got together on a contest.

THE YEARSLEY PIN-POLL SURVEY

Since the newspaper is generally accepted as the most effective of theatre advertising mediums, your average manager endeavors to insure the widest possible coverage by taking space in as many dailies and weeklies as his budget permits. What particular papers his patrons read is of course important to the theatreman, but equally important is that they take some paper in which his ad appears. That there might be a more exact method of determining the actual returns from space in one certain paper over another may occur, but for the majority of managers with few facilities for analysis and little time to inaugurate a comprehensive survey, the method of placing advertising follows a generally accepted, even if often faulty, pattern.

In an attempt to get away from this rule-of-thumb procedure, and in addition to find out where his patronage came from, C. L. ("Bill") Yearsley, of Warners' Roosevelt Theatre, Philadelphia, instituted what he terms a Pin-Poll Survey, the details of which were set down in last week's issue. What the survey accomplished is told by able David E. ("Skip") Weshner, Yearsley's district manager, from whose letter on the subject we quote as follows:

"The Pin-Poll Survey revealed not only the pulling power of the particular theatre but showed us where we could concentrate in order to secure additional patronage. In addition it gave us the proper slant on the value not only of the big Philadelphia dailies but also the local neighborhood weeklies. Mr. Yearsley's survey therefore showed us where we could not only get new patronage but also gave us an idea of which newspapers to concentrate on in order to get the most for our money. The intelligent manner in which this whole survey was handled prompts me to believe that other wide-awake managers would do well to do likewise."

Wide-awake managers will no doubt be inclined to do likewise, especially since—and more importantly—Mr. Weshner reports further the information garnered has proved so valuable that he is instituting the survey in other of the houses under his jurisdiction.

SOLVING A PROBLEM

The promotion of assistant to manager and the advancement from service head to assistant are procedures in the best interest of theatre operation and the strengthening of personnel-morale. But how to insure the proper development of this important manpower is something else again, a vexing problem that is on the way to solution through such far-sighted plannings as the RKO Midwest Theatres Student Managers' School.

That two of the students have already been promoted and further advancements slated for other of the pupils in the not too distant future indicates the kind of a job the school is doing in training the ambitious.

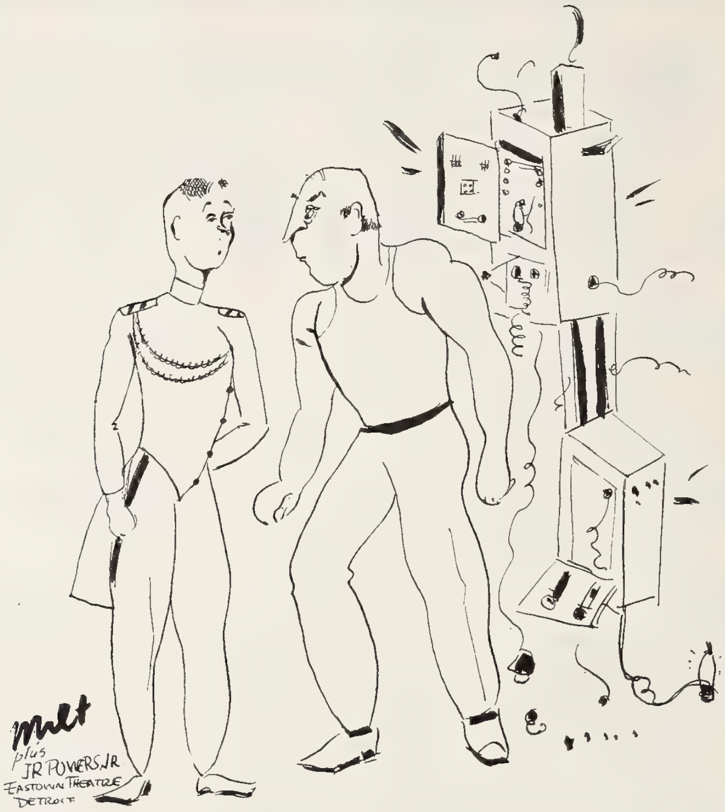
SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!



ANGRY PROJECTIONIST: "WELL, WELL, SONNY, SO THE SOUND IS OFF, IS IT?" ! !

Newspaper Swaps Space On "Top of the Town"

In return for a screen plug on the Minneapolis Journal, Manager William Sears and publicity agent Robert Haley, Orpheum Theatre, secured a "run-of-the-paper" display ad on "Top of the Town." They promoted a two-way tieup with a local novelty company, by which they were lent an automatic phonograph for their lobby, playing hit numbers, and had the same set-up reproduced in the outer entry of the novelty company's store. Stores sent out Doris Nolan enclosures on Kragshire Coronation Coats with all monthly statements. Enclosures carried picture of Nolan plus a plug on "Top of the Town."

Model In Lobby Swing Sells "Ready" Date

In a lattice-work background in the lobby of the new Spreckels, San Diego, Cal., Al Sobler attracted attention for "Ready, Willing and Able" by constructing a swing strong enough to support a good looking gal. Model in smart Spring outfit provided the animation, made more attractive by a color scheme of pale green with fresh flowers intertwined in the lattice-work for further seasonal touches. Same idea was later used for a smart department store window display to advertise new line of garden frocks.

Elaborate tiein was made with a soft-drink manufacturer who used the title as a tag line for his product with a plug from Ruby Keeler. Beverage company planted window cards in every spot handling the drink and bannered all trucks with theatre copy. Same slant was carried out with smaller cards distributed at sport events and other similar gatherings ahead of the date.

For "King and Chorus Girl," Sobler arranged for a two-color over-printing of shopping news, front page with sock copy and theatre credits. The line "Food fit for a king served here" was tied in with imprinted paper doilies carrying scene cut from the picture with the copy. These were used in the better local eating places. Same line was stressed by leading grocery chain on back page of herald placed in all outgoing packages. Decorated truck promoted from Ford distributor and carrying costumed girls (see photo) was found effective.

Ice Cream Party Put On By Gooch

Coincident with the opening of National Ice Cream Week on April 17, Francis Gooch made a neat promotion with local ice cream manufacturers to sponsor a special ten-cent Saturday morning show, the advertising stressing the distribution of free cream to all juveniles attending. Trailers in advance, announcements from the stage by the manager and extra newspaper advertising by the sponsors plugging the show were found effective. Lobby displays on the party were also exhibited and on the morning of the show placed out front at the boxoffice.

In addition to the free ice cream, the children were also instructed how they could obtain movie star albums and star photos by saving the tops of the paper cups in which the cream was packed. On entering the house the youngsters were given folders prepared by the cup manufacturers in which space was provided to hold the caps, each folder containing a complimentary cap. Before the performance Gooch announced the distribution of the free cream after the show and a representative of the sponsors also addressed the children on the nutritious value of the confection.

The special show composed of cartoon shorts, sport reels and a western proved a successful draw, the full house reports Gooch, in no way drawing from the regular program in the afternoon. Entire cost to the theatre was listed at $4.25.

Niesen Personal Appearance Nets Newspaper Publicity

Pictures of La Niesen putting on make-up, officiating at Gimbel's fashion show, tuning in on a radio, admiring a new Packard, and arriving at the depot filled all the Milwaukee papers in advance of Warner's showing. Gimbel's tied in on the flood of publicity with two large newspaper ads featuring Niesen's personal appearance at the store.

Sunday, May second, is the day; United Airlines terminal at the Newark Airport, the starting point of the Quigley 1936 Grand Awards trip to Hollywood, where on Tuesday, May 4th, the Plaque presentation ceremonies are to be held. Sid Holland, Bronze Grand Award winner, joins the party in Chicago and Lew Chatham, Silver Grand Award winner, in Omaha. Due to the necessity of arriving on time, the Arrangements Committee has been forced to decline invitations for the travellers to stop off and visit with brother Round Tablers but it is expected that brief informal receptions will be held at various stops.

Invitations to attend the presentation luncheon on next Tuesday have been accepted by studio executives, directors and stars, among others. Details of the ceremonies will be carried in the news section of the May 8th issue; presentation photos and winners' stories of their Hollywood adventure the week following.

Newspaper Contest Tops "Star" Drive

Taken from the theme of the picture was the very successful contest put on for the Music Hall date on "A Star Is Born" wherein the New York Evening Journal cooperated in selecting a girl from the metropolitan area for the prize of a trip to Hollywood and a screen test at the Selznick studios, producers of the picture. Topping the advance, put on by Hazel Flynn's Music Hall ad department, working with Monroe Greenthal's U. A. crew, the contest ran ten days with thousands of entries reported by U. A. Winner flew via United Airlines. Cross-word puzzle planted in the New York Mirror proved another effective newspaper tiein. Numerous radio tieins also were effected.

For outdoors attention, a neon-lighted plane was engaged to fly over the city in advance and two opening days. Wings and fuselage were equipped with signs calling attention to the date. For direct mail, the Music Hall furnished a select list of thousands of names from the files to which were directed engraved cards on the premiere. Public schools were contacted through a display arranged by the MPPDA wherein seven panels with material describing the production of the picture were exhibited at the schools and branch libraries.

Store tieins were also emphasized with cooperations effected with many General Electric company stores and dealers for elaborate windows. Macy's used the title in a page ad reading: "72 Years Ago a Star Was Born," referring to the store's anniversary sale. The Kitty Kelly shoe chain also broke co-op ads in the New York papers, as did Lux soap on the Gaynor endorsement. Coiffure ads also were planted. Augmented posting campaign was included.

Stilt Walker Sells "Top of Town"

Adapting Universal's pressbook suggestion, Sam Torgan, Manager RKO Keith Theatre, Lowell, Mass., sent a stilt walker around town in advance of his opening on "Top of the Town." The bally carried a portable phonograph amplifying system which played music from the picture. He also gave vocal plugs, and was bannered with signs giving theatre credits.

Publishes Opposite Reviews In Ad for "Green Light"

Now situated at the University Theatre, in Harvard Square, Cambridge, Seth H. Field, Quigley Plaque winner, reports that the old-fashioned bally being "out" in that college section, other more subtle forms of publicity are used to attract the university students. Among these, the college papers are important, and on "Green Light" Fields sends along an ad on that date which had to do with the divergent opinions by a Hollywood observer and the paper's picture reviewer.

Alongside of the favorable review by Hollywood's Welford Beaton, was published the pan by the university critic with readers invited to settle the argument by seeing the picture for themselves. Noted in another issue of the college sheet was a neat bit of institutional buildup wherein was recounted the activities of one of the theatre's personnel who, seated in the front row of the balcony at the first screening of each picture with a pad of paper and phone to the booth, controls proper sound by signaling necessary changes in volume during the running of the picture. These changes noted on the pad are then typed and a copy posted in the projection booth to be followed during the rest of the run.

Takes Bow On "Life"

Dealing himself in on the reported scarcity of the new picture weekly, "Life," Ray Howes, assistant at the Granada, Spokane, Wash., cut up a few of the issues and mounted all the pictures for display in front of the theatre. Tiein copy read: "Two ways to enjoy life. Read It Here and Go to the Granada."

Publishers Plug "Parnell"

Tiein with MGM on "Parnell" to plug the book has been set by F. A. Stokes, publishers, who have prepared a 22 by 28 two-panel display for book stores on theatre tieups. One panel contains blowup of Gable and Loy with the other showing reproduction of the book. Publishers are instructing retailers to secure further advertising from managers to elaborate these displays.

Armistead Builds Model Of Lyric Theatre Front

An ingenious lobby display was that shown in accompanying photo and created by Harold Armistead of the Lyric Theatre in Easley, S. C. Parade Highlights "Deeds" in Scotland

Ahead of opening of "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" at the Alex Cinema in Paisley, Scotland, Walter Hinks staged a parade of donkeys who covered main streets with banners reading, "I am an ass, I have not seen," etc., etc. Walter reports this stunt as a traffic stopper. Special edition of the Paisley Times, an entertainment guide, carried lucky numbers and to those presenting copies at theatre with numbers corresponding with those listed on lobby easel, tickets were awarded.

Sheet itself in tabloid form carried streamer across top with copy "Sensational rumor proves to be true! Mr. Deeds will definitely stand trial in Paisley. Frank Capra makes no statement but once again leaves verdict to public." Below was run picture copy, playdates and cut of a recent portrait of Mr. Deeds.

"Romeo" Literary Consultant Makes Personal Appearance

Outstanding highlight of Seymour Morris' "Romeo and Juliet" campaign at the Schine State Theatre in Cortland, N. Y., was securing Prof. William Strunk, Jr., of Cornell who acted as literary consultant to the production, to make a personal appearance in conjunction with the picture. Dinner was held at which Prof. Strunk was guest of honor and spoke for an hour on his experiences in connection with the opus in the studio.

Letters were mailed to all civic organizations advising them of the road show engagement and requesting them to announce it at their next meeting. They were also informed that they were given first chance to buy tickets. Letters were mailed to ministers throughout entire county, schools were circularized and the public library exhibited research stills and materials borrowed from Prof. Strunk.

Four 40-sheet Neon signs with letters four feet high were used during the entire run. These signs spotted on the four main highways entering the city grabbed the major share of comment on the campaign.

Accompanying photo shows special Coronation lobby display created by Larry Graburn, Metropolitan Theatre, Regina, Sask., Can., with powerful spotlight on it. The base is seven feet long and height to the tip of the crown is approximately eight feet.

The body of display is royal purple with outside edge in a yellow gold. Fourteen reflectors on chromium bases adorn the edges, these are ordinary reflectors used on cars and are bright red. Smaller reflectors in green and red of the type used for attaching license plates adorn the jewel at top of crown and these in addition to silver flitter outline entire display. Individual stills and photos give the whole a bright jewelled appearance.

Gates Promotes Terrier For "Thin Man" Giveaway

Arnold Gates, Loew's Park, Cleveland, for "After the Thin Man" tied up with local pet shop on a wire hair giveaway. Purp was displayed in lobby week ahead with contest rules, stories were run in local dailies and pooch went to person supplying most original name. Another contest was staged among school children with prizes going to those submitting best drawings of Asta and prizes also went to those writing picture title on postcard greatest number of times.

For street bally, man on stilts with back banner pulled wire haired terrier through main thoroughfare. An excellent eye-attractor was special roof sign erected atop building facing theatre with title in four-foot illuminated letters plus illuminated silhouettes of Powell, Loy and Asta.

Various Stunts Used By Patterson at State

George Patterson, State Theatre, Paterson, N. J., uses various stunts to put his house over, one of which was benefit show sponsored by the American Legion, proceeds of which were donated to the Red Cross. With Passaic County Aquarium Society opening its annual exhibition of tropical fish, George arranged for it to be held in the lobby of the State. Papers came through with stories and theatre mention, accompanying photo shows part of display.

Tying in with the local gun club, Patterson held a "pistol shoot" on stage, permitting the club to place a display of guns and accessories in the lobby. Notices going to members of the club with attendant publicity in papers.

Deanna Durbin Fashions were featured in a smart Syracuse dress shop through a tie-up promoted by Cliff A. Shaufele, manager, Paramount Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y. The star of "Three Smart Girls" was shown in an almost life-size standee in the center of a window display of young misses' dresses. Tags bearing Deanna's picture were on all the dresses, and fashion stills scattered around the display added zest to the window.

CAMPAIGN HIGHLIGHTS OF ENTRIES VOTED "FIRSTS" IN MARCH AWARDS

Five First Mentions for March Creates New Record in the Quigley Awards; Showmen in France and Canada Honored

Five very smart campaigns entered in the Quigley March Awards shared the First Mention honors, topping by two the largest number yet voted in the Competitions. The talented showmen responsible were Jim Schlatter, manager, and Ted Emerson, publicist, of the Omaha, Omaha, Neb.; Pete Egan, manager, Palace, Calgary, Alta., Canada; Elias Lapinere, publicist, La Paris, Paris, France; William W. Johnson, manager, Opera House, Millinocket, Maine, and Al Sobler, manager, New Spreckels, San Diego, Cal. What they did is enumerated as follows:

Wafford, the piglet owned by Bob Burns in "Waikiki Wedding," was given a good home in Omaha, thanks to the efforts of Jim Schlatter and Ted Emerson, who arranged with the Paramount studios to express a live piglet to Fred Hunter, Omaha News-Bee editor. The porker was accompanied by a note from Bob Burns stating that Wafford was being forwarded after his work in the picture with the hope that the editor would find a good home for him. Tiein of course gave the theatremen a nice play in the daily with the pig turned over to local milk fund, purchased from the fund for $25 and then turned over to a boys' home. Girl leading the pig around town was also used for bally.

Then a controversy was started among leading localities on the ingredients of a real Arkansas meal which was settled by Bob Burns, who wired the information. Wire of course was tied in with the picture and date. Hawaiian atmosphere was corraled with palm trees, dancing hula girls, etc., and a Hawaiian orchestra playing native music. House personnel all wore leis promoted from local who had brought them from the islands. The idea was carried further with a float (see picture) that covered the downtown section when the weather allowed.

Publicity started two weeks ahead was diversified and featured with story and photos of Shirley Ross, an Omaha girl. Radio transcriptions were used by various stations and picture tied in with "man on the street" program with guest tickets given for correct answers on questions about the date. Grocery stores were furnished posters on Kraft Cheese tiein, main window in steamship office decorated, jumbo cards planted on waste cans, jeweler tied in to pay for imprinted heralds and theatre front especially decorated.

Old-Time Engine Display Front Features "Barriers" in Calgary

Real stopper on the date at the Palace, Calgary, Alba., Canada, for "Silent Barriers" proved to be the front created by Manager Pete Egan, the decorations topped by enlargements in natural colors of actual scenes along the route of the Canadian Pacific. Centered (see photo) was the front of an old-time engine built to exact scale dimensions of beaver board and wood. Railroad cooperated further by advertising the picture in stations within 100 miles, posters including train schedules and special fares.

Indians who worked in the making of the picture were brought on for the opening performance and used out front for special atmosphere. Special radio campaign included interviews with people who worked in the picture, address by city official and dramatization by popular radio group. As to be expected, the newspaper campaign was extensive, including special feature articles, editorial and many fine publicity stories.

Many excellent windows were secured, of which there were a number of elaborate displays with picture backgrounds. Heralds were distributed by newsboys and extra tiein made with Saturday Evening Post boys who were given prizes of guest tickets.

Close Voting Indicates Quality of Monthly Competitions as Entrants Obtain Wide Coverage on March Exploitations

Mayor Issues Proclamation For "Grace Moore Week"

To draw citizens' attention to the finer forms of art and music and in compliment to Grace Moore's achievements as an artist in the face of many difficulties, the Mayor of San Diego, Cal., was prevailed upon to proclaim the date on "When You're in Love" at the New Spreckels, a "Grace Moore Week." Which of course was immediately blown up for lobby display by Manager Al Sobler and planted in the local press. Further use was made of the promotion by having youngsters at local children's home posing with the proclamation.

To insure the boxoffice attention of all classes, the "down-to-earth" aspect of the picture was stressed by such devices as animated cutout of the star moving hands in snappy hotcha fashion. Hidden reproducer played records sung by the star. The "hi-de-ho" angle was also plugged out front with plenty of buildup for Miss Moore's singing of Minnie the Moocher.

For street bally, Sobler employed a boy and girl couple on an old-fashioned tandem bicycle carrying tiein copy. For throwaways, he turned out a "Spreckels Matrimonial Check" made out for the payment of a husband and signed by the star. Backs of checks were imprinted. In exchange for special morning show for Liberty boy carriers, distributors allowed all local copies of the publication to be stuffed. Boys paraded to the theatre carrying banners and escorted by motorcycle police. Featured newspaper tiein was an effective double-truck and contest angle. Names of all members of cast were dropped in among the ads and to first 60 turning in correct list of names and advertisers where names were found guest tickets were awarded. Other advertising included color and general publicity was generous. The down-to-earth drive, reports Sobler, was successful in bringing a lot of people to the theatre who did not usually go for pictures with opera backgrounds.

Lapinere Ties Three Papers To Laurel and Hardy Campaign

Three leading Paris dailies, Le Petit Parisien, Le Journal and Le Jour, with a combined circulation of over two and a half million, were enlisted by publicist E. Lapinere to stimulate interest in the date for "Our Relations" at La Paris, Paris, France. For this purpose, Lapinere called upon the members of the Laurel and Hardy Club, the extensive activities of which organization have been reported previously in these pages.

Featured tiein was a Twin Day sponsored by the theatre and Le Jour wherein all local twins who came together with definite proof of their kinship were admitted free to see the picture. The thousands who gathered to witness the stunt brought all the papers with resultant photos and stories. Second tiein with Le Journal had to do with a regular meeting of the Laurel and Hardy Club which of course came about with the engagement. Reports that the famed team were to separate were used as a basis for the children to sign a petition requesting them to remain together and of course brought further publicity. In addition to the picture, the children were feted at different celebrations, given the comic masks shown in accompanying photo of group in front of theatre.

Third newspaper tiein put on with Petit Parisien was in the form of a children's sketch contest, members being invited to sketch their conceptions of the comics. Thousands of entries were reported, the daily running extensive publicity and numerous of the more artistic and amusing drawings. In addition to the publicity given by the three cooperating papers, additional stories and comment were contributed by other leading publications.

Commendable Small Town Drive Put On for "Come and Get It"

The town of Millinocket, Me., in the heart of the state's pulpwood area, is some 24 miles from a main highway, the inhabitants depending entirely upon the single paper mill for a livelihood. There is no outlying drawing area with the bulk of the population French or Italian, many of whom neither read nor write, reports Manager Wm. W. Johnson, of the Opera House, in detailing his well-executed campaign on "Come and Get It." The nearest daily paper is published in Bangor, some 90 miles away, and for his publicity, Johnson depends upon his own organ, "Opera House News," a six-page tab, which carries outside advertising as well as local items.

To build up a greater interest than is usually given to pictures, Johnson inaugurated an extensive campaign, much stronger than for the usual attraction, and started with an open letter to readers in which he praised the picture highly and stated that those who did not enjoy the picture could have their money back. This was followed by publicity on the title and how the phrase originated. Relying to a great extent on the paper for the returns, the manager called the issue before the date a "Come and Get It" edition using much more space than ordinarily to advertise.

As he does not use the window display angle often, Johnson was able to attract attention with a number of exhibits in the town's best locations. He was also able to arrange a showing of the stills in the library, all displays of course carrying theatre credits. Local five-and-ten was tied in to stuff all outgoing packages with heralds on the date and with the assistance of his doorman, Johnson constructed a display mounted on a trailer with fir boughs for background. As the cost of the weekly program is covered by the outside ads, the entire campaign came to $4.80, for which this member was able to attract much more attention than usually given the theatre.

Loewmen Engineer Citywide Campaign On '3 Smart Girls'

Obtaining wide coverage in all the New York boroughs where the picture was released day and date, at various Loew houses, was the campaign engineered by Oscar Doob's department under the direct supervision of Ernest Emerling and the Loew exploiteers.

Newspaper publicity was obtained well in advance in the major dailies as well as those in the neighborhood. This publicity included a number of contests and also featured by papers attending was the coast-to-coast telephone interview with the star in Hollywood at a luncheon tendered by the Loew office to newspapers in the five boroughs. Generous size co-op ads in various situations were promoted which stressed the "three smart girl" style tieup. Full page promotions were also secured, some of these tied in to slogan contests and other ideas offered by leading local stores for prizes of guest tickets, etc.

Foremost among the street ballys were trios of girls in unique costumes, visiting stores in the vicinity of theatres. Girls distributed color cards which invited holders to match that color with one appearing in theatre boxoffices for guest tickets. Illustrated below is one of the trios, which, in addition to making the main neighborhood points also appeared in window displays. Other trios of girls were used as models in store style shows and also in unique window displays. For further bally two highly decorative street floats were routed throughout the city. Men carrying lettered umbrellas were also turned loose in traffic.

Contests with prominent laundry offered cash prizes and tickets on a tongue-twister slant. Entries were deposited in all outgoing packages, each entry illustrated with scene from picture. Laundry trucks were bannered on the contest for full month of the tiein. Many other slants put over and featured for Easter season were tieups with neighborhood florists for gift corsages distributed on opening day. Tiein secured excellent displays in florists' windows.

Every once in a while a truly great picture steals upon us, unheralded, shouted not to the skies, in fact presented in much the ordinary way, tending to make the management of the theatre where such a picture is playing handle it the same way, I had not seen the picture when it opened, but I HAVE SEEN IT NOW . . . and your neighbors have seen it, and I am sure they appreciated how fine a picture it really is . . . such a picture is

For showing one of the season's breeziest hits, "Love on a Bet," featuring Gene Raymond and Wendy Barrie, on the same program with "Beyond Bengal." The past two days have fully convinced us that "Beyond Bengal" contains far too many savage thrills for even the least timid. We knew of its breath-taking sequences—of its terrifying climax—but we never realized that a motion picture could ever so completely terrify and startle an audience. So we wish to make amends and suggest that if you are unable to stand hair-raising thrills but would like to see "Love on a Bet" please call THE GARRICK THEATRE, CE 8934, for the program schedule.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by BRUCE ALLAN
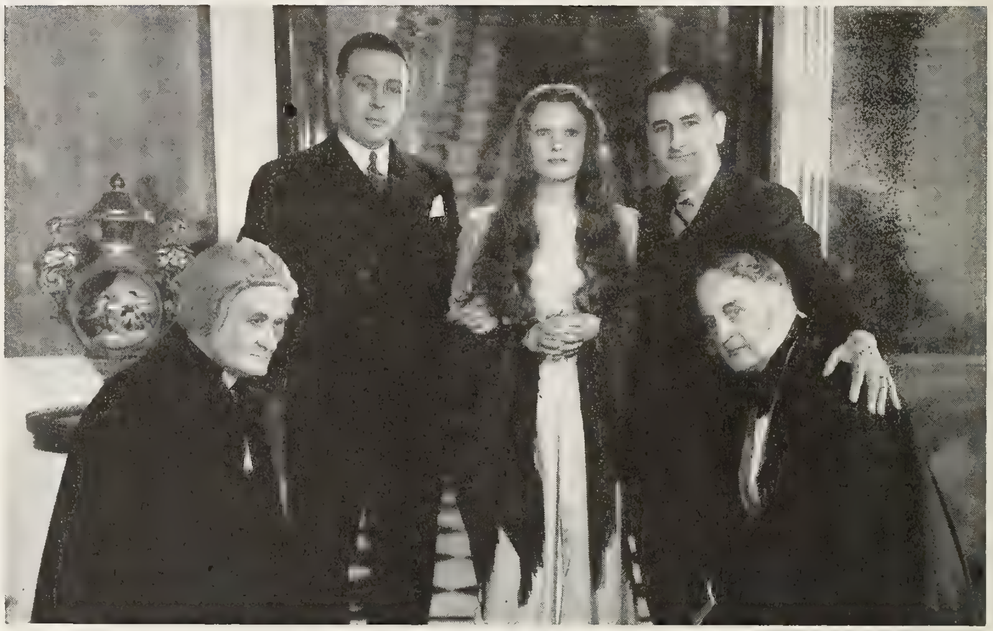
in London

Victoria is Filmed

First shots of Herbert Wilcox's "Victoria the Great" were made at Denham on April 14, and history also, in more than one sense. The great Queen has only recently become motion picture material in England, with the removal of the ban which also prohibited us from seeing her in "Victoria Regina" and other plays freely available in America.

News in this sense, "Victoria the Great" is also trade news, registering activity for a new production unit, Imperator Film Productions, Ltd., specially formed to cover this feature, which Mr. Wilcox is making for world release through RKO-Radio. His regular release is through General Film Distributors. That he is making the picture at Denham instead of Pinewood inaugurates a Korda-Wilcox contact which, according to some folk, will be closer in the future.

The first scene of "Victoria the Great," appropriately, pictured the youthful Princess Victoria awakened from her sleep to receive the news of her accession from the Archbishop of Canterbury and other statesmen. Anna Neagle is playing the Queen. Opposite her as the Prince Consort is Anton Walbrook. H. B. Warner plays Lord Melbourne, Felix Aylmer is Sir Robert Peel, James Dale interprets the great Duke of Wellington, and the roles of the Duchess of Kent, mother of the Queen, and of the Baroness Lehzen are taken respectively by Mary Morris and Greta Wegener.



A NEW COMPANY formed by Herbert Wilcox (standing at right) is producing "Victoria the Great" at Denham. With Mr. Wilcox in the picture are Anna Neagle, who plays Victoria, and Ralph Hanbury of Radio Pictures, which will release the film. Kneeling are C. V. France, who has the role of Archbishop of Canterbury, and Hubert Harben as Lord Conyngham. Anton Walbrook plays opposite Miss Neagle as the Prince Consort.

"The Squeaker"

Edmund Lowe has played his first scenes for the London Film production of "The Squeaker" at Denham, an adaptation by Bryan Wallace of the book of his father, Edgar Wallace. He has a "tough" part, as a sailorman with red handkerchief knotted round a collarless neck and a peaked cap pulled low over his eyes, and the background of his first scenes suited his makeup; it pictured a saloon in London dockland, with the Thames and its shipping in the background. Vincent Korda, art director, built it from pictures of the inn, "The Prospect of Whitby," in Wapping.

William K. Howard, directing, has cameraman Georges Perinal, free owing to the "postponement" of "I, Claudius." Understood, rightly or wrongly, in trade circles is that the postponement is in fact an abandonment of the Laughton-Oberon vehicle, interrupted by Miss Oberon's car smash. At any rate, the actress, now convalescent, is being considered for another part.

Elizabeth Allan, cast opposite Lowe in "The Squeaker," is due for first shots this week. Sebastian Shaw and Alastair Sim, the last-named playing the Scottish reporter role he had in the stage version are also in "The Squeaker."

Expedition East

On April 16th there left London a self-contained production unit, bound for Ceylon and Singapore, with the program of producing two pictures against authentic Eastern backgrounds. The backer of the venture is a 28-year-old Birmingham business man, Neville Clarke, who last year made a handsome profit on a picture, "Well Done, Henry," which cost only £10,000 ($50,000). His present policy is to make, and personally supervise, from one to three pictures a year.

The Eastern pictures will be titled "Tea Leaves in the Wind" and "Singapore Police," and the same players will be used in each; they include Nils Asther, Gibson Gowland and Cyril Chadwick. Directing is Ward Wing, who made "Samarang." Most of the work will be exteriors.

Neville Clarke is due to visit the United States soon, with distribution in view.

Hagen Producing

Julius Hagen, recently principal of the Twickenham enterprises, has begun his first feature for release by the Gilbert Church enterprise, Ambassador Film Productions, Ltd. Entitled "The Last Rose of Summer," it will be directed by Thomas Bentley from a Michael Barringer script, and practically the whole of the old Twickenham personnel is engaged, James A. Carter designing the sets, Sidney Blythe controlling the lighting and William Luff the camera, while the musical score is by William Trytel and the editing in the charge of Jack Harris. Ronnie Philip has done the casting. In the cast are Anthony Bushell, Nancy O'Neill, Eve Gray, Garry Marsh, Mary Glynne, Charles Carson, Joyce Evans and Richard Cooper.

Mr. Hagen's production company is called St. Margaret's Film Studios, Ltd., and is operating at the old Twickenham plant.

Itemized

Max Baer has been signed for a featurette, "Keeping Fit," to be directed by Widgey Newman.

Merle Oberon is convalescing on the South Coast.

Tim Whelan is in the last stages of "Action for Slander," Victor Saville's third at Denham.

Basil Dean is to direct "The First and the Last," from the Galsworthy story, for London Films at Denham, with a cast including Vivien Leigh, Leslie Banks and Lawrence Olivier.

Name Pool Operators

Following the pooling of Warners' Strand, Ritz, Madison and Albany with Si Fabian's Palace, Harmanus-Bleeker Hall, Grand and Leland in Albany, N. Y., an operating committee has been set up with Mr. Fabian and Sam Rosen representing the Fabian circuit and Moe Silver and Willard C. Patterson for Warners. The policies of the theatres continue as before and each circuit continues to operate its own houses.

Plans Spanish Picture

John Dos Passos, American novelist, plans to make a motion picture depicting life in Madrid during the Civil War, the Havas News Agency reported to the New York Post. The picture will be intended for release in the United States, it was said.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1936, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1936-37 season.

S. Evans and C. Rau answer section (A) concisely and well, thus: "The points of interest and importance in rewinding of film are as follows: (1) That the rewinder elements be in perfect alignment; (2) that speed of rewinding shall not exceed six minutes to each 1000 feet of film; (3) that sufficient tension be supplied to insure snug, but not too tight rewinding; (4) that, at least in one-man rooms, the rewinder be located in convenient proximity to the film cabinet, at the same time enabling the projectionist to remain as close to the projectors as possible, while rewinding with clear view of the screen; (5) that a low c. p. light bulb be located beneath a ground glass set into the rewind table midway between rewinder elements; (6) that rewinder elements be located sufficient distance apart, say not less than 32 inches, to enable handling of the film for inspection and repair; (7) that the driving motor circuit be equipped with a switch that will automatically cut off when rewinding is completed."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 72

(A) Why is the phenomenon of voltage drop useful in studying the wiring of amplifiers?

(B) What represents good maintenance practice with respect to selecting parts and supplies?

(C) Does a magnetic speaker have a "field coil"?

(D) Name four methods of controlling motor speed.

D. Danielson says: "The first requisite to proper rewinding is a dust-free atmosphere, perhaps slightly humid. Next, a motor drive geared down to rewind 1000 feet of film in six minutes, with an automatic stop when rewinding is done. My own rewinds 1,000 feet in 9.14267 plus minutes when using a two-inch reel hub; 2,000 feet on a 4-inch hub reel would not be far from double that. The rewinder may be either open or inclosed, but must have its elements in perfect alignment. There must be tension applied in sufficient amount to insure tight winding, though not enough to cause the film to slide upon its successive layers. Reels used in rewinding must be straight and have no sharp edges. In my opinion rewinding should be done in the projection room and in close proximity to the film storage cabinet and the projectors. There should be an arrangement of film fuse so connected that fire at the rewinding table would automatically release the fire shutters.

"The tail piece should not be too firmly attached to the reel. With the Devry reel it is best not to use the automatic hook feature, since if this be done, small bits of film are pulled loose, which may find their way into the projector film path, causing possible damage. The film, especially its first few feet, should be inspected for possible damage. Immediately upon completion of rewinding the film should be removed and stored in its proper compartment in the storage cabinet."

R. and K. Wells say: "The first, most highly essential features of rewinding are (a) good reels in perfect condition, (b) elements of rewinder in perfect alignment with each other. Next comes the matter of speed, which, as our friend "Dad" has so often told us, should be slow. His recommendation is six minutes to the thousand feet, approximately, and up to date we have, through the years, always found his teachings good. We have our rewinder geared to that speed and find that, once we got used to it, it is just fine. Would not go back to the old bur-r-r-r, rush-it-through, speed on a bet.

"Next in importance, as we see it, comes an automatic switch to cut off current when rewinding is done. Next a sufficient braking power applied to the tail reel to insure proper compactness in the film roll, so that pulling down will never be required. But, after all, the one most important thing with regard to rewinding, as with every other thing in projection, is the interest the man doing the job has in his work. If he lacks vital interest, regardless of everything else the job will be poorly done. If he has real, live, vital interest in his work, then, while if he be equipped with good tools naturally he will be able to do a better job than would be possible if he were not so equipped, still the job will be the best that he is able to do and that will, in the very nature of things, not be too faulty.

"You never said a truer word, F. H., than when you said, in your Comments some months ago, that pride in one's work, or in the results of it rather, is absolutely essential to the production of really good results."

C. Champney puts it briefly and well. He says: "Using either power driven or hand rewind, film should never be rewound faster than about twice its projection speed, which means about five to six minutes per thousand feet. Rewinder elements should be kept in perfect alignment, so that damage to edges of film by friction with reel sides be avoided. Tension (braking power) should not exceed that required to wind the film snugly, without inflicting scratches by causing the film rolls to slip upon one another.

"Motor driven rewinders should be so equipped that the motor circuit will be opened the instant the film pulls loose from the tail reel and the film tension is thus released. Otherwise the tail piece will be whipped around, with very probable damage.

JENKINS' ILLNESS DELAYS "COLYUM"

J. C. Jenkins' "Colyum" is missing this week from its cozy corner, but not because one of those Texan redfish or hammerhead sharks has pulled him out into the Gulf of Mexico.

A recurrence of Jaysee's illness required that he hurry back to his home—if such a traveler may claim any proprietary right to the word "home"—at Neligh, Nebraska.

All of the countless readers of the Sage of Neligh will be awaiting his next reflections from the road.

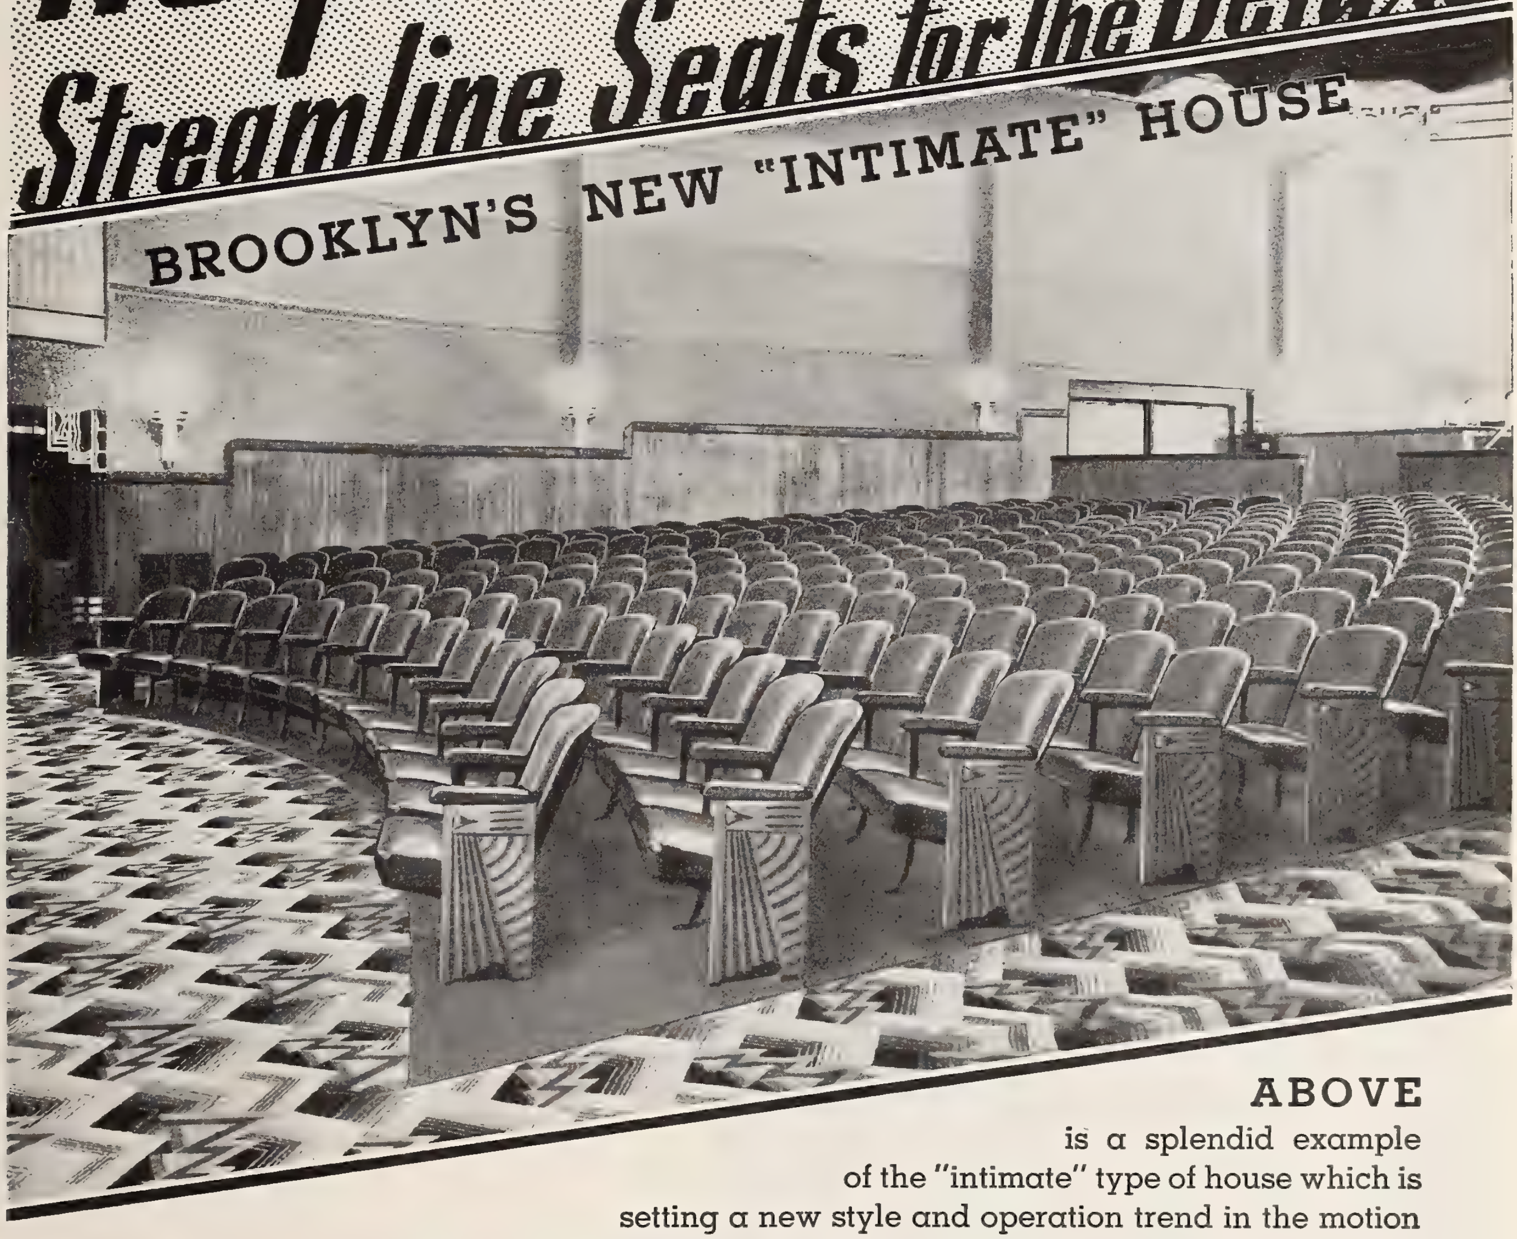
Heywood Streamline Seats for the Deluxe

BROOKLYN'S NEW "INTIMATE" HOUSE



ABOVE is a splendid example of the "intimate" type of house which is setting a new style and operation trend in the motion picture field. It is the DELUXE, Brooklyn, owned and operated by Mr. M. Bleendes and is the work of Architect C. A. Sandbloom of New York City. 600 Heywood Streamline Chairs with dull chrome trim and rust mohair on the back . . . rust Redo on the spring edge seat . . . were selected for this swanky, modern house. The Heywood Streamline Chairs lend sparkle, character, and comfort to the orchestra of the Deluxe . . . harmonize perfectly with Mr. Sandbloom's skillful interior treatment. Heywood Streamline Chairs have oodles of exclusive, practical features that merit your serious consideration for new houses . . . for modernization . . . for reseating. May we tell you in detail about these modern, comfortable, beautiful seats that are boosting box office receipts all over the country?

doubling in glass

■ One of the most interesting extensions of the use of glass is its application, semi-structurally as well as decoratively, to architecture. The Century theatre in Mobile, Ala., illustrated here, has a front area scheme in which Owens-Illinois translucent glass tiles form a decorative wall serving both vestibule and lounge. The face of the Century, which was designed by Cooper Van Antwerp, Mobile architect, is of stucco trimmed with gas tube lighting in dark and light green and yellow. The marquee fascias are outlined in green luminous gas, while the soffit is bordered with 60-watt lamps in a metal trough. Beneath the marquee, the entrance area, including the vestibule, is faced with black Vitrolite trimmed with blue Formica. Vestibule lighting is supplied by two 12-inch ceiling troughs. Rimming the curving glass tile wall in the lounge, twelve opal globed lamps of 100 watts each, set 18 inches on centers, give the tiles a luminous effect of decorative interest, while at the same time supplying lighting for this room. The inner walls of the lounge are finished in panels of wood-grained sheet rock.

VOLUME 127 MAY 1, 1937 NUMBER FIVE

New Group Formed in SMPE Vision Studies

A NEW sub-committee on structures is being formed under the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, to give special attention to architectural considerations in the new program of the larger body intended to bring about standard practice with respect to visual conditions in the auditorium. Ben Schlanger, New York theatre architect, is chairman of the new committee.

Already 25% of the 2,000 questionnaires on auditorium forms, distances and dimensions, recently circulated under the auspices of the projection committee, have been returned with the data sought. These are returnable to Harry Rubin, chairman of the Projection Practice Committee, and when a sufficient amount of data has thus been received, analysis of them is to be begun by the theatre structures committee, and their findings will be added to data already compiled on screen illumination and light sources to form a basis of standard practice in auditorium planning.

Engineers and architects who have been invited to serve on the structures committee are Roy Morin of the theatre regulation department of Connecticut; Robert R. French, engineer long active on SMPE committees; Robert Boller, Kansas City theatre architect; C. F. Horstman, supervisor of projection for RKO; Frank Cahill, in a similar capacity with Warner Theatres; Edward Stone, New York architect formerly connected with Harrison & Foulhoux, who were among the architects of the Radio City theatres; and Leonard Asheim, architect of Bridgeport, Conn. It is expected that other architects will be added, or called in for consultation, as the work progresses.

40% of Theatres Said To Have "Modern" Sound

ON THE BASIS of installations of sound equipment essentially conforming in design and operating characteristics to advances introduced during the last three years, approximately 40% of the motion picture theatres operating in the United States have what sound engineers accept as "modern" reproducing equipment. With not more than 1,000 new theatres added during that period it may be calculated, with sufficient accuracy for the present purpose, that about 30% of the nation's theatres have replaced early-style equipment with "modern" reproducing systems.

It is certain, however, that installation figures a year from now will greatly change the present picture, since a wave of replacement set in only a year ago and is now at its height. In only nine months, Erpi has installed the lates type of Western Electric equipment in approximately a thousand theatres.

RCA Photophone installations of high-fidelity type already equal the number of old-style systems yet operating, and by the end of the year, according to Edwin M. Hartley, head of the Photophone division of RCA, will have completed replacing existing equipment in 400 Warner theatres, in addition to other circuit and independent houses for which contracts were previously announced.

Installations of "modern" equipment by other manufacturers, in many cases incorporated in a reproducing system having components of more than one make, are estimated to total about 600 now, and as the result of continual developments in amplifiers, speakers and other elements of a sound system, they are expected to add substantially to the replacement of old-style equipment during the coming year.

183 Theatre Projects Reported in 10 Weeks

REPORTS OF plans for the construction of theatres in the United States, received by BETTER THEATRES' Projects' Bulletin Service during the last three weeks of February, the month of March and the first three weeks of April, named 183 new projects.

A total of 38 states were represented in the reports, with Illinois showing the highest number for any one State—22—and the Middle West leading all other sections.

The reports gave the smaller capacities predominance in every section, very few of the projects calling for more than 800 seats. The projects reported were distributed among the 38 States as follows:

Illinois, 88; Ohio, 13; Indiana, 2; Michigan, 13; Missouri, 9; Iowa, 3.

Virginia, 7; Mississippi, 7; Florida, 4; Alabama, 5; Georgia, 1; Kentucky, 2; Maryland, 1; Tennessee, 3; West Virginia, 3; South Carolina, 3; North Carolina, 2; Texas, 4; Oklahoma, 1; Arkansas, 1; New Mexico, 2; Louisiana, 7.

Colorado, 6; Washington, 4; Connecticut, 5; New York, 8; New Hampshire, 5; Idaho, 2; Vermont, 1; New Jersey, 5; California, 18; Pennsylvania, 3; Arizona, 1; Massachusetts, 8.

New Hazard Rules Applied to Projection

AS MEASURES to reduce still further fire hazards emanating from projection, the Massachusetts Department of Public Safety has adopted new regulations, including one which makes it mandatory for a projectionist to be beside the working projector.

In addition, the new rules require that each fire or accident in a projection room must be reported separately within 24 hours by both the projectionist in charge, and the theatre manager. Also, an exhaust fan must be kept running and the intake duct open while the projectors are in operation. All changes in the room or equipment must be approved by department inspectors.

Another regulation specifies that no reel may contain more than 2,000 feet of film. Massachusetts was one of the few States in which the new standard reel length was in jeopardy.

A Symbolical Design With a Stadium Plan

• Describing the Crest theatre, New York City neighborhood house, in which modern decorative devices are applied to a marine theme. Plan and specifications appear on page 8.

• Left: Projection room, which is centrally located in a gallery suspended over rear of stadium and also containing a rewind room, motor-generator room, and fan room. Projectors are Motiograph, sound Western Electric.

- Right: The auditorium, looking toward stadium. A marine theme is carried out in the decorative treatment in allegorical murals suggestive of the sea, and in "waved" ceiling forms stenciled in conventionalized figures suggestive of surf and marine vegetation, painted in coral and silver against a buff ground. The rear walls are finished in tan and gold damask. Central fascia of stadium is painted buff, capped in tile.

- Below: Forward view of the auditorium. Note especially here the "wave" effect in ceiling treatment. The fantastic marine murals are appliqued on velour, in brown, blues, greens, coral and silver. Carpeting in the auditorium, as throughout the theatre, is in Crestwood Velvet with a sunburst pattern in shades of brown and orange. Illumination sources consist in vertical coves flanking the proscenium arch, troughs at the bases of the murals, and "cup" lighters on piers of the stadium.

MATERIALS AND EQUIPMENT

CREST THEATRE, NEW YORK CITY

Owners and Operators: Springer-Cocalis Circuit, Architect: William I. Hohauser

Construction and plan: The Crest theatre is located at 174th Street and Ogden Avenue, in a neighborhood business section. The building includes two stores and two floors of office space. Construction is steel and concrete, with front faced in two tones of tapestry brick. The marquee, which is trimmed in neon, is rectangular with silhouette letter (Adler) attraction boards of three lines at each fascia. A shallow vestibule leads through plate glass doors into a lobby, which opens into a shallow foyer or "promenade" with full-width stairs, forming an auditorium vomitory and also providing access to a lounge behind the right-hand store, and to toilet facilities behind the left-hand store. Over this store, entrance and lounge area the stadium seating section is erected (See floor plans).

PAUL MUNI IN "SCARFACE" WITH

STORE RENT

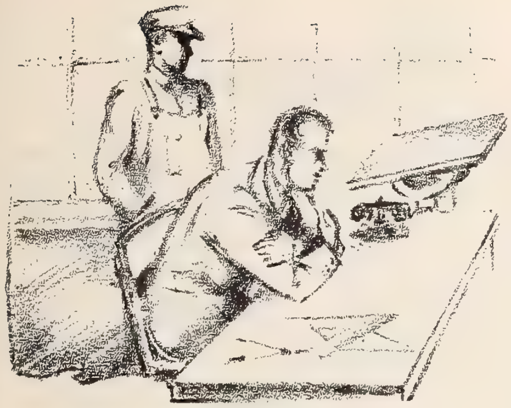
Front of the Crest, faced in two-tone tapestry brick.

Projection: The projection room is housed in a gallery extending its full width of 14 feet and from wall to wall, suspended from trusses over the rear of the stadium. The projection room proper is 20 feet wide. Adjoining it on one side are rewind and motor-generator rooms. On its other side is the fan room for the ventilating system. Equipment includes two Motiograph projectors with Brenkert suprex carbon arc lamps supplied from a Robin Imperial motor-generator. The sound system is Western Electric. Projection angle 15°.

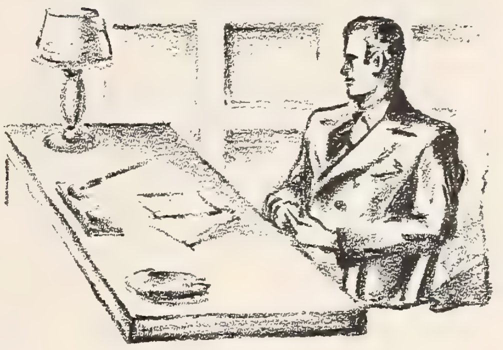
Acoustical treatment: Auditorium murals, which are appliqued on velour, and also fabric used on stadium walls and fascia of gallery, cover installations of rock wool. Seating: Chairs are arranged in three banks with four aisles, in both main and stadium sections. In the stadium, ten rows extend the rear, while the side banks continue on either side of the "promenade" or vomitory for three rows with eight chairs each. Row spacing throughout is 33 inches back to back, and all chairs (by Ideal Seating Company) have spring-edge seats covered in black leatherette, and padded backs covered in coral mohair. The main section seats 570, the stadium 388.

Air supply system: Provisions thus far only for heating and distribution of fresh air. Air is introduced into the auditorium through grilles in ducts forming side wall cornices, and exhausted at the floor (for passage to the exterior) on each side, in stadium as well as the main section. In the ceiling above the stadium, where smoking is permitted, are two exhaust grilles.

All interior painting and draping was executed by the Novel Scenic Studios of New York. Joe Hornstein, Inc., of New York, supplied the equipment.



Timely Repair and Replacement Mean Maintenance Economy



An Editorial

A LITTLE OVER a year ago a certain theatre was put on the block as a result of the owner's decision to withdraw from operation in that area. It was the largest theatre of a group, and located in the downtown business section.

The depression, of course, had reduced grosses, but for fully a year before the owner became interested in finding a purchaser, there had been a substantial net.

A competing circuit opened negotiations. The building and the equipment were not old, the location was good, assurance of a sufficiently wide choice of product advised an additional downtown house. Conversations brought about a definite basis for a deal.

Before completing the transaction, the buyer directed one of his most experienced managers and the man who was in charge of the maintenance of his local properties, to make a complete survey of the condition of the building, its furnishings and equipment.

The itemized report of the manager and maintenance man indicated that at least $2,000 should be spent immediately to put the house and its equipment in a reasonably efficient and safe operating condition; that it was also advisable to figure on an expenditure of about $7,000 some time during the following year for repairs and replacements (including new roofing) that could be postponed for a while if the buyer preferred to pay for them out of operating income over an extended period.

What effect these findings had on the purchase price ultimately agreed on, we do not know. However, when the buyer took over operation, the schedule of immediate repairs and replacements, totalling $2,000, was reduced to a few items amounting, in aggregate cost, to considerably less than $1,000. The serious, urgent recommendations of two trained men who saw conditions at first-hand and who knew the significance of every detail of them in practical theatre operation, were taken lightly indeed.

Why was the survey made? At least one answer comes readily to mind—but that would make another story. Here we are interested in only the attitude toward spending for repairs and replacements that this specific case so well illustrates. It's an attitude that exhibits a most extraordinary ability to deny realities. Certainly refusal to rectify a bad condition does not change the condition. And time will not change it. Time will only make it worse. To postpone a repair or needed replacement (and replacements are frequently required only because a repair was not made in time) is not to eliminate it, and well may be to increase the cost while inviting disaster in the meantime.

On repair and replacement in this issue:

Repair and replacement, obviously, are merely the processes of maintenance and therefore are not properly matters meriting only intermittent attention. The only sound policy of maintenance is one that calls for a consistent, organized method of inspection and rectification.

During the past year or so there has been an unusual amount of repairing and replacement of equipment and furnishings. This, however, has been a part of a rather frightened realization of the condition that theatres got into during the depression, and one is by no means justified in believing that it indicates a genuine recognition generally of the true place of maintenance in the functions of theatre operation. It is rather to be regarded as a special concern of these times.

Concentration on what brings in the money, and a turning away from what takes the money is not, of course, confined to the theatre business, but its significance in our business is much greater than in many other fields. Other retailers may be allowed to operate without a comprehensive, regular maintenance method. The motion picture theatre, however, requires constant plant maintenance.

What the motion picture exhibitor sells is goods of great perishability, emotional instead of physical, as complex in their make-up as human beings themselves, of great variability in both appeal and quality, consumed in large groups on the premises, with all of the environmental and safety provisions that the latter involves.

The entire theatre is a machine, a device. It sells emotional stimulation. This is fabricated, so far as the consumer is concerned, in the theatre, and by it. There can be nothing in the selling of motion pictures to the public more important than maintenance of the environmental, hygienic and mechanical facilities through which all of the recreational service, including the film-play itself, comes into being.

The operating charges that this imposes upon a theatre income cannot be got rid of by ignoring them. They are a real part of the theatre business. Adjustments to income are always in order—but these cannot be judiciously made without a regular method of inspection which covers the entire theatre over prescribed periods of time, and repair and replacement according to the findings of those inspections. That is the only way the theatre can be kept fit for its purpose economically.

About People of the Theatre

NEWS OF THEIR ACTIVITIES REPORTED FROM ALL SECTIONS AND BRIEFLY TOLD

Tom Belessis has purchased the Roxy theatre in Stockton, Calif., from Uzia Bermani.

Leo Reese has purchased the Willow Glen Theatre at San Jose, Calif. The house was originally in a suburb of San Jose, but is now in the city proper through annexation.

The Dixwell theatre in New Haven, Conn., has been opened after being completely reseated, relighted and equipped with a new marquee and stainless steel front. The Lawrence in New Haven is also being redecorated and reseated.

The Holyoke Theatre, Inc., has been formed to operate the Opera House in Holyoke, Mass. Frederick E. Lieberman is president of the new corporation; his brother, Morton Lieberman, is secretary, and Samuel Richmond is treasurer.

Thomas M. Campbell of Terre Haute, Ind., is opening a new theatre in Newton, Ill., to be known as the Palace.

The Shawnee theatre in Shawneetown, Ill., was recently reopened by D. O. Lanham. It was closed during the Ohio flood.

The Bayside theatre in Allerton, Mass., acquired from Daniel Murphy by M. & P. Theatres, was opened April 17.

Interstate Theatres Corporation, of Boston, is remodeling the Bristol in Bristol, N. H. The capacity is being increased from 277 to 400. One part of the building is being moved opposite to where it was situated originally. Joe Cifre is supervising the installations.

The Oil City theatre in Oil City, La., operated by L. W. Watts, has been reopened following remodeling.

A. B. Blanchard has erected and opened a new house in Napoleonville, La., with a seating capacity of 750 seats.

S. J. Brown, Jr., has released the Stonewall theatre in Stonewall, Miss., to J. H. Grainger, former publicity man.

L. J. Massoni, of Louisville, Colo., and Al Slager, formerly tire and filling station operators of Denver, are remodeling the old Plaza theatre in Denver and will reopen it about May 15. RCA sound equipment is being installed and the seating capacity increased to 400.

Grayson Poats, formerly assistant manager of the Carolina theatre in Spartanburg, S. C., and more recently connected with theatres in Bluefield, W. Va., and Greensboro, N. C., has been named manager of the Ritz theatre in Columbia, S. C.

Charles A. Dentelbeck, chief supervisor of projection for Famous Players Canadian Corporation, and veteran president of the Toronto projectionists' union, had a narrow escape recently when his car was wrecked in a collision with a huge trailer transport near St. Catherines, Ont.

The Academy theatre in Selma, Ala., is being completely remodeled. Lloyd Towns is the manager.

The front and interior of the Pantages in Birmingham, Ala., has been redecorated. Frank Nickens is the manager.

Mervin Neeley and Arch Conklin plan to open a new 300-seat house at Griswold, Ia.

Dr. F. E. Rider is erecting a new building and purchasing equipment for a 475-seat house to replace the Crystal theatre at Wauneta, Neb., which was destroyed by fire late last winter.

J. O. Garnes has bought the Gibbon at Gibbon, Neb., from H. L. Beuck; M. D. Lyhane the Oak at Wood River, Neb., from Lillian Lyhane; and Paul Thacker the Pender at Pender, Neb., from his brother, A. E. Thacker.

Something of a candid camera shot of Roy P. Bedore, long widely known in the theatre equipment field, and recently appointed sales manager of the GoldE Manufacturing Company of Chicago. He was previously vice-president in charge of sales of the Chicago Cinema Products Company. The GoldE company has just taken new quarters, at 1214 W. Madison Street, Chicago.

T. & D. Jr. Enterprises, with headquarters in San Francisco, have purchased the Tokay theatre in Lodi, Calif., from Mrs. Malvina Gatzert and Herbert W. Sievers.

W. N. Skirball has acquired the Riverdale theatre in Dayton, Ohio. The house is being entirely redecorated and will open as the Dale theatre.

Lester Immerman has been made manager of the Amazon theatre in the Mission district of San Francisco.

Robert Dunagan has opened his new Rio theatre at Blythe, Calif.

Western Theatre Equipment Company, Portland, Ore., has opened a branch in Spokane, to serve eastern Washington, northern Idaho and Montana. Van O. Blair is manager, E. F. Becker, his assistant, and O. R. Eckersley is employed as a salesman.

Roy Ferndon, assistant manager of the RKO Lyric in Cincinnati, has been named manager of the RKO Capitol there, succeeding William Dodds, who resigned. Joseph Hansbury becomes assistant manager at the Lyric.

J. E. Shields of Ellensburg, Wash., has started the construction of a $50,000 theatre there.

Richard Evans of Spokane, Wash., has purchased the Melodian theatre in Cheney, Wash., from Miss Lulu Nielson, who built it seven years ago. Mr. Evans will redecorate and otherwise modernize the house.

Roy C. Irvine will build a $30,000 Ritz theatre at Ritzville, Wash. The seating capacity will be 420.

The New Town Theatre in Prophetstown, Ill., has been opened. The house is owned and operated by the Marchesi brothers, who control other houses in Amboy, Freeport and Lockporte, Ill.

E. K. Elegen has started construction on his new 700-seat theatre in Alton, Ill. Operation of the new theatre will be taken over by Joseph Desberger, veteran exhibitor.

Leo Peterson of the Homestake theatre, Lead, S. D., has installed new chairs, supplied by the International Seat Corporation.

Herman H. Hunt has been transferred from Detroit to Cincinnati, as manager of the National Theatre Supply Company branch there. He succeeds Jack Stallings, who resigned recently to start the Mid-West Theatre Supply Company, in Cincinnati, with J. N. Gellman, also previously with the National organization.

Mrs. Anna Schurra has arranged to erect an addition to the Sunnyvale theatre in Sunnyvale, Calif., at a cost of about $11,000.

Carl Schantz has taken a lease on a theatre being erected at Bremerton, Wash., by Martin Berg.

Loew's Lyric theatre in Bridgeport, Conn., closed since the shutdown of burlesque last month, has been reopened as a week-end first run house, with Matt Saunders of the Poli directing the management, and Al Domaine as assistant manager.

Ralph E. Perkins and James Edwards, Jr., have purchased the lease on the Fillmore theatre in Fillmore, Calif., along with the right to operate.

Thornton Ellis has purchased the Dixon theatre in Dixon, Calif., from Charles E. Morris.

Robert O. Boller, architect of Kansas City, Mo., has been retained to prepare plans and specifications for alterations and improvements to the Miners theatre in Collinsville, Ill., which is owned and operated by Sam Komm.

F. A. Lambert contemplates the erection of a new theatre in Princeton, Mo., to replace a structure recently destroyed by fire.

Arthur Quinn, manager of the M. & P. Regent in Norfolk Downs, Conn., has resigned to join the police force.

E. M. Loew has completed negotiations with the Port Authority of Lynn, Mass., to lease 160,000 square feet of city-owned property for the erection of a drive-in theatre. The project, on a main highway to the North Shore, will accommodate 300 cars and will cost about $40,000.

The New American Theatre Company has been incorporated in San Francisco, with a capital stock of 1,000 shares of no par value, by Elias Nasser, Maria Dolliver and R. J. George.

Rube Finkelstein, operator of the suburban Belmont theatre in Kansas City, Mo., has leased the new 700-seat Byam theatre being constructed by Lester Byam.

Now you CAN have dependable cooling results in your theatre all summer long . . . real comfort that keeps the patrons coming in. And you can have this summer box-office advantage with a low-cost, economical evaporative washed air system. Kooler-Aire engineers have made it possible.

The patented Kooler-Aire Deflector provides even and proper air distribution, banishing the "bugaboo" of uncomfortable drafts. The Kooler-Aire Equalizer maintains correct air velocity on cooler days when the system is operating at reduced volume, eliminating the "bugaboo" of cold spots in front and warm dead air pockets at rear of theatre.

The Kooler-Aire Atmospheric Balancer automatically maintains a normal cooling effect on the few days when both the temperature and humidity are high, conquering the "bugaboo" of "muggy" weather. These Kooler-Aire features assure results never before possible with any evaporative washed air system.

Arthur L. Tuohy, assistant manager at Loew's Orpheum in Boston, and Miss Sheila McCormack of M. & P. Theatres, were married April 19 in Dorchester. They left for a honeymoon in Bermuda. Vaughan O'Neill was shifted from Loew's State to replace Mr. Tuohy.

John Dickson recently sold his State theatre in Duquoin, Ill., and his Vogue in Palestine, Ill. A. Frorino has taken over the State, while the Palestine is now being operated by B. Temborius and J. S. Fox.

The Gem theatre, Richland, Mo., has been transferred by R. Parson to D. F. Atkinson.

N. D. Fielder has taken over the Rex theatre, Lilbourne, Mo., formerly operated by N. E. Gately.

J. F. Jannsen is the new owner-manager of the Okaw theatre in Findlay, Ill.

V. C. Shattuck of Truckee, Calif., has arranged to erect a theatre at Loyalton, Calif., a trading center in the Sierra Valley.

Carl Brands will soon open a theatre at Pilot Grove, Mo.

V. Klarsfelder has transferred his Grand theatre in Robinson, Ill., to Glenn Shnarr.

Charles S. Bassin has joined the Standard Theatre Supply Corporation in Boston. He was manager of the M. & P. Oriental in Mattapan.

M. & P. Theatres has taken over two more theatres. Joe Druker has turned the Waltham theatre in Waltham, Mass., over to the circuit, while the State in East Milton, Mass., operated by Edward Rosen, has also been acquired.

The Norwalk Theatre Corporation has been incorporated in Norwalk, Calif., with a capital stock of $25,000, by Ralph and Laura Y. Perkins of San Gabriel, and Bernice Edwards of Alhambra.

G. R. Moore has purchased the Arlington theatre in Suisun, Calif., from Mrs. Alice Stucklin and has changed the name to New Suisun.

Joe Amos, formerly of Kinston, N. C., has been named manager of the Broadway in Reidsville, N. C. He succeeds Frank D. Fowler, who resigned to become associated with J. W. Mitchell in the operation of the Princess at Mocksville, N. C.

B. V. McDougald, proprietor of the Amusu theatre, Monticello, Ark., is having an old residence, a landmark, razed in preparation for the construction of a large apartment house, and he also plans to erect a theatre on the property.

Dan Babatz, poster artist, who has been manager of the Iris theatre in Houston, Tex., has been placed in the art department of the Will Horwitz theatres. Bert Mims, who has been relief manager of the three theatres, is the new manager of the Texan theatre.

J. T. Greene of Elloree, S. C., has opened his new theatre, the Edisto, in Branchville, S. C. Branchville had been without a theatre for about seven years.

L. L. Drake, manager of the Ansonia theatre in Wadesboro, N. C., has just opened another theatre there, with a seating capacity of 250.

A. H. Shaffeg has installed new sound equipment in his Strand theatre in Kansas City, Mo. The equipment consists in Syncrofilm rotating-drum model soundheads, and Operadio amplifier, speakers and exciter lamp supply. The installation was made by the Kansas City Sound Service Company.

R. Allison has completely recarpeted his Rivoli theatre in Portage, Pa. The installation was made by Louis Weinger of the Hotel and Theatre Carpet Company of New York.

J. H. Eddy, manager of the Princess theatre in Mount Ayr, Ia., has purchased the house and will remodel it, increasing the capacity.

William and Harry Walker will name their new theatre in Pittsburgh after their grandfather, one of Pittsburgh's pioneer exhibitors. The house is to seat 800.

J. E. Robin, formerly executive secretary of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association, has organized an engineering service under the name of J. E. Robin, Inc., offering technical and sales counsel to both manufacturers and distributors of theatre equipment. Headquarters are in New York.

OMITTED FROM PROJECTOR LIST

In making press adjustments involving page 62 of the April 3rd issue, on which appeared the Equipment Index classification, "Projectors, Motion Picture," with its list of projector manufacturers, a line of type carrying the name of one of the oldest and most prominent projector manufacturers was inadvertently eliminated. The list of manufacturers, of course, should have included Motiograph, Inc., 4431 West Lake Street, Chicago, Ill.

Organizing an Efficient System Of Building and Equipment Repair

An examination of what constitutes real economy in the maintenance of the conditions that are necessary to safety and effective showmanship

TO DISCUSS repairs and replacements as applied to theatre equipment, it is of importance that we distinguish, or rather define, certain terms which are frequently heard but seldom clearly understood. While no attempt shall be made to assume an auditor's or bookkeeper's attitude toward this most practical operating problem, yet the same general definitions hold good in either case.

Repairs represent the cost of replacing broken and worn equipment when it is clear that the replaced part has a relatively short period of usefulness. The cost of such repairs should be paid for directly out of the current earnings of the theatre, and it is presumed that the basic capital set up for the theatre has been merely maintained, and not increased by the repair.

DEPRECIATION

Depreciation is the adjustment to the value at which the physical property of the theatre is carried, and which represents the negligible loss in useful value sustained by the proeprty or equipment which cannot be compensated for by repairs.

The slow deterioration of a brick wall, or the settling of a foundation, or the slow oxidization of iron or metal parts of machinery, represent the depreciation of the property or equipment. As this type of depreciation cannot entirely be eliminated by the most careful attention, it therefore cannot be compensated for by any specific expenditure; it must be offset by setting up a reserve which should be a deduction from the gross profits.

Care and attention on the part of the management of a theatre will slow up the rate of depreciation, but the best care in the world cannot eliminate it. Because the depreciation reserve is very seldom maintained as a cash reserve, we of the theatre operating branch of the business frequently come to believe that a depreciation reserve is just one of those bookkeeping fantasies. No one but an auditor can tell us whether that is a fact. Nevertheless, the truth remains that, sooner or later, all equipment and all buildings have to be replaced, and the difficulty in obtaining funds for this leads us to believe that the depreciation reserve is only a book transaction for convenience of tax purposes.

Obsolescence is an adjustment made necessary by the simple fact that equipment and even buildings become out of date even before their apparent usefulness has ceased—that is, before their full life has been expended. Similar to depreciation, obsolescence should be compensated for by the creation of a reserve fund, by deductions from gross income. Our experience with sound reproducing equipment is an outstanding example of obsolescence. Such a fund should be available so that it may be drawn on when it becomes necessary or wise to discard a still serviceable piece of equipment in order to replace it by one of more modern design and performance.

> ". . . It certainly is penny-wise and pound-foolish to chisel on repairs and thereby increase the rate of physical depreciation. . . . This is exactly what most of us were forced to do during the depression . . . so we have had to spend two dollars for every one we might have spent on the repair had we been able to take the stitch in time."

PENNY-WISE POLICIES

In most instances all three of these indirect costs that enter into the operation of every theatre are estimated by those keeping the books on the particular theatre, but seldom does the manager ever know whether his expenditures are less than, equal to, or in excess of such deductions from his gross receipts. Sometimes the repair items are carried at their exact figures, and they always should be; but such exact total costs of repairs are seldom broken down at the end of a quarter or the year and classified, so that one operating the theatre can study them in groups and make an intelligent analysis of them. The accountant's analysis is seldom if ever directed towards the causes or conditions that necessitated the repair which, in turn, made it necessary to spend the sum of money.

Repair costs could be much dore intelligently controlled if the men responsible for the equipment or building were required to analyze the repair charges in the light of causes.

Some managers can boast of the low repair cost of their theatres, but look their place over and see for yourself what has taken place in respect to depreciation! It certainly is penny wise and pound foolish to chisel on repairs and thereby increase the rate of physical depreciation of equipment or building beyond that which it is permissible to charge off. This is exactly what most of us were forced to do during the depression when, regardless of our feel-

When the heating season is over, mix a solution of soda-ash, 4 pounds to 10 quarts of water, then remove the boiler safety valve and pour this solution into the boiler. Replace the safety valve, fire the boiler, and raise the pressure in the boiler to 5 lbs.; maintain this for three hours if possible. Draw the fire and open the blow-out and allow the boiler to drain into the sewer. Immediately flush the boiler out with City water until the water discharge to the sewer is clear and clean. Do this to either steel or cast iron boilers.

Replace the plugs, safety valve and blow-off valve and fill a cast iron boiler with fresh water up to the water line. A steel boiler should be left dry during the off season, so that air can circulate through the boiler and fittings during the summer months. Sometimes during the prograss of a wet summer, it is a fine thing in steel boilers to burn newspapers or shavings in the boiler two or three times during the summer to dry the boiler out. CAUTION: Don't try to do this drying-out process with gas, oil or coal. This drying out will retard any deterioration due to atmospheric conditions.

Thoroughly clean out all soot from tubes in the boiler, headers, breeching, and brush all surfaces subjected to flue gases with steel brushes designed for the particular type of boiler. Remove all ashes from fire box, grate bars and ash pits. The sulphur in ashes deteriorates any iron with which it comes in contact. Leave all dampers and draft doors open, so that air can circulate through the boiler, flues, breeching and chimney.

The valves, nipples, flanges, safety valves, gauges and all other parts should be checked over carefully during the summer; they should be free from leakage, repacked, repaired if necessary. All of the exposed metal parts of the boiler should be brushed with a steel brush and painted with black boiler enamel. All radiator caps of the traps should be removed and cleaned thoroughly with a clean rag. Damaged or defective parts should be replaced. All leaky radiator valves should be cleaned, repaired, reseated, or replaced. All air valves should be removed, cleaned, repaired or replaced. The covering on all steam pipe lines, not in the heated area, should be repaired.

COCKROACH RIDDANCE: Cockroaches are a source of much annoyance to many theatre operators. Roaches thrive best in damp places, particularly in restaurants and other places where foodstuffs are accessible to them. Now, with the sale of candy and popcorn booming in theatres, we are becoming more concerned with the roach nuisance. Heretofore they have been of little concern, except in those theatres that are next door to a restaurant.

I have found that the roach situation can be controlled by regular (nightly) treatment of infested areas with certain chemicals. It will be found more economical if the theatre janitor makes this solution himself, or the management has some chemist compound it. Use kerosene as a base, and to it may be added any of the following that proves most effective: Pyretheum up to 25%, or Tetrachloride up to 10%, or Camphor up to 5%.

To increase the efficiency of this mixture, add about 3% of hellebore; if you feel that this solution has an odor too disturbing, add sufficient perfume spray or pleasant smelling germicide to mask the odor of the basic solution. Spray the compound along walls, in cracks and any places where roaches have been observed.

Of course, cleanliness and general sanitary conditions are not conducive to breeding roaches, so with the above treatment and frequent, thorough cleaning you should be able to control the situation.

VALUE OF REPORTS: A manager cannot give a report on conditions of any value if he hasn't made a personal inspection. Interested use of his eyes, plus average intelligence, is all that is necessary to control expenditures for repairs or replacements.

ings in the matter, there just was no cash available for adequate repairs—so during the last two years we have had to spend two dollars for every one we might have spent on the repair, had we been able to take "the stitch in time."

I once found a manager who bought a large tin wash tub to sit up in the attic space to catch water from a leak in the roof, because he did not want to spend the money to have the roof repaired! That just is not intelligent.

INSPECTION AND SUPERVISION

In the strictest interpretation of the distinction between repairs and replacements, the classification is definitely a matter of engineering judgment; however, in actual practice all repairs and actual replacements that do not cost very much are considered as repairs, and all that do cost a considerable amount are considered as replacements. In brief, the distinction between repairs and replacements is, nine times out of ten, dependent upon the cost.

Regardless of this practice, it is well for all to keep in mind that a repair is definitely a charge against the earnings of a specific single income or operating period, while a replacement is a charge against the earnings of several periods of operation. These periods may be weeks, months or years.

The foregoing is an attempt to draw a sharp line of distinction between the three classifications of charges which so frequently are confusing.

Repairs-and-replacements has become the title for entries in practically all managers' operating statements, and to many the two words have been synonymous. So let's consider a classification of transactions that generally come under this heading:

1. Repair of worn out units.
2. Extraordinary repairs that are in the nature of partial rather than complete replacements of specific units.
3. Additions to the theatre equipment or building to increase or improve the efficiency or cost of operation, or improve the comfort of theatre patrons.
4. Ordinary repairs incidental to the operation of the theatre, which may be defined as those which neither materially add to the value of the property or equipment, nor appreciably prolong its life, but keep it in ordinary good operating condition.

GROUPS I AND 2

Groups No. 1 and No. 2 of the above classification are generally items which require an outlay of cash, and frequently are done upon the recommendation and under the supervision of the manager.

GROUP 3

Group No. 3 comprises items that frequently come under the heading of remodeling or improvements. These are usually inspired by competition, or are the obvious result of obsolescence. Most frequently this work is "let out" and usually supervised by an architect, engineer or reliable contractor.

GROUP 4

Group No. 4 contains those regular duties performed by the chief janitor or superintendent or general handy man. Very frequently the individual who does this work is without direct supervision or specific instructions and is left to his own devices as to when and what to do.

The last group is of great importance, because it is this more or less routine care that speeds up or decreases actual physical depreciation. Yet, as I said before, this phase of repairs is usually sadly neglected, primarily because too many managers just won't take or make the time to inspect their theatres carefully—they rely almost entirely upon reports made by the handy man. The equipment in a theatre usually is varied, yet it is not particularly complicated, with the possible exception of certain electrical equipment and hook-ups. Certainly, any manager can tell whether a boiler is clean, or a pump leaking, or a switchboard dirty, or fire escapes need painting—all that and much more can be detected by a non-technical inspection.

Outside of some supervision of seat and carpet repairs, the maintenance man is generally without supervision of the manager. Managers will find that maintenance men welcome the interest of the manager in his work—there is nothing so satisfying as doing a job in which someone else shows some itnerest.

To summarize, we can say that the fourth group of items can definitely be cared for better and be a source of savings in other groups, as well as increase the efficiency of operation, if the manager will arouse himself from his swivel chair and climb about his theatre and use his eyes and display some interest. On visits to theatres in various parts of the country I have found house maintenance men full of ideas and plans and hungry to talk to someone about them; usually he shows great surprise over my willingness to climb a ladder to the grid iron to get to a penthouse to examine a pump with him.

WORN PARTS REPAIR

Group No. 1, which includes the repair or replacement of worn out parts, is to some extent a routine affair. Most of this replacement is in the sound or projection equipment, and again the manager relies upon the projectionist to come to him with his troubles.

A short time ago I was in a projection room and noticed that the rectifiers were connected up with temporary wiring—not in conduit. I also noticed no less than twenty cigaret butts on the floor. I casually inquired of the projectionist on duty how often the manager visited the booth and was told that he (projectionist) had been working there two months and had never seen the manager in the booth. Then I inquired how long the rectifiers had been connected that way, and he said, "They were that way when I came to work two months ago." I found about three months' supply of carbons in this booth.

When I went down stairs and talked to the manager, he frankly acknowledged that he never went to the booth except when they had trouble, but insisted that the rectifiers had only been installed that way a couple of days. Draw your own conclusions. Can that particular manager effect any control or direction over the booth operation? Is that properly discharging the manager's responsibility to his employer?

There is one tell-tale bit of evidence that is an excellent indication of a manager's interest in this group of repairs—his requisitions for the necessary replacement parts. If you received a requisition for "one set of grate bars," without the make or type or size of the boiler, could you believe for a minute that that manager had personally checked the need for those grate bars? As another example: if you received a requisition for "packing for one pump," could you have faith and confidence that the maanger was on his toes and looking after all details in that theatre?

SPECIAL REPAIRS

Group No. 2 items are such as replacing the drives on motor and fan in order to get more air into the theatre, converting a single bank washer into a double bank washer, changing a 5-horsepower motor for a 7½-horsepower motor, replacing carpet in the center aisles and not in the side aisles or foyer, etc. Such items as fall in this classification usually become apparent to the manager as the result of normal operation.

Expenditures for these items usually run into more money than items in Groups No. 1 and No. 4. Most of these items are discussed and carefully considered with costs or estimates in advance of any definite commitments. Orders are usually placed or contracts signed on specifications drawn up by the vendor or contractor. Before permitting such orders or contracts to be signed, the manager should satisfy himself that the specifications cover correctly the work he desires to have done, and that the job is complete. If the job involves work or the purchase of equipment with which the manager is not familiar or not qualified to pass on, then he should take steps to be assured that someone qualified has passed on it before any commitment is made.

The conditions covered in Group No. 3 are usually substantial expenditures and generally are undertaken only after careful consideration and planning. Many times an architect or engineer or skilled contractor is consulted in planning such work. In all instances involving architectural or structural changes, it is very wise to employ an architect. In cases involving equipment, such as heating or air-conditioning, it is well to consult an engineer.

Of the four groups of repairs and replacements, the theatre manager can handle Groups No. 1, No. 2 and No. 4 with skill and efficiency and at low cost, if he will just commit himself to a semi-monthly or monthly inspection, and use just average intelligence. With Group No. 3, he certainly should have some help.

The answer to low cost maintenance, which includes repair and replacement, is (1) inspections by the manager, (2) observation by the manager, and (3) analysis records of expenditures as to cause.

Training Staff Employes in All The Functions of Management

• How RKO's Cincinnati division is building managerial material for the future by means of a practical school covering all of the departments of theatre proprietorship

SOMEWHAT informally, perhaps, but with appropriate respect for both the course of study and the instructor, the class in Theatre Accounting came to order. The "students" were ushers and staff assistants who are learning theatre management in the "school" organized by Joe Goetz, assistant division manager, for employes of Radio-Keith-Orpheum theatres in Cincinnati. The class room was the office of Miss Rose M. Schmidt, accountant in the Cincinnati division office. Bookkeeping volumes and staff reports illustrating today's lecture were before her.

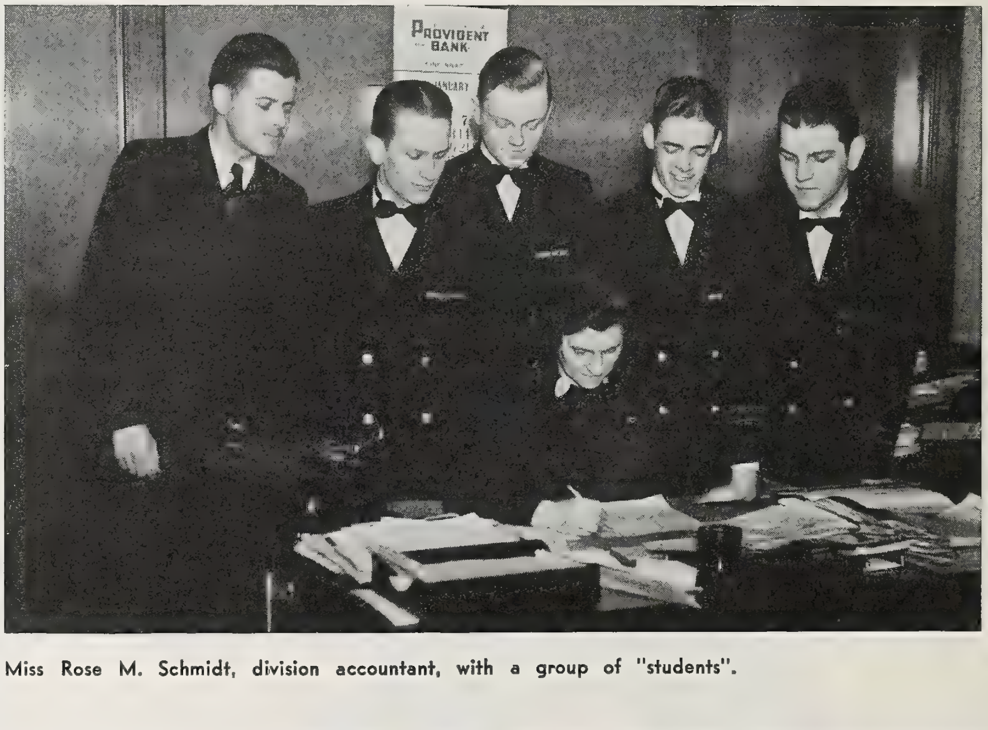
"Here are entries from the daily statements made in our system of accounting," explained Miss Schmidt. "There are three kinds: Hourly reports of ticket sales, made out by the cashier; the cashier's proof sheet, made out by the treasurer; and the daily box office statement. . . "

The "lecture" continued, with each significant point stressed. Questions were solicited from the "students," all young fellows aiming to become theatre managers some day. Actual entries and reports were used as examples. The reasons for the methods, as well as the methods themselves, were demonstrated, right there where the reports were realizing their purpose, where the figures were brought together to tell their story. The class observed and listened attentively—for later on each member would be subjected to a written examination.

"The idea," Mr. Goetz explains, "is to give a young staff employe a practical knowledge of all branches of theatre operation. It is often the case that a theatre manager, especially a young one, is greatly handicapped by his lack of experience in more than one or two departments of the business. Concerning other matters just as important he frequently has made only some haphazard observations. In the long run, training like that we are giving reacts to the company's advantage, for its theatre properties are really in its managers' hands."

METHOD OF INSTRUCTION

As pointed out, all phases of theatre operation are gone into in the course of instruction; three types of classes have been selected for discussion here as particularly illustrative of the interpretation given by the "school" to the functions of a theatre manager today.



Miss Rose M. Schmidt, division accountant, with a group of "students".

To return to the instruction given in accounting: The "students" are made familiar with every step of the box office accounting system—checking up receipts, making out the statements, etc., always with the practical reasons why. They are shown even the correct way of depositing receipts in the bank.

They are also instructed in procedure for keeping account of disbursements and in making out payrolls according to services and departments, so that costs may be properly classified.

Then there is the matter of inventory. Miss Schmidt gave the class an example:

"The assistant manager is to take an inventory of all lamps on hand. He is not to do this by getting a list from the electrician, but he is to go personally to the stock room or the electrician's quarters, check over the lamps with the electrician, and make up a list himself. This must show the type of lamps, the colors, wattages, etc."

The same procedure would be followed with respect to carbons, the chief projectionist assisting, and for all other supplies on hand, even down to the last ticket in the box office ticket register.

In projection and sound, the "students" are given enough knowledge of the equipment parts and the technical processes to make them capable of intelligent supervision of that all-important department. They are taken into a projection room and shown. And Mr. Goetz himself adds a little speech of his own, which runs along these lines:

"I cannot impress upon you too strongly the absolute necessity of paying special attention at all times to projection and sound. Poor projection will ruin the best picture ever made, and when this persists, or recurs frequently, the effect on patrons will be one that is going to hurt the theatre where it hurts the most, and maybe permanently. You have been told that advertising, exploitation, trick lobby displays and so on, are among the things which bring people into the theatre. Poor projection is first among the things that will drive them away.

"I do not want you to get the idea that you will be expected to do any part of the projection work yourselves. That's the projectionist's job. But you should be able to detect variations in the quality of the picture and the sound and be able to decide upon the proper procedure for correcting the condition. You should be able to talk to your projectionists in their own language, not only so that you can supervise the correction of technical faults, but intelligently appraise the suggestions of the projectionists."

The "students" are taken to a projection room in a small group so that each man can examine the equipment as instruction proceeds.

In some phases of operation, managers of the various RKO theatres in Cincinnati take charge of instruction. Let's listen to Erwin Bock, skipper of the RKO theatre, talk to a class on cleaning the theatre:

"Cleanliness is next to godliness," he began on this occasion (with characteristic humor), "but it is next to impossible in the theatre unless it is done systematically and with proper equipment. In the theatre you not only have a lot of people continually tracking in dirt all the time, but you have some patrons throwing peanut shells, bags, ticket stubs and what-not on the floor, and even some who will expectorate (spitting to you) on the floor. Let me give you an outline of my ideas of what is needed and what is to be done to keep your theatre spick and span at all times. I can speak from experience because I've been chasing dirt in theatres for a good many years."

And he proceeded to tell them: First, proper tools for every kind of cleaning; second, experienced help; third, advance planning so that each cleaner may be assigned to a certain job, one he or she is best fitted for; fourth, absolute responsibility of the person in charge of crew for the entire cleaning job; fifth, vacuum cleaning, then dusting after dust has had a chance to settle, never using feather dusters, which only blow the dust, but dust cloths, which should be regularly washed.

Mr. Goetz with a class in projection

And much more they were told, not merely concerning what to do, but how to and why—liquid soap thickens after settling, therefore it should be diluted in four parts of water to one part of soap (that's more economical, too); use a woolen duster on an extension pole for high places; a small broom may be used for carpeting not accessible with vacuum cleaner (some stairs, for example), otherwise vacuum cleaner should be used for all carpets, tapestries and curtains—and these and similar instructions were demonstrated in various parts of the theatre.

EXAMINATIONS

At intervals the "students" are called together for a roundtable discussion. They can ask all the questions they want; if there is something they didn't "get" the first time, they now have a chance to be told again. Then shortly afterward, they are given a written examination.

The examination questions are not necessarily restricted to one subject, but may embrace several branches of operation, especially in a type of examination that is given to find out how much of the instruction the "students" have really absorbed, not merely memorized.—E. H. Mayer.

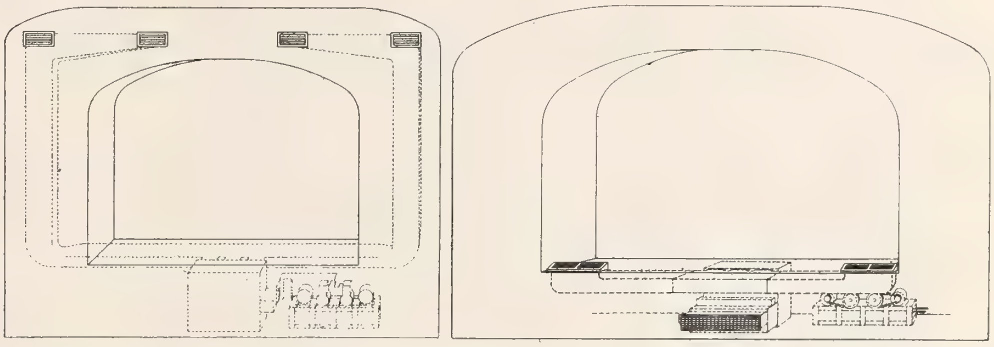
A Simplified Theatre Air-Conditioning Plant



Two distinctive methods of distributing conditioned air from the stage end of the auditorium, among several adapted to the application of Weather Control pre-assembled air-conditioning plants in theatres. In the left hand diagram is a scheme with the plant under the stage and inlet grilles in the proscenium arch. The other method provides for distribution from the sides of the stage apron, and exhaust in front of the stage at the auditorium floor.

TO EFFECT complete air-conditioning in the small theatres—capacities up to 800—a method recently introduced by the Weather Control Corporation of New York depends, for reduction of costs, upon a flexibility of design permitting the application of standard units to compact distribution systems. These units, assembled in the factory, will require less erection costs on the job. This plan minimizes the amount of specialized or skilled labor that must be employed in the installation of the usual air conditioning plant.

The compressors are mounted at the factory on a rigid angle-iron framework which forms the foundation for the compressors and also houses the one or two condensers, depending upon whether one or two compressors are used. The one foundation frame will take one or two compressors. The compressors and condensers are connected at the factory and shipped already charged with freon refrigerant.

The air conditioning cabinets are put up in the factory and shipped in four sections. There is a drip pan section, a coil section, a fan section, and a filter section, and these sections would be set up about in this order. This means that with this system, there are but four units of the conditioner to be assembled on the job, compared to the several hundred operations involved in the usual method of constructing an air conditioning cabinet. There certainly should be some saving here.

The inter-connecting of the freon piping between the conditioning cabinet and the compressor is about all the specialized labor that would be required, and depending upon the locations of the two units this should be but a small item.

In the compressor arrangements the buyer has a wide range or choice of combinations of compressors ranging from one compressor of ten-ton capacity, to two 15-ton compressors, or single units, of 25-, 30-, or 40-ton capacity.

The conditioning cabinets are of two sizes, but depending upon the compressor arrangement, they must be sized to range in actual capacity from 7 tons to 40 tons. The controls and motor starting equipment have been designed so that any good electrician can install them. The controls are adequate for small theatre operation.

The duct system for delivering the conditioned air and the return air method can be as elaborate as desired.—J. T. K.

Announcing

AN IMPORTANT INNOVATION in the THEATRE EQUIPMENT FIELD

Exhibitors, manufacturers and supply dealers have long felt the necessity for a responsible, qualified and experienced agency—for a personalized trade medium—to act as intermediary between manufacturer and supply dealer. They have likewise felt the need for an organization whose knowledge of exhibitors' problems, as well as those confronting both supply dealers and manufacturers, would enable it to offer the Trade equipment and supplies of unquestioned quality.

We are pleased to announce the formation of the undersigned organization to fill those long-felt needs. From our many years of experience, we are in a position to correlate the interests of manufacturers, supply dealers and exhibitors, so that costly experimentation in the field will be eliminated—so that the theatre supply industry will render more intelligent, more efficient service to exhibitors — without added cost to anyone concerned.

Being first in the field, we have naturally chosen the leading products in each class of equipment. We are at the service of architects, manufacturers, dealers and exhibitors — both here and abroad — as wholesale sales engineers. And far from competing with supply dealers, we are here to supplement their efforts to give exhibitors the best possible values in theatre equipment and supplies.

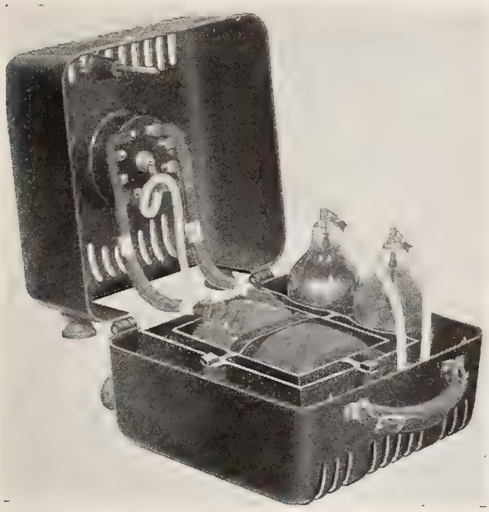
Portable Equipment Of Tube Type for A. C. Rectification

PORTABLE rectification equipment employing a high-reactance transformer operating in connection with Tungar tubes and with all units arranged in an aluminum-alloy case for carrying, has been developed by the Kneisley Electric Company of Toledo. Two 6-ampere tubes operate from any 110-volt a. c. current supply to furnish an output current of 15 amperes at 55 volts. There are voltage taps in addition to current adjustment taps for adaptation to wide voltages.



Transformer leak laminations are moulded into a solid rubber mass, the adhesion of which holds them together and insulates them from metallic surfaces. According to the manufacturer's tests, the rubber also reduces transformer temperature by diminishing eddy currents.

Eight-point rotary dial switches are used for adjustment to output current. The control handle is recessed in the case so as to eliminate all interfering projections.

Projection Room Waste Receptacle

A RECEPTACLE for carbon stubs and other projection room waste has been placed on the market by the Golde Manufacturing Company of Chicago. It is circular and all edges are rounded, while the mouth is cone shaped to prevent stubs and metallic pieces to crash to the bottom. Construction is of steel, while finish is baked crystal enamel. Receiving cup and rim are polished for easy cleaning.

Theatre Fronts For Advertising

FRANK MORGAN STEPIN FETCHIT DOORS OPEN DAILY 12.45 O'CLOCK
BETTY BOOP CARTOON AND NEWS COMPLETE SHOWS AT 1-3-5-7-9 PM

THE THEATRE front has a function which probably makes it less a thing of sheer architecture than a cog in the theatre operating machine—to be regarded less as a facade than as an advertising medium.

It has always been so, of course, but it is the modern designer, with his ideas of functionalism and the materials and devices to carry them out, who has given the essential purpose of the theatre facade effective recognition architecturally. In final analysis, it is to be considered largely as advertising equipment—and three recent installations of front structures are here presented from that point of view.

In the Westown and Radio City theatres illustrated, the entire frontal portion of the building takes its forms directly from a vertical sign, while in the Hollywood a vertical sign is the terminus of converging architectural forms. And in each case the marquee and luminous elements are integral components of this architectural scheme.

The Westown is a neighborhood theatre in Detroit, owned and operated by Wisper & Wetsman. The architect was Charles N. Agree. The Westown is faced in porcelain enamel. The central tower-like structures are yellow, and against them is set the vertical sign with its ground of blue and yellow channel letters trimmed in brown and rust and lighted by luminous gas. The marquee is essentially rectangular, although the two end fascias, which carry Wagner silhouette letter attraction boards, are slightly splayed. Marquee decorative lighting is by incandescent lamps.

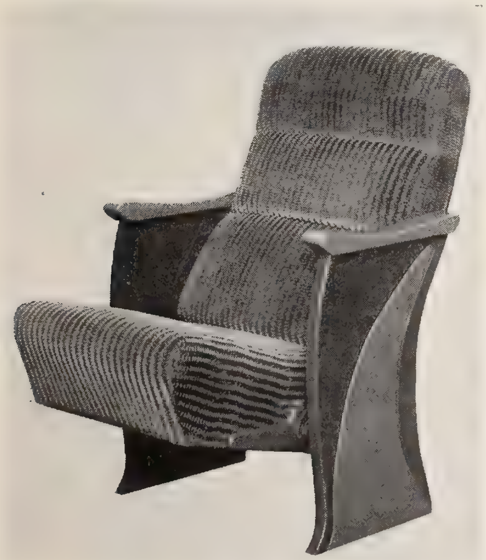
The Radio City theatre is also located in Detroit. This house is owned by William J. Schulte, and H. A. Payne was the architect. The front is built of macotta (which is a structural as well as a facing material consisting in concrete blocks sheathed with porcelain-enamelled steel) in five shades of blue and one shade of red. The vertical sign letters are metal channel painted red and lighted with 40-watt lamps. The marquee border is painted red and lighted with yellow lamps. Attraction boards are by Wagner and have black silhouette letters against a white ground of opalite glass.

The front of the Hollywood theatre is constructed of Mankata stone having a honed finish and laid in three colors, buff, gray and pink, which shades form the color scheme employed throughout the front. Liebenberg & Kaplan were the architects.

The leaded iron marquee is trimmed in two shades of green and in rust and amber. The box office is at the corner, and the marquee curves to extend an equal distance on either side, and at the ends as well as at the corner it is surmounted by luminous ornamentation on a flasher, consisting in both incandescent lamps and luminous gas in green, gold and red. Attraction boards are by Wagner with silhouette letters against a white ground. From the base of the vertical sign white light is reflected upward, while the sign itself has a front edging in lamps, a rear edging in gas, and damped channel letters.

New Chair with Three-Cushioned Contoured Back

A THEATRE chair in a design emphasizing luxurious comfort in general styling as well as in the deep upholstering, has been brought out by the Ideal Seating Company of Grand Rapids, Mich. The back, instead of following a straight inclination with horizontal curvature, follows instead the contours of the fireside easy chair, with three horizontal cushioned sections, the central one forming a recess for the shoulders, the upper one, which is tilted forward a little, offering a support at the neck or head.



In construction, the design follows that of this manufacturer's established types, with ball-bearing, compensating hinges; greased-packed bearings fully enclosed for protection from dirt; and cast-iron standards in a variety of modern patterns and permitting 6-inch seat adjustment.

How Prompt Repairing Of the Projector Saves Money

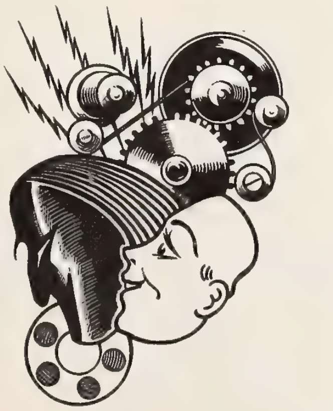
• A brief but documented argument against the penny-wise, pound-foolish policy of projection maintenance, which neglects without economy

THE NEED, always urgent, of a screen image that does full justice to the pictorial qualities of the film, has been stressed on many occasions and by many people. Theoretically, at least, that need is conceded. In practice, however, that need is too often the victim of operating economy. Inspections are not regularly made, defective parts are not promptly repaired —in order to save money. Applied as a policy, that is false economy.

The several parts of the projector mechanism are so inter-connected, by reason of the inherent nature of the device, that an imperfection developing anywhere is extremely likely to suffer "transportation" to some other point, making two troubles grow where only one grew before. The driving mechanism, the mesh of gears and shafts through which the sprockets connect with the common source of motion, constitutes one avenue for multiplying troubles. A second and equally important part of "transporation" is the moving film itself. When, through either route or through both, a single trouble has grown into two troubles, a second "focus of infection," as the doctors say, has been set up, from which still other troubles are created in other places. In the end some simple difficulty, which might originally have been cured by tightening a screw, has grown into a thoroughly defective head that needs a major operation. Projectionists, in the main, are aware of this; it's the manager who is more likely to ignore it.

Consider for example loosening of the screw that holds the main drive gear in mesh, permitting that gear to slip somewhat out of mesh. Wear now appears against only part of the width of the main drive gear, and against only part of the width of the intermediate gear upon which it works. Since the intermediate gear is of smaller diameter, each of its teeth will come into action several times as often as one tooth of the main drive gear, and the loose holding screw of the main drive gear produces a ridge in the intermediate. The ridge is of course created by the fact that only part of each tooth sustains wear. The ridge grows rapidly because the full work and wear of driving the projector, which should be carried by the whole width of a gear tooth, is now concentrated upon a part of that tooth.

Thus a worn condition, making for imperfect operation of the projector, is created much more rapidly than it should be, and as the gears approach the point of slippage a clanking noise appears and irregular operation spreads through every element of the projection mechanism.



One of the many types of trouble that can be transmitted by the moving film, rather than by the gear train, originates in improper lateral alignmen of the film guides at the top of the head. When these guides shift out of line with the intermittent, the gate pads will wear unevenly. Uneven wear in the gate pads permits the film to leave the hardened surfaces of the E-plate, which have been prepared for it to ride on, and to wear against softer surfaces of that plate, which cannot stand the friction. The first unfavorable result is a jumpy picture. The next is necessity for replacing the E-plate. Lastly, the abnormally loose pressure upon the film as it passes through the gate results in undue wear of the intermittent sprocket and of the intermittent star and cam.

The same conditions can be created by a bit of dirt lodging in a gate pad. Before it is removed that bit of dirt may have created uneven tension in the pad springs, with consequent uneven wear of the gate pads, which then is followed by the same train of events just traced.

Again, bad film, improperly patched, may bend or spring the apron of the gate, as a result of losing the lower loop. If the apron is bent back evenly, wear will come at the top rather than at the base of the intermittent sprocket teeth. If the apron is sprung, the teeth at one side of the intermittent sprocket may wear at the top, and those at the other side of the same sprocket wear at the base. The same type of wear can be created in any sprocket by uneven pad roller tension of by a sprung pad roller shaft.

A number of the conditions of imperfect operation, which in themselves may not set up immediately noticeable faults upon the screen, can by indirection stop the show suddenly and completely, as a result of the interdependence of all parts of the projector mechanism. For example, excessive wear on the star and cam, produced in the manner just described or in some other way, may result in sufficient excess of vibration to loosen the holding screw in the spindle gear of the revolving shutter. If that screw drops out and falls into those gears the machine will stop with great suddenness, and more than likely half the parts in it will be sprung or stripped or otherwise need replacement before that projector works again. This is not a far - fetched possibility. There are not a few projectionists who can testify it has happened to them, and many more who have caught the loosening screw and re-tightened it just in the nick of time.

And so it is all the way down the line. Regular inspection of the equipment, and prompt repair form the only economical means of making certain that the show will go on—effectively.—George Schutz.

How the New Developments In Sound Affect Maintenance

● Examining repair and replacement factors and equipment inspection in the light of today's sound engineering methods; the second of two articles

By AARON NADELL

THE NEWER requirements at and about the projector mechanism and soundhead have often been presented to the industry. The exciter light must now be focused accurately to 1/1000th of an inch, instead of 1/500th or 1/750th, as formerly. This calls for exciter filaments with less sag, better optical systems and less vibration.

To preserve the benefits of better sound quality, amplifier tubes need replacing more readily and should be held to closer tolerances of plate current. Push-pull tubes should be more carefully matched. Manufacturers will supply specifications for any given amplifier. Note that tube ratings, as supplied by tube manufacturers, are not a reliable guide in this matter. Modern amplifiers not infrequently are designed to drive tubes at values of voltage and current that differ considerably from those given on tube data sheets. The amplifier manufacturer should be consulted, not the tube maker.

Acoustic adjustments are more critical by reason of the greater difficulty attending proper distribution of the high frequencies. Even with the new multiple-cell high frequency speakers some auditoriums need a great deal of very exacting work before the new sound has been properly delivered to every seat.

These are requirements attending the extension of frequency range. Extended volume range, together with the new efficiency of sound equipment, narrows permissible tolerances in power supply. The margin between output power of an amplifier and power supplied to it to work it has been drastically reduced, resulting in quite substantial power economies over the course of a year's operation, but with the offsetting result that sound output is much more closely dependent on power input. The necessary precautions are described below, under the heading of line voltage tolerances.

Wave form distortion results readily from overpowering of amplifier tubes, and is also produced by underpowering loudspeaker fields.

Flutter, now so much more important than ever, can today be measured quite accurately by its effect upon the reproduced sound. It can be observed, although not measured very easily, by an oscilloscope. It is still not practicable for the average theatre to purchase flutter measuring equipment, but the obvious precautions of keeping projector, soundhead and takeup in perfect condition remain none the less vital if the audience is to hear sound of the quality the exhibitor tried to buy when he put in new equipment.

The need for scientific (rather than rule-of-thumb) acoustic treatment is in some auditoriums shown up drastically by modern improvements in sound, and occasionally may prove imperative. A curious acoustic complication is the possible existence of resonant objects in the theatre, usually associated with the lighting fixtures, that were not resonant at the frequencies of sound formerly available, but vibrate in response to some tone in the extended range. The existence of such objects is sometimes unsuspected, especially when they are inaccessibly located, and blame for the defective sound may be placed unjustly upon the system. The writer knows of one case where a new system was deliberately "compensated" to give less than its best quality in order to overcome the effect of a resonant fixture that was not recognized as such.

Unsuspected resonance in speaker baffles may also need attention, especially when the frequency range is extended downward.

NEW TUBES, ETC.

The efficiency of some of the newer tubes, and particularly of the beam power tubes, is so high that they have relatively little margin of safety against overloading and must be protected accordingly. Other new tube types, again, incorporate in a single glass or metal envelope more amplification than was formerly found in a whole amplifier consisting of many tubes, and the quality of their sound output shows greatly increased sensitivity to improper socket voltages.

Electrolytic condensers, the use of which is now almost universal because of their cheapness and compactness, are to some degree subject to deterioration with time, which the older paper and mica condensers were not. Polarity is another factor not associated with the older condensers, which had none, but electrolytic replacements must be wired in proper polarity or they will break down at once.

Resistors today are less likely than formerly to be built on generous lines, capable of withstanding extensive and prolonged overheating. Considerations of space as well as cost often dictate the use of the common radio type. All models from one to five watts look aproximately alike in the matter of physical dimensions, but none of them will stand very much in the way of overload. Corresponding care is needed in selecting replacements.

The new speakers, on the other hand, are much sturdier than the most popular early types. Speaker breakdown is incomparably less common than in the days when numbers of spare speaker units were standard equipment in every theatre.

LINE TOLERANCES

Some of the most modern systems, like so many of the older ones, will stand up and continue to operate under extreme fluctuations of line voltage, subject only to the deterioration and eventual breakdown caused by prolonged overheating. Some will even give good sound under such circumstances, although none can give their best. But most models of modern equipment will not withstand that kind of abuse. Some will break down instantly.

There are several good reasons, a number of which have already been mentioned. To them may be added the fact that greater compactness of construction is likely to increase the opportunities for flash-over. Metal tubes of some types are very critical to high plate voltage—the plate lead is not brought out through a thick glass sleeve, as in glass types, but is insulated from the metal shell only by a small glass bead. The bead must be small because the tube base is small, in spite of the fact that it carries more contact prongs than the far larger glass types that cannot do any more.

But the greater efficiency of modern systems facilitates the installation of line voltage controls. Suitable controls now cost much less because they need handle far less input power. Manually operated control units for the largest theatre systems can be bought for less than $20. Wholly automatic units that need no attention, except a very rare inspection, sell for less than $50. They are valuable investments, and in many communities absolute necessities. The penalty for omitting them, in such communities, may be repeated breakdowns and continual expense for needless repairs.

TROUBLESHOOTING

Requirements of troubleshooting and of maintenance have been utterly changed by modern methods of design and construction. There are new troubles to guard against. A fair number have already been mentioned, although many more could be added if space allowed.

Some old troubles are entirely eliminated. For example, the expansion of a power tube filament until it touched the grid, was formerly the first subject of suspicion and investigation when a power amplifier "blew out." Today that condition would be one of the last to look for, and in many popular types of output tubes cannot occur at all.

Voltmeter or headphone tests of the leads between component portions of the sound system, to find which component was at fault, used to constitute the fastest way of running down trouble. Now most if not all of the component parts are built into one casing, and there are no connecting leads. The internal wiring of each component part and the connecting wiring between several parts are for the most part one and the same thing.

Trouble traced to one amplifier or power supply unit was usually investigated within that unit by voltmeter and headphones. That can still be done, but the parts are now so crowded together, that it is likely to prove a slow process. Wiring is also much more closely bunched and harder to run down, because there are so many parts in a small space, and because some of the parts (tubes with more than four prongs) need more wires than formerly. Socket testing equipment, especially of the type that provides plug-in facilities, is now much more valuable, and for fast work in time of emergency is almost indispensable. Moreover, complete analyzers suited to the majority of theatre system models can be bought today for about the same cost as volt-ammeter and headphones alone could be only a very few years ago.

The increasing dependence of modern tubes upon really accurate socket voltages has dictated the development of voltmeters of higher internal resistance, which give more accurate readings. Such meters are used in the new inexpensive analyzer sets. Vacuum tube voltmeters, which are even more accurate, are also common and not particularly costly.

The oscilloscope is among the newer test instruments that give results never before obtainable and that can be bought at moderate cost. The availability and low price of these testers is based, not on theatre conditions, but on the development of sound systems (using microphones) for innumerable functions, and upon the increasing use of high power in home radio receivers. A mass market now exists for test equipment that not so long ago would have been of use only in theatres and in scientific laboratories, and prices are based on mass production.

The same conditions are also responsible for the fact that all of the delicate and valuable instruments just mentioned are commonly found in the hands of the nearest radio repair man, who in most cases will be very pleased to rent them at a nominal fee.

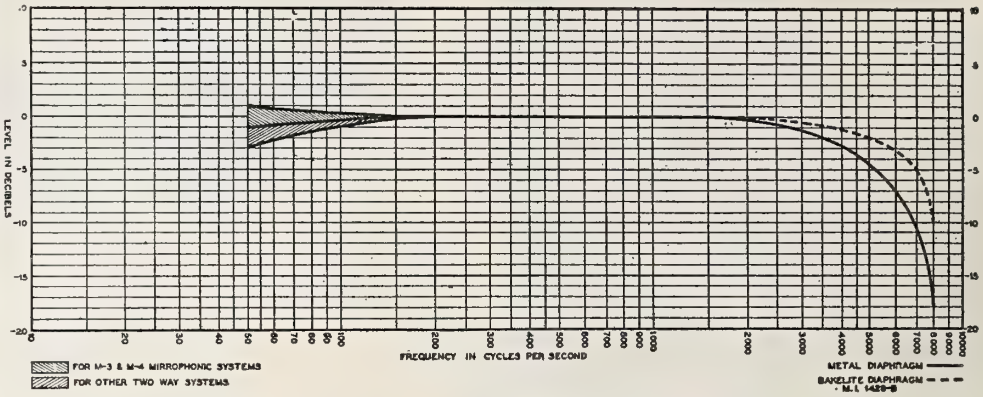
Adjusting the Horn System To New Electrical Standard



Graph of electrical run under new recording standard. See text.

ADOPTION BY the studios, upon recommendation of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, of a standard electrical characteristic for all recordings, is a step toward more uniform sound quality in theatres, but only careful adjustment of both speakers and acoustics can bring about the advance sought.

The chart shows those volume indicator readings of certain popular sound systems, which, in theatres of average acoustic quality, will give best results with the new standardized recordings.

The usefulness of the chart in those theatres to which it applies, and the methods that must be used in all other theatres, are best understood by recalling the limitations of the volume indicator test.

This test reads sound as applied to the loud speakers, and is popular because of its simplicity. It needs only a standard source of sound input; namely, a test reel, and a simple meter, calibrated in decibels, which is connected with the loudspeaker circuit. The power delivered to the loudspeakers at each sound frequency can thus be measured very accurately, and a chart similar to that shown here is readily made. The test, however, does not show what the loudspeakers do to the sound they receive, or how much of it they deliver to the audience, and of course it does not show what the acoustics of the house may do to the sound after it leaves the speakers.

The new standardized recordings will unquestionably require minor adjustments of sound response in a great many theatres, in order to obtain the best possible quality. The chart facilitates the making of such adjustments with an ordinary volume indicator test, provided the sound system is one of those covered by the chart, and provided acoustics are reasonably normal.

The systems covered are W. E. Mirrophonic M-3 and M-4, and RCA systems using RCA or Lansing metal diaphragms or RCA bakelite diaphragms. RCA speakers to which the chart applies are MI-1435 metal diaphragm speakers with MI-1432A; RCA MI-1428B bakelite diaphragm speakers with MI-1432A, and RCA Lansing-equipped systems using type 284 metal diaphragm speakers with 15X low-frequency units.

With such equipment operating under average acoustic conditions, use as test reel RCA Catalog No. 27637, or Erpi test film ED-20. In the case of the latter, the corrections printed on the back of the can in which the film is furnished must be applied to the readings as obtained by the meter. The readings obtained at each frequency are noted by marking a small cross on standard semi-log paper, which can be obtained through any large stationer, and which provides a background identical with that of the chart shown. When all frequencies have been read, a line is drawn through the crosses marked on the graph, producing a curve similar to those of the chart.

This graph indicates the necessary compensation for the effect upon the sound of the loudspeakers themselves. With any of the systems mentioned above, the frequency response should be adjusted, and repeated readings taken, until a curve is obtained which is identical with the correct curve for the system in question, as indicated in chart data. The adjustment that then exists will give the best possible sound with the new recordings.

The importance of making the recommended modifications may be judged by the fact that in some studios, at some frequencies, adjustments of as much as 20 decibels have had to be made to convert existing recording practices to the new standard.

Where sound systems used are other than those listed above, or where acoustic conditions are in any way unusual, the data of the chart will not apply. Suitable modification is best made, in such cases, by means of acoustic testing equipment utilizing a calibrated microphone operating in the auditorium—or in lieu of such equipment, by a series of trial and error adjustments with the new recordings, aimed at securing the best tone quality as judged by ear.

COMMENT ON PROJECTION AFFAIRS

and answers to inquiries . . . By F. H. RICHARDSON

A POLICY OF TRUE ECONOMY IN THE PROJECTION ROOM

I HAVE harped on it for years—and now I am going to add still another chapter, for there is no such thing as saying too much about the absolute necessity of maintaining, at all times, the highest possible projection standards. And I have reason to believe that one is as justified in bringing this matter to the attention of projectionists and their employers today as at any time in years past. Economic conditions in recent years naturally have forced theatre owners to think in terms of saving rather than spending. There is nothing necessarily wrong about such an attitude, of course; any business should practice economy rather than extravagance. And there are many places in the theatre where a policy of economy can be safely applied. But the projection room is certainly not to be included among them.

Any economy short of the elimination of absolute waste, is false economy in matters of projection and sound. Projection and sound produce the show, don't they? And what, may I be permitted to ask, is the theatre selling?

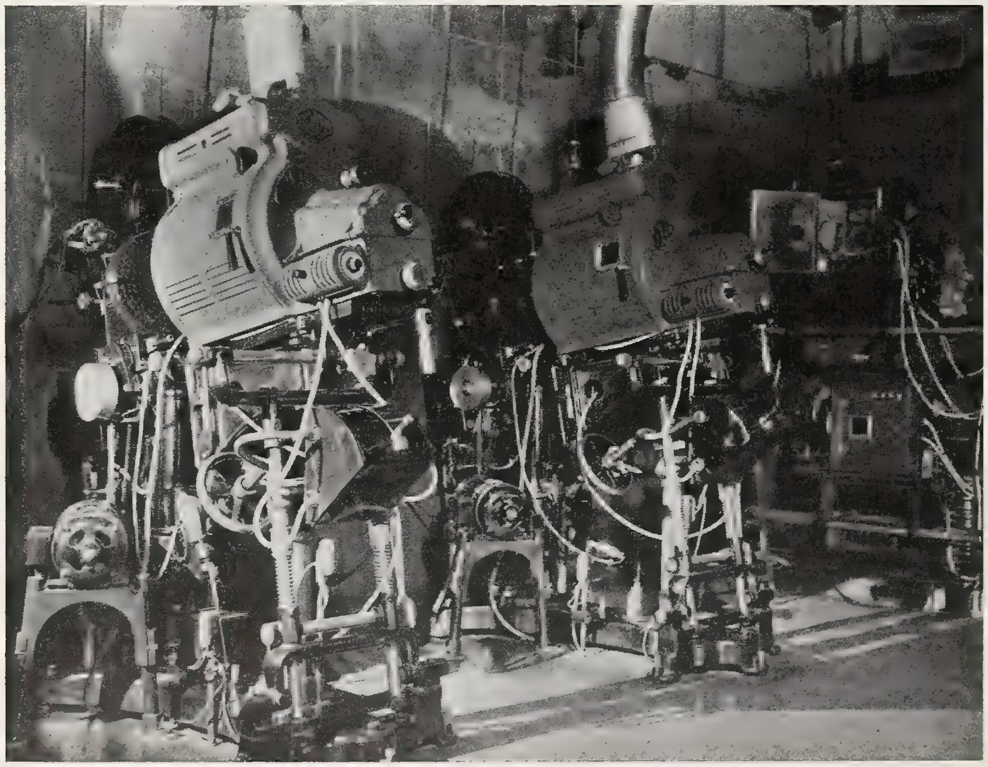
Then, too, there is the matter of efficiency. Inefficiency costs money somewhere. Perhaps the screen image is all right. But are you sure you are not getting an all-right image by paying for more current than would be required if your equipment were in proper condition and of suitable type?

To be considered also is the fact that all the parts of the equipment are nicely adjusted to each other—a defect in one is quite likely, sooner or later, to affect some other. Moreover, it frequently happens that an undiscovered defect, or postponement of repairing a part, leads to more costly repairing or to entire replacement later on.

It is utterly impossible to judge the condition of many of the parts of a projector merely by looking at them. Wear that is wholly invisible to the eye eventually makes some parts unfit for further use. Some elements of the equipment are tooled to tolerances of less than ten thousandths of an inch. These parts will seem all right to the eye even when worn ten times that much.

Such faults finally get through to the screen, but their effect is gradual and not readily apparent to persons who are looking at the screen, at frequent intervals, every day in the week; a little wear, for example, in intermittent sprocket teeth may not be discernible to one taking it for granted that they are perfect.

There is only one economical policy for theatre management to follow: Insist upon proper inspections of the projection and sound equipment, and upon immediate reports whenever defects are found existent or threatening; then provide the necessary replacements or means of repair. No projectionist is likely to turn in unnecessary requisitions. And at any rate, theatre managers should know at least enough about projection and sound to tell whether they are unnecessary or not—really tell, not guess, making a personal investigation if a requisition appears questionable. The equipment should never be allowed to get into a state of disrepair at any point. To allow it to do so is to slight projection and could there be more ill-advised economy than that?



Battery of projectors, motion picture and otherwise, in the projection room of the Bailey theatre, Shea circuit house in Buffalo, N. Y. This picture was taken after installation of new lamps. They are Brenkert Enarcs, which are supplied by Hertner 200-ampere motor-generators (300 amperes half-hour rating with double-throw switchboard arranged so that by balancing the load, 600 amperes can be pulled). Projectors are Simplex, with Projection Optics lenses. Sound system is Western Electric. Both spot and effect equipment are by Brenkert. The room is 26 x 18 feet, the throw is 131 feet, and the projection angle 11 degrees. Both projector lamphouses have exhaust fan ventilation, as does the room. Kenneth R. Caldwell is chief projectionist.

AMPERES AND LIGHT GAIN

FROM LOUISIANA comes this inquiry: "Is there any way in which the projectionist may offer intelligent, reliable advice as to the gain in light each added ampere of current makes available? Also is it properly the office of theatre managers to butt into projection affairs, any more than it is for the projectionist to tell the manager how to run the theatre? In event you rely through your Comment, please do not reveal my name, or even my location. You can, I imagine, understand my reason for such a request."

On page 372 of your new Bluebook (I presume you have one) you will see that the average light intensity for low-intensity light sources is 165 candle power for

ENGINEERS AND MANUFACTURERS • • • DETROIT, MICHIGAN U • S • A each square millimeter of crater area. You will also see that each added ampere of current increases crater area by approximately 1.85 square millimeters. It therefore follows that for that type of light source each added ampere of current increases light production by 165×1.85= 305.25 candle power.

You do not say what type of arc you are using, so in answering your question I will consider two types, the low-intensity reflecting arc and the suprex arc. In the low intensity arc, increase of arc current does two things. It increases the crater area and, up to a certain point, it increases the brilliancy of the crater face, that is, the candle power per square millimeter of crater area. Now increase in crater area means more total light from the arc, but not necessarily more light on the screen, and I assume you are asking about screen light.

At the lowest current recommended by the manufacturer for a given diameter of carbon, the crater area a little more than covers that part of the crater face which is focused within the opening of the film aperture. So you can see that merely making the crater larger by running up the current throws no more light on the screen if everything is in accurate adjustment. However, increase of current may also make the crater more brilliant and in that way increase the intensity and whitness of the light on the screen. That depends on how close you are working to the limiting temperature of the crater. When the crater temperature has been raised to the boiling point of carbon, further increase of current will only make the crater larger; it cannot make it any hotter or more brilliant. It is just like boiling water in an open pan. When the water has started to boil it is at a temperature of 212° F.; turning up the gas will make it boil faster but will not make it any hotter. In the same way the boiling point of carbon is fixed at a temperature slightly over 6600° F., and that temperature determines the maximum brilliancy of the crater.

Let us take a specific example. If you are using a "regular" 12-mm. positive low-intensity carbon and operating within the recommended current range of 21 to 25 amperes, the crater temperature and brilliancy will be below the limiting values A change of one ampere will then produce a change in the amount of light on the screen, probably on the order of 2%. But if you are using an "SRA" trim of the same size, which is designed for operation at a current range of 28 to 32 amperes, you will be getting just about the maximum possible crater temperature and brilliancy throughout this range. So while the screen light will be brighter and whiter than that from the regular carbon at 25 amperes, you won't be able to see much change when the current is increased from 28 to 32 amperes. There is good reason, however, to operate your low-intensity arc near the upper current limit because, at the lower limit, the part of the crater maintained at full brilliancy just a little more than covers the film aperture. If the lamp gets out of adjustment or the carbon out of position you are likely to get dark corners on the screen. At the maximum current recommended there is a larger crater area maintained at full brilliancy. This gives more leeway in carbon and lamp adjustment before dark corners appear.

The limitations of crater brilliancy of the low-intensity arc do not apply with the same force to the suprex arc in which the increase in crater area with increasing amperes is very small and brilliancy does increase with rising currents.

With the suprex arc, the increase in screen illumination is about 4% per ampere over the full range of recommended current. These current ranges, above or below which it is not advisable to operate a given diameter of carbon, have been carefully determined by the carbon manufacturer from practical operating experience as well as laboratory tests. The projectionist should keep within these recommended limits. Otherwise he is likely to experience either poor quality of projection or other difficulties which more than offset any possible advantages gained from higher or lower arc current. This holds true for both the low-intensity and suprex types of arc.

As to the right of managers to "butt into" projection affairs, that depends upon just what "butt in" might be construed to mean. Certainly the manager has the right to go as far as he likes in interfering in the affairs, since he is, after all, respon-

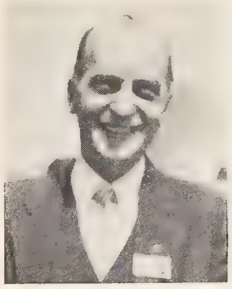
RUDOLPH MIEHLING: HE SERVED PROJECTION WELL

ONE BY ONE the "old-timers" slip away into the mists. The last was Rudolph Miehling, who died in New York April 7.



Rudolph Miehling

Rudy, who accomplished much of value in the projection field, as a member of the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and in many other ways, was born in the lower Avenue A section of New York City on July 22, 1887. He attended the schools of that section, and afterward Syracuse and Columbia Universities. From the latter he was graduated in 1901, with a degree in electrical engineering. He later entered the electrical business under the firm name of Miehling & Cabot.

In 1904 he accepted a position as superintendent in the Buick Motor Company plant at Flint, Mich. In 1908 he took up electrical contracting in the city of Saginaw, Mich., and it was there that he became interested in motion picture technology.

It seems a road show had trouble with its crude arc light source, and Rudy was called upon for advice. He promptly constructed a water-barrel resistance, such as many of us projectionists of early days were familiar with. Shortly after this he returned to New York City and a bit later took up projection. He was one of the charter members of Local 306, IATSE & MPMO.

The first of his many contributions to the new medium came while he was with the Kinemacolor Company, of which he finally became chief engineer. It was Rudy Miehling who designed the first revolving stage upon which two or more sets were made available for use without disturbing the camera apparatus. When radio came along, he identified himself with the field also, designing some of the most successful of the earlier receiving sets.

He later became interested in the reflector arc lamps being introduced into projection, associated with the Morelite Company. Then came sound pictures, and he entered the Bell Laboratories as an engineer. Later on he joined Electrical Research Products, Inc., and subsequently went to the Royal Amplitone Company as its chief engineer.

The following organizations numbered him among their members: American Projection Society, Local 306, Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and Society Electrical Engineers. He also was a thirty-third degree Mason. Surviving him are his wife and a son, Charles.

POSSIBLE CAUSES OF MIKE FEED-BACK

ROBERT S. MIX, projectionist of Williamsport, Pa., comes forward with this headache: "My last call upon you for help was in 1916, when we still were herding them in at five and ten to view five-reel super-specials. I have several editions of your Bluebook, and in the Herald 'Bluebook School,' and your Comment in BETTER THEATRES I have found almost everything one could want with regard to projection—but now I'm really stuck!

"I purchased a pair of Holmes silent projectors recently and had them converted to sound. Have used them on several jobs with excellent results. Finding a demand for public address work, I procured a crystal microphone to add to the outfit, whereupon trouble bobbed up. The mike has a very bad feed-back (bad squeal)

"Speakers are Mellaphone dynamic, with rectifier in the speaker case to supply current to the field. Amplifier is Mellaphone WRTA3, having 7 tubes, as follows: two 57's, two 56's, two 2A3's and a 5Z3 rectifier. I have tried several sizes of condensers across the mike to remove the squeal, also several combinations of resistors. The latter have no effect at all, while with condenser it cuts out entirely.

"Mellaphone folks tell me to use condensers, but—(see above). An engineer suggested insertion of a 0.1-megohm resistor in plate circuit, with a 4-microfarad condenser to ground in same circuit. Fine—only it didn't work! What bothers me most is the fact that I can run pictures and sound perfectly, but as soon as the mike is cut in, Mr. Squeal gets busy and it's all flooey. Have tried padding the speakers, also put them in a separate room, without result. The squeal stays put. Have hooked it direct to the grid of the 57 tube, as per maker's instruction, with 5-megohm resistor to ground."

There are two possibilities: The output power may be feeding back to the amplifier input, either through the wiring of the amplifier itself or its connecting cables. This would cause the squeal. The feedback may be acoustical, occurring in the air between the loudspeakers and microphone. The latter is the more probable explanation and should be tested for first.

To do so, place the speakers in a separate room (you did this, but try it again, being sure to close all doors or other openings between the rooms and otherwise eliminating all possibility that the speaker sound can be heard at the microphone location. In the event the squeal disappears under the above described condition, the next step would be to install a directional microphone, rotating it into a position in which it does not respond to sound originating at the loudspeaker location when placed for normal operation.

Having no data available on the Mellaphone WRTA3 amplifier, I cannot recommend a directional mike, but the Mellaphone Corporation should be able to do so. In the event the amplification is great enough, an Amperite beam type velocity mike would serve. If there is not enough amplification, a "bullet" dynamic mike might be all right, hooked up through a suitable coupling transformer. However, the first step is to make the before described test to determine whether the trouble is acoustical or not.

In the event the test shows the trouble to be electrical, the shielding and grounding of the mike cable may be suspected. The shielding is (or should be) solidly bonded to the mike's metal frame at one end, and to the chassis of the amplifier at the other. Apparently the ground connecting to that shielding consists in the bond to the chassis, which latter may or may not be bonded to earth.

This is the common arrangement, but the diagram sent along of another amplifier shows an uncommon mike input arrangement in which the mike cable must not be grounded in any way. If your amplifier has the same circuit, the arrangement recommended in the microphone manufacturer's bulletin must not be used. Instead, the shielding of the cable should be treated as one of two wires and should be connected to the tip of the mike plug, not to the sleeve of that plug.

One other possibility is that the mike cable is allowed to coil around the amplifier itself, in close proximity to the output tubes. This must be avoided.

WHEN APERTURE PLATES MAY BE RESHAPED

JOHN L. NAGLE of St. Louis writes, "Recently a projectionist with whom I am acquainted installed new aperture plates in his projectors. The screen image was then about 2 inches too small in width, but high enough. He proceeded to file the apertures until the screen image filled the mask. Is that the right thing to do?"

That is a pretty broad question, but apparently, as you describe the case, the old apertures were not of standard width; also, there apparently was only a slight projection angle; either that, or the old plates had been filed out.

Filing an aperture is wrong procedure except where the projection angle calls for paralleling the sides of the screen image, in which case projector manufacturers will supply special plates below the standard opening dimensions; then working with extreme care, with white light on the screen so that the effect of every stroke of the file may be watched, and a thin rope so suspended that it outlines the desired side lines, the projectionist is at liberty to file the opening until the sides are parallel. Any filing other than that is not permissible. All aperture openings are made exactly standard—they are 0.600-inch high by 0.825-inch wide.

A LETTER SHOWING THE RIGHT SPIRIT

GLEN AKINS, projectionist of Dallastown, Pa., writes an interesting letter on a number of things and expresses therein a commendable pride in his work. He says, in part:

"I am a member of Local 283, York, Pa. (IATSE, of course), at present projecting at Warner Brothers deluxe Strand theatre in this city. I also am sound technician at the York Valencia ballroom, which is advertised (not without cause) as the most beautiful ballroom in Pennsylvania. I am proud to say I designed and constructed its radio receiving equipment and I monitor its programs. So you see I am busy. In addition, I operate my own experimental transmitter (call letters W3ART).

"May I remark that the cathode ray oscillograph results in extremely accurate adjustment of the optical system of sound reproducing equipments when used in connection with a 9,000-cycle test loop (film).

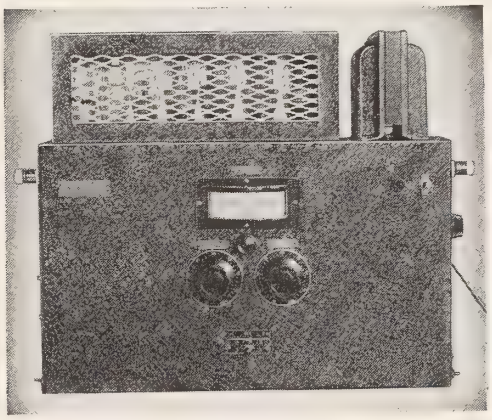
"Brother Richardson, my hobby is—in fact, my whole existence centers around—recording and reproduction of sound as used in connection with motion pictures. My ultimate goal is that of recording engineer and I intend to fight my way to the top. Difficult? Yes, but it can be done."

I like young fellows like Akins. Projection has need for men able to realize that there is a top, and who are willing to study and fight their way upward. Above all else, the motion picture industry needs ambitious men in theatre projection rooms, for projectionists who are lukewarm about

APPROVED!!

The 675 radio broadcasting stations in the U. S. all operate with equipment approved by the Federal Communications Commission. Not one can come on the air with off brand or unapproved equipment.

Over 500 of these stations in some major form are using Gates built radio broadcasting equipment. Such famous names as Canadian Marconi Co., Columbia Broadcasting System, the U. S. War and Agricultural departments, the Australian Government and Philco appear in our list of clientele.



The 87-A

The Gates 87-A High Fidelity Theatre Amplifier (pictured to left) is manufactured under the same rigid quality standards as is Gates commercial broadcasting equipment. When your theatre has an 87-A it can have no finer and yet the price is remarkably low for such quality. Write for Bulletin 2002 today.

A MAY HINT

May brings warm, damp weather. Several hundred power transformers in theatre amplifiers will burn out. This will not happen in an 87-A. Its power transformer is built of humidity resistant material.

SPLITTING 2000-FOOT REELS TO SAVE CARBON STUBS

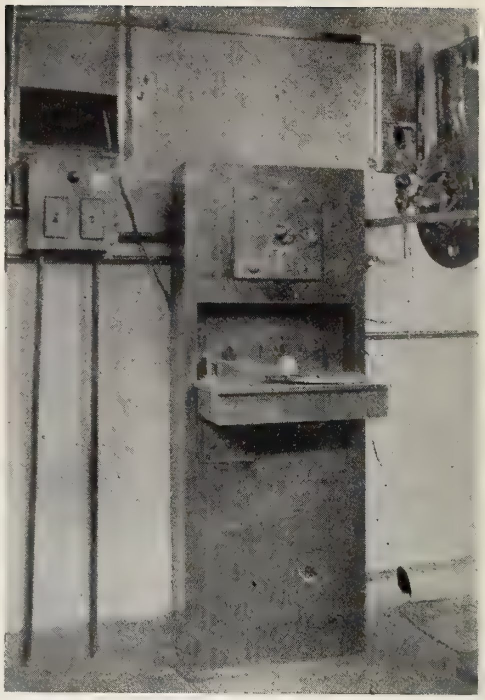
A CALIFORNIA projectionist (who requests that he not be identified) writes, "The manager of this theatre has suggested that I write you concerning carbons and the new 2000-foot reels. I have quite a few that are just a bit too short to run the average 2000-foot reel. Their number, of course, increases steadily. It would represent a considerable waste to throw them away. The Peerless Magnarc lamps we use burn the stubs as short as any carbon saver would and we do not have sufficient 1000-foot reels to use them up. The manager has suggested as a solution that I tear down the 2000-foot reels until the stubs are used up. May we have your reaction upon this matter?"

No one can justly criticize any proposal to eliminate waste, provided the necessary action does not itself have objectionable features. I suggest that before attempting to avoid the relatively small waste involved in those stubs, you consider what is involved in tearing down the 2000-foot release reels.

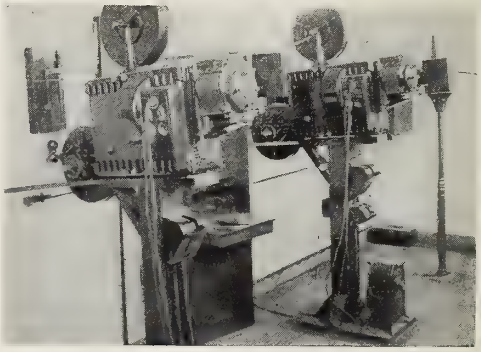
First, you must cut the film, which means at best the elimination of at least one frame, and more if a tail-piece and leader are to be attached. Then at reassembling, more frames must be destroyed, so that in the end a decided jump in sound is created for the next theatre (unless the frames are restored by the exchange, which is unlikely), and a jump in the action as well. And since this would occur four times in an eight-reel subject, you would create four such "jumps" in the performances of other theatres until the frames are restored. And if it is right for you to do this, it also would be right for the other theatres to do it, whereupon in a week's time very serious disturbance in continuity would be set up.

My answer therefore must be and is an emphatic, no. Nor can I see any other way in which the stubs may be used, unless you care to risk damage to your own show by joining two stubs, which I believe one device introduced quite a while back makes possible. After some search I have been unable to locate its manufacturer, but as I remember it, the device was able to cut the end of one stub so that it could be inserted tightly into a hole bored in another stub. Just how successful this scheme was I do not know, as no reports were received.

On the whole, however, while I do not at all like waste, still it does seem there are so many highly important problems to be solved in almost every theatre that it after all is perhaps not advisable to expend much energy to save a few cents a day in



Above and below are snapshots which D. E. Birdsong, projectionist of the Best theatre in Pulaski, Tenn., has sent in, showing his projection room. Projectors are Simplex-Acme, sound is RCA. Birdsong himself made the amplifier rack, which carries non-sync equipment. The monitor control is on the wall at the right of the amplifier. Projector motor switches are mounted under port. Projectors are spaced 5 feet and are mounted on pedestals made by Birdsong. Projection distance is 137 feet at an angle of 4 degrees. Rewinder, storage cabinet and bench are against wall behind the projectors. The room is 22 feet wide, 12 feet deep and 20 feet high. Walls are painted a light green. Incidentally, Brother Birdsong indicates he thinks it would be a good idea for projectionists to swap pictures of their projection rooms.—F. H. R.



THE BEST MEANS OF STUDYING PROJECTION

LETTERS ARRIVE regularly asking what projection school I can recommend.

I always decline to recommend any correspondence school of projection. Possibly there may be some that deserve commendation. If so, I have no knowledge of them. It is my honest belief that the best available course for a working projectionist who desires to add to his knowledge, is to study a good book on projection and sound, and to take advantage of the guidance offered by the "Bluebook School" in MOTION PICTURE HERALD. That involves a close study of the Bluebook of Projection itself, which, combined with practical projection work, should be very effective.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE DEPARTMENT DEALING WITH ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN AND MATERIALS, DECORATION AND FURNISHINGS

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES: One of the principal functions of this department is to answer inquiries pertaining to preliminary considerations in the planning of a new theatre or the remodeling of an existing one. All questions receive the personal attention of Peter M. Hulsken, A.I.A., contributing editor of this department and a practicing architect who long has specialized in theatre design. He will be glad to offer advice, suggestions and criticisms. Working plans, however, cannot be supplied. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, Rockefeller Center, New York. In publishing replies, only initials are used for identification.

THE QUESTION:

I AM PLANNING on building a theatre and have two locations in mind. One is 25x140. What dimensions for 400 seats, also height of ceiling, length of lobby and foyer, advisable distance from front row to screen? Also advise the cheapest type of construction to comply with fire ordinances which call for brick, tile or its equivalent.

I was wondering if it would not be possible to heat same with a hot-air furnace with fans and would like your suggestion as to where to place furnace. What would be the cheapest type of interior finish?

My other location is 50x140 feet and had in mind constructing a theatre 30 feet wide with stores in front and one store on the remaining 20 feet of this lot.—C. J. S.

THE ANSWER:

FOR A THEATRE 25x140 feet, it would be best to arrange the seating layout with a center aisle. By doing so, you will be able to obtain 11 seats across the width of the auditorium. It will require 36 rows of seats to have a seating capacity of 400; 97 feet between foyer and curtain line. The width of foyer should be 7 feet, and the depth of the lobby 15 feet. The distance from front row of seats to screen should be 20 feet, so it will take the entire depth of 140 feet.

The ceiling height in auditorium should be 17 feet minimum above highest point of floor. For such a long auditorium, the slope of the floor should not be less than 7 feet, 6 inches.

In some localities, concrete walls, cinder block, or hollow tiles are cheaper than brick. For roof construction, the use of bar joists with concrete slab is about as economical as any other type.

It would be possible to heat such a theatre with a hot air furnace. The furnace room in this case would have to be located in front part of the theatre, as the slope of the auditorium is so much that I am afraid the boiler room, if located under stage, would be too deep. It is advisable to use a split system for heating—the auditorium to be heated by hot air, other parts by a small hot water boiler. This arrangement will reduce the cost of the heating installation by eliminating a large amount of duct work.

Celotex or similar materials would be suitable for interior finish; such walls should be furred out, and be sure to provide for a nailing strip under each joint. For ceiling application cement the tiles to a base of plasterboard.

For your other location, on which you plan to make the theatre proper 30 feet wide, we suggest that you arrange the seating layout with a center bank of thirteen across, with a wall aisle on each side; but the maximum seating capacity will be 470 if the stage will have to be 20 feet deep.

For an approximate estimate, you should not figure less than 20c per cubic foot. On this basis, the small theatre will cost $21,000, the larger one $26,000. This does not include the cost of store room which you intend to build on the extra 21 feet. Cost given above includes general contract, plumbing, heating, ventilating, electrical wiring, decorating, not equipment.

THE QUESTION:

I AM PLANNING on building a theatre seating 500 in a very small town. What width and length of auditorium to get in that many seats? The cooling system and furnace room would be built on to the rear of the building. How much space would be required for it? What would be the size of the booth and size of port holes and how many port holes? What would be a good slant for the floor?

Would like to walk in from the street to auditorium without going up any steps. Can you tell me how high outside walls should be, also how high front should be, how high ceiling, and how much space for stage and screen? Give size and height of stage; want to get in picture 14 feet wide or larger.—W. A. C.

THE ANSWER:

A GOOD SEATING arrangement in your case would be a center section of thirteen seats with aisle on each side, and two wall sections of four seats each. To obtain 500 capacity will require 24 rows, so the inside width of the auditorium should be 44 feet, and the length 75 feet.

Why not utilize the space under stage for furnace room and cooling plant? Such a room should be not less than 12x22 feet, exclusive of coal storage.

The minimum size for your projection room is 10x20 feet. You will require two port holes for each projector, and one for a spotlight or effect machine. The sizes of projector portholes vary from 12x12 inches to 10x6½ inches; for effect machine, 2½ feet square.

The slope for the auditorium floor, with seating planned as above, should be 4 feet, 6 inches. The minimum height of the auditorium above highest point of floor should be 18 feet, so the height of the proscenium arch will be 18 feet. This would permit a picture of the size desired.

You should figure on at least 12 feet for stage depth, unless you intend to use the stage for acts; in that case, 20 feet.

THE QUESTION:

WOULD LIKE a little information: I have a two-story building, 50x124. Concrete floor and good pitch. Seating: two aisles. Would like the back half seats back to back 34 inches; front half 30 inches. Also latest lighting.

Want to put four flats in second story, building is plenty high to do this.—L. H.

THE ANSWER:

FOR THEATRE 50 feet wide, arrange seating layout as follows: Center bank of thirteen seats with aisle on each side, two wall banks each of five seats. Concrete floor satisfactory. To determine a pitch for the floor you might divide floor into 15-foot sections—first section near stage to be level, slope next section 9 inches, next section 12 inches, and so on, increasing slope of each successive section by 3 inches. We suggest that you space all rows of seats 32 inches back-to-back.

For lighting we suggest indirect sources in cornices or along ceiling. For acoustical treatment you may use acoustic plaster, fabric panels with rock wool padding, or sound absorbing tiles, as conditions advise.

Make the lobby 18 feet wide. There will be room for small store room on one side and entrance to apartment on other side of lobby. Place men's and women's rooms partly behind store room and stairway to apartments, and partly in ends of foyer, behind wall banks, these rooms to be entered from foyer.

If you intend to place flats on second floor, the building must be fireproof.

Mauch Twins & Mark Twain

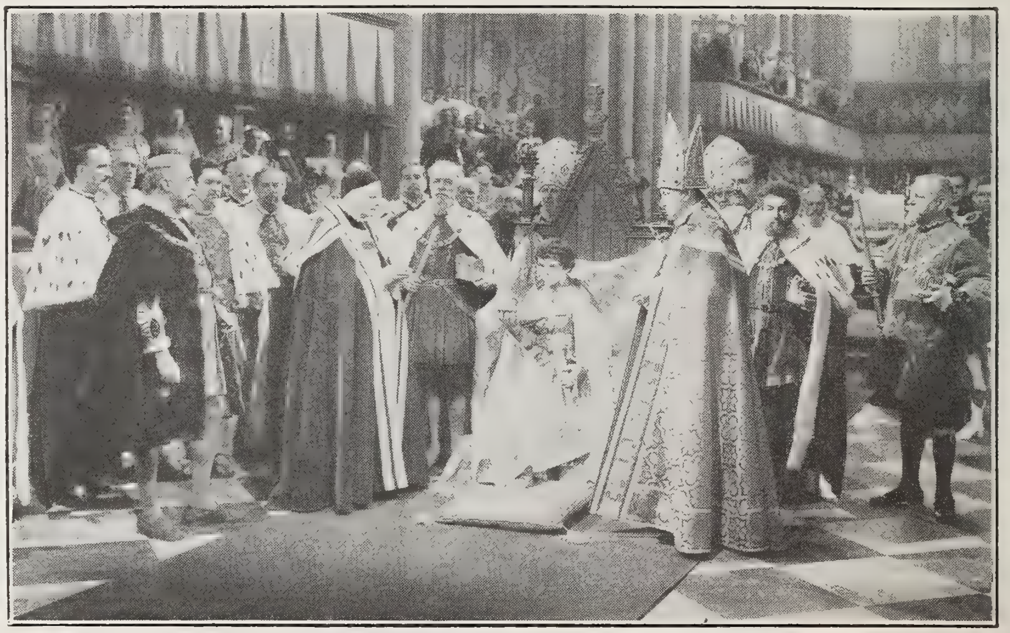
With all the stories in the world to choose from, which story would a shrewd cinema producer pick to coincide with the coronation of a King of England? This was one problem which last year faced Warner Brothers' Associate Executive in Charge of Production Hal Wallis. For a cinema producer, problems never come singly. Another and more difficult riddle for Producer Wallis was this: what were the best roles in which to cast two 12-year-old identical twins who looked so much alike that their mother could scarcely tell them apart? One test of a cinema producer is his ability to solve two problems at the same time. Ready for simultaneous release in 275 U. S. cities last week was Producer Wallis' exceedingly neat finesse of his dilemma: Billy & Bobby Mauch in Mark Twain's The Prince and the Pauper, last made as a silent picture with Marguerite Clark playing both roles in 1915.

The Prince and the Pauper starts on the day in 1537 when boy infants are born simultaneously to Henry the VIII in Windsor Palace and to Pickpocket John Canty in Offal Court. Young Prince Edward thrives at the court, under the tutelage of the Duke of Norfolk (Henry Stephenson). Young Tom Canty thrives in the gutter, with Latin lessons from Father Andrew and whackings from his father (Barton MacLane). Prowling about London one day, Tom crawls under a bench outside the castle to take a nap. The Captain of the Guard hauls him out and is giving him a thrashing when Prince Edward comes out of the palace to call his dog. Prince invites pauper indoors to play. They change clothes for a joke, laugh when the mirror shows how much they look alike. Then the Prince runs out again to find his dog. The Captain of the Guard, thinking it is the pauper, resumes his interrupted thrashing, tosses Prince Edward out into the street.

In his story, Author Mark Twain set out to show that palaces were not much better than the people in them. At Windsor, young Tom Canty falls under the wing of the bad Earl of Hertford (Claude Rains) who, when he hears Tom's story about how he got into the palace, merely tells King Henry that the Prince is mad. When the old king dies, Hertford plans to execute the Duke of Norfolk and have Tom Canty crowned, with himself as Lord Protector. As things shape up, he seems in a fair way to accomplish it.

Another notion of Mark Twain's was that monarchies would do better if kings saw how their subjects lived. In medieval London's alleys, Edward fares not much better than his counterpart in the palace until he encounters a young soldier of fortune named Miles Hendon (Errol Flynn). Hendon feeds him, humors his apparently preposterous notion that he is the King of England, sets out, when the boy is kidnapped, to rescue him from John Canty's gang of thieves. When the rescue entails fighting off the palace guards, sent to kill the young King before he can return to foil the Hertford plot, Hendon begins to think his young protégé's ideas of his own grandeur may not be delusions after all, hurries him back to London.

Biggest scene in The Prince and the Pauper is naturally the Coronation, for which Warners used their big new Stage 22, 100 ft. longer than the lot's ordinary 40-ft. stages; a small army of extras, the St. Luke's Choir and six technical advisers. In this scene Tom Canty, already prayed over, sworn and anointed, is about to get the crown when Prince Edward comes scampering up Westminster Abbey's central aisle to present his claims. When Tom Canty corroborates them, the Archbishop of Canterbury agrees to crown Edward if he can tell the whereabouts of the Great Seal of England. Edward does so with some difficulty. When next seen he is on the throne distributing rewards to those who deserve them, passing laws for the improvement of the slum population, and taking waivers on the Earl of Hertford.



WARNER'S CORONATION SCENE

Not only the Archbishop of Canterbury mistook identities.

The Prince and the Pauper is not and does not aim to be screen drama of cosmic import, super-spectacle or Hollywood picture-poem. It does aim to be, and is, a frisky, fresh and wholly likable comedy by the best comic writer, for the screen or otherwise, whom the U. S. has yet produced. Directed by William Keighley, acted by Warner Brothers' most high-powered cast since Midsummer Night's Dream, staged by Robert Lord and scored by Erich Korngold, it should amply grace next fortnight's Coronation. It should also grace, if not climax, the careers of two amiable young actors from Peoria, Ill. who, among Hollywood's currently swollen quota of remarkable children, are perhaps the most remarkable.

Billy & Bobby Mauch (pronounced mock) are more extraordinary than Shirley Temple because there are two of them. They have an advantage over the Dionnes because they are interchangeable. In The Prince and the Pauper, it is not possible to original plan was, not to have one play Prince and the other Pauper, but to have Billy play all the palace scenes and Bobby play all the guttersnipe scenes, regardless of which character appeared in them. This plan came to nothing because it suited the Mauch twins' sense of humor to switch from time to time. This was by no means the first trick of the kind they had played. The Mauch brothers got their Hollywood jobs not because they looked alike but because they both look like Fredric March. Producer Wallis, who had been scouring the U. S. for a ten-year-old to play young Anthony in March's Anthony Adverse, found the Mauchs, signed Billy for the part. In Anthony Adverse Bobby Mauch's job was stand-in for his brother. He apparently discharged his duties faithfully. Actually he did nothing of the sort. When the picture was over, he and Billy confessed to Director Mervyn Le Roy that they had switched jobs whenever they felt like it. Neither Director Le Roy nor anyone else knew the difference at the time or in the picture.

Sons of an employe of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad, the Mauchs were born in 1924. Billy is the older by ten minutes. Their mother, delighted with her product, had them taught to dance before they went to school. By the time they were seven, the little Mauchs were acting on radio and posing for ads in their spare time. Their jobs were comparatively easy because whenever one felt unlike working the other took his place. By the time they got their Warner contract in 1935, the Mauchs had had experience on programs like Lucky Strike, Show Boat and THE MARCH OF TIME. After Anthony Adverse, Bobby Mauch was cast in Penrod & Sam. Again he and Billy took turns acting and standing-in. When Warners drew up a new contract, Mrs. Mauch refused to let one son perform as stand-in for the other on the ground that it might give him an inferiority complex. When studio executives demurred, Mrs. Mauch threatened to let Warners keep one twin, sign the other with a rival studio. The Mauchs currently have a contract calling for $350 a week apiece, with equal attention and billing guaranteed. Mrs. Mauch gets $150 as their guardian. Until last week, Father Felix Mauch, currently a general agent for the Toledo, Peoria & Western, lived and worked in New York, dashing out West to see his sons on his vacations. Between pictures his sons visited him in the East. Last week, Mr. Mauch, with Bobby and Billy, returned to California for good, where he has now been transferred. The Mauchs travel by train, because they consider that planes are injurious to their father's business.

On the screen the Mauchs' main defects are their Midwest accents. Their major assets are energy, lack of precocity and a wholesome distaste for showing off, which prevents them from trying to steal scenes like most of their contemporaries. Off screen, the Mauchs' most apparent assets are good brains. Both are currently well ahead of the average in their lessons. Most serious off-screen defect in the Mauchs is their enthusiasm for capitalizing their similarity of appearance to fool acquaintances. When not practicing this hobby, the Mauchs are easily distinguishable. Billy wears glasses. Contrary to legend, Mrs. Mauch can always tell her sons apart when they are awake. She sometimes makes a mistake when both are asleep. To avoid waking the wrong twin the morning when only one has to go to work early, the Mauch family has worked out a system. The Mauch who has worked late the night before leaves make-up on his arm. Only the clean twin is disturbed next day.

Invariable question raised by every cinema fan magazine about every child actor is whether or not the child actor is "unspoiled." Equally invariable is the fan magazine answer: No. Whether or not the Mauchs are unspoiled, time will tell. Tricking people about their identity, however, is by no means the only Mauch peccadillo. Two years ago, when Bobby was sick, the Mauch twins got a chemistry set. With it they have since compounded a mixture of ink and ketchup for making spots on bedspreads; an ink spot remover, for removing the spots; and a rotten egg extract, for harmlessly discommoding dinner guests at the Mauch apartment on Franklin Avenue.

When not engaged in chemistry, the Mauchs invent other contrivances. Their most formidable invention was a submarine in which Bobby took the maiden voyage. When the ship failed to rise after a minute, Billy rescued his brother by diving after him. In addition to being inventors, the Mauchs are pugilists, speculators, sportsmen, collectors and littérateurs. As littérateurs, the Mauchs have written several scenarios for themselves and other Warner actors. None has so far been accepted. Their tastes in reading are catholic. Recently Billy Mauch read Alexis Carrel's Man, the Unknown. Last Christmas both were reading Gulliver's Travels. One day Father Mauch, who was paying them a visit, fell asleep on a sofa. They found two spools of thread, wound it around him so that when he woke up he found himself in the same predicament as Gulliver in Lilliput. Mrs. Mauch extricated her husband with a pair of scissors.

What will become of the Mauchs, not even their parents dare to guess. Neither wants to be an actor. Currently, Bobby wants to be a civil engineer, Billy a doctor. Past ambitions of the Mauchs were to be baseball players, transport pilots, acrobats, firemen, G-Men. Both intend to go to college. Since even if Warners does not give them new contracts, options on their old one will give them each $900 a week by 1938, they should be able to afford it. Last fortnight the Mauchs were in New York for a holiday. This week they were back in Hollywood, ready to start work on the next Mauch picture—probably an adaptation of Hugh Walpole's book, A Prayer For My Son.

BEAR TRACKS

THE Federal Theatre Project, sponsor and producer of a number of altogether remarkable dramatic offerings including "Injunction Granted" in assault on the judiciary, now awaits its fate as determined by what the Congress may do about relief appropriations.

Meanwhile the project and its executive head, Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, are the subjects of vigorous and strikingly divergent discussion in the daily press.

In the New York Times, newspaper of the classes, the dramatic critic, Mr. Brooks Atkinson, finds the project in the main admirable and constructive, because: "By good fortune it was put in the hands of Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, a remarkable woman who understood the human emergency of the moment and also had a plan for a country-wide people's theatre that was eminently well suited to an organization supported by government funds."

In the New York Daily News, newspaper of the masses, a reporter, Mr. Fred Pasley, offering no direct opinion of his own, finds occasion to record opinions most contrary to Mr. Atkinson's, held by stage people active in the newly formed American Theatre Council, now engaged in a movement "to abolish the present set-up of the Federal Theatre Project." Mr. Pasley records: "Motivating the movement is what its sponsors describe as a settled conviction that WPA, in the selection of casts, discriminates against the legitimate profession in favor of left-wingers, amateurs and graduates of Little Theatre groups with which Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, national FTP director, has been so long and so intimately associated."

MR. PASLEY seems to have found more about assorted propaganda than relief for the people of the stage in his inquiries. His story includes record of an estimate that of "12,000 persons now on the rolls of FTP, only about 1,200 are estimated to be members of the Actors Equity." That indicates that about one in ten of the members of Mrs. Flanagan's corps is of the profession to which the government essayed to give relief.

The Daily News account also finds occasion to quote from Senator James J. Davis' quotation from Mrs. Flanagan's book entitled "Shifting Scenes," written in 1928 after a visit to Russia:

> "I wanted to see for myself the part the theatre plays in the new order, and how it is influenced by that order. The answers to both questions prove to be so bound up with the whole social experiment that I became absorbed by the drama outside the theatre—the strange, stirring and glorious drama that is Russia. . . ."

And then ensues a recording of expression from Mr. Gene Buck: "It was the Government's intention to do good, to open its purse strings for the profession. And now those funds have been diverted. . . . They're spending the taxpayers' money for propaganda; letting a lot of guys shout over the footlights: 'I gotta message.' "

TURNING to the motion picture section of the same issue of the New York Times, the reader finds himself again, or yet, in the Russian department. Mr. Frank S. Nugent, who needs to defer to no one in the how-I-love-Russian-art-department, gives two Hollywood productions approving notice and then takes off at full throttle in behalf of: " 'The Last Night', one of the finest Russian pictures ever booked into the Cameo by its Tammany Democrat impresario, Matty Radin. . . ."

Somewhere we have heard a number of declarations of Mr. Radin's affiliation with Tammany, from Mr. Radin himself and his admirers and patrons. It is obviously proper enough for Mr. Radin to be a Tammany Democrat. But one may wonder why it is found desirable to wave the Tiger skin so much when the subject is the Red Bear.

Returning to the Cameo and its picture, Mr. Nugent finds: "The film is a superb dramatization of the struggle for Moscow on the crucial night of Nov. 6, 1917, when the fate of the Red revolution hung in the balance. Not since 'Chapayev' and 'We are from Kronstadt' have the Russian cameras moved to their task with such vigor and achieved so magnificent a result. . . ."

"Chapayev," it will be recalled, was shot with the machine gun rather than the camera. It was probably the most magnificent Russian record of what a really emancipated girl could be expected to do in the way of wholesale slaughter.

AT the dinner of the Gourmet Society to honor the sea-food of Maine, Mr. Walter Damrosch announced that he would write a funeral march to spinach, his most especial hate. It would be more constructive if he would compose a salute to the Boston bean. Also if we are to have this blending of the arts let Mr. Leopold Stokowski of Paramount, Universal and Philadelphia give us a pepper pot sonata.

This Week

HOLLYWOOD was much in the headlines and on the air as the strike called by the Federated Motion Picture Crafts on Friday of last week continued in effect with studios picketed and production continuing without the services of the estranged employees. The Actors' Guild, looked upon as holding the balance of power in the situation, met Sunday night and deferred decision with respect to supporting the strike, conferred with producers on Tuesday and reported progress toward agreement on basic principles. Estimates as to the number of persons participating in the walkout varied between 5,000, the figure announced by Federation officers, and 1,000, the number given out by Pat Casey, representing the producers. A thorough reporting of the subject begins on page 13.

Quigley Awards Presented

The Quigley Grand Awards for distinguished showmanship demonstrated during 1936 were presented to the winners, L. A. Chatham and Sid Holland, by Jesse L. Lasky at luncheon ceremonies in Hollywood Wednesday. The winners were flown to the production capital by A. Mike Vogel, chairman of the Managers' Round Table Club conducted by MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

The story of the affair and the competition appears on page 15.

Quota and Propaganda

That the British government intends to legislate in a definite way on the matter of an assured market for pictures made in England emerged as the single definite indictation from expressions in both Commons and Lords. While Lord Strabolgi called financiers "a flock of sheep" and Lord Moyne insisted that the home market is the more important factor, a new element came into the question with formation of the British Films Advancement Council, another propagandistic organization.

Bruce Allan's London letter sketches the reciprocity problem and what has been done and said about it on page 54

"The Deep South"

"The Deep South," Mervyn LeRoy's second undertaking as an independent producer for Warner Brothers, engaged the attention of product prophets in Hollywood. Expectancy of volunteer prognosticators is colored by the box office records of such predecessors as "Five Star Final" and "Little Caesar," LeRoy works regarded as substantially influential in the shaping of subsequent Warner policy.

Gus McCarthy discusses the picture, scheduled for August release, in an illustrated article on pages 16-17.

The Radio Equation

A series of conferences in which exhibitors, producers and radio representatives will discuss a variety of proposals for regulation of broadcasts featuring screen talent and material got underway in New York with the committee on radio appointed by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America announcing after a session at table, "The discussion brought forth a unanimity of opinion that the function of radio and that of the motion picture are so greatly at variance that a meeting of producers, exhibitors and broadcasting executives might be fruitful of an understanding and an agreement that would be beneficial to all concerned."

Convention Time

The motion picture sales convention season opened in Hollywood with 280 Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer salesmen and executives assembled at the Ambassador Hotel. Executive and sales forces of Monogram Pictures convened at the Drake Hotel in Chicago. Other companies announced convention plans and new product.

Burlesque Blackout

Mounting and momentarily profitable publicity obtained by the burlesque industry since the appearance of the brothers Minsky before a congressional committee considering the Dickstein bill turned out to be a buildup to a blackout when New York's License Commissioner Paul Moss effected simultaneous closing of the city's 14 strip tease emporia by the negative but positive expedient of declining to renew their licenses. Save for four who had pyramided their notoriety into Hollywood contracts, the young women lately in every tabloid reader's eye and a good many people's hair found their fame gone with the windup.

Doyle Will Build

Reversing a denial uttered in New York last winter, Stuart F. Doyle, managing director of the Greater Union Theatres, Ltd., issued an announcement in Melbourne of plans to erect two theatres in Regent street, one to exhibit American pictures, the other to offer English, Australian and Continental product.

Cliff Holt, writing from Melbourne, deals with the matter on page 48.

Box Office Huddle

The American Theatre Council, composed of stage producers, managers, actors and craftsmen, selected May 24th to 27th for a convention called to consider ways and means of bolstering box office grosses. Due attention is to be given to the motion picture in relation to the draymah.

Music Hath Charms

Inspection of Hollywood production schedules revealed 50 musical features in prospect for 1937-38, a gain of 11 over the figure for the present season. Included in the count are only those films in which the musical content is predominant.

Music authorities give their views on the relationship of music to the motion picture on page 20.

The Political Screen

The drumfire of protest against purportedly political propaganda in motion pictures droned on in Ohio, Illinois, New York, Germany and China. "A Greater Promise," Russian film depicting the Soviet policy toward Jewish refugees from other lands, was banned, revised and then released in Ohio. "Spain In Flames" was stopped in Syracuse. The Knights of Columbus carried on its fight against communistic films in Chicago. Producers received protests from China and Germany.

Goings-on in this vein are reported on page 66.

Allied Invitation

In a blanket invitation to independent exhibitors to attend the Allied States Association convention at Milwaukee, May 26-28, Convention Chairman P. J. Wood said, "An opportunity will be given to everyone to give expression to suggestions which will cure some of the evils which have so long existed within the industry. This invitation is extended in good faith to all independent exhibitors, including Ed Kuykendall and the independent exhibitor members of his organization."

Flying the Films

Taking second thought on the matter, operators of the airship Hindenburg cancelled a previous decision not to wait two days beyond scheduled takeoff date to receive newsreel films of the British coronation and decided to do so. Roll your own conclusions.

"Divorce" Bill Held Up

The Wisconsin Assembly Committee on Commerce and Manufacturers voted indefinite postponement for the Hall bill, one of the so known "divorce" bills which would prohibit producers and distributors from operating theatres.

This and other activities in the Wisconsin legislature are reported on page 64.

Ramsaye to Nassau

"In nearly all of Continental Europe, across all of Russia and much of the Orient the motion picture is, or is being made, an instrument of government, a device by which people are ruled and their thoughts regimented, under a painfully thin guise of entertainment," Terry Ramsaye told the Nassau Club at Princeton last week. "The motion picture is a perfect tool in the hands of dictators, bosses, bureaucrats. There are ambitious, super ambitious persons on the American scene who would like to take over the American screen for their own purposes. If we, the customers, stand for it, it will be good enough for us."

Studios Slow Down

The lately sustained peak load of production on Hollywood stages eased off from 50 to 46 pictures as producers ordered 16 films to the cutting room and placed 12 new features before the camera.

Data on page 37.

Praise from Pickford

Mary Pickford, long time "America's sweetheart," returned from Europe brimming with praise for overseas institutions. The Mussolini-sponsored studios at Rome impressed the producer-star as superior to any she has seen, "incorporating the best of Hollywood and eliminating the faults in construction in Hollywood," and she found Adolf Hitler "a great fellow for the Germans," adding, "Things certainly are marvelous now in Germany."

Originals Favored

Staff and contract writers continued to dominate the screen story market during March, accounting for 42 of the 63 properties purchased by 15 companies. Five of the remaining works were plays, 13 were books and 3 were magazine stories. The total was down 5 from that of the preceding month.

Product purchased, with titles, auspices and available credits, is listed on page 22.

The Pulitzer Awards

Pulitzer prizes were awarded to authors of two works already obtained by producers for motion picture production. Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With the Wind," owned by David O. Selznick, was pronounced the year's outstanding novel, and the George S. Kaufman-Moss Hart play, "You Can't Take It With You," a $200,000 Columbia acquisition, won the drama designation.

An account of the Pulitzer pronouncements is offered on page 53.

A.T.&T. Wins Suit

The anti-trust suit brought by General Talking Pictures Corporation and Duovac Radio Corporation against the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the Western Electric Company and Electrical Research Products, Inc., in litigation since September, 1932, was dismissed by Federal Judge Nields in the District of Delaware.

The case is reviewed on page 53.

Facts and Figures

Census and theatre statistics show that 40 per cent of motion picture exhibition in the United States is concentrated in 93 large cities and the composite ratio of seats to potential customers is 1 to 9.

New RKO Plan

George Schein, representing 125,000 shares of common stock in RKO, told Special Master George W. Alger, who is holding hearings on the reorganization plan proposed by the Atlas Corporation, that he will present a new plan for reorganization of the company before the hearings are adjourned.

The case is reported on page 48.

Florida Law Invalid

Judge Worth W. Trummell of the Circuit Court of Dade County, Fla., ruled unconstitutional the state law prescribing the recommendations of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures as the sole basis of censorship control over motion picture exhibition in Florida. The ruling was made in dismissing charges against Samuel Cummings for exhibiting the unapproved "Ecstacy," an act defined as a misdemeanor under the law ruled invalid.

SEC Reports on Roxy

The Security and Exchange Commission issued on Monday a report on the Roxy theatre reorganization plan now before Special Master Addison Pratt. Participation of Roxy stockholders was deemed less probable in the light of the commission's findings.

Developments in the affairs of the Roxy are covered on page 48.

Meet the Champions

Box Office Champions for March are revealed as "Maytime," "Love Is News," "Swing High, Swing Low," "Green Light," "Waikiki Wedding," "On the Avenue," and "Seventh Heaven."

The Champions are presented, pictorially and with production credits on pages 32-33.

PICKET LINES PASS ACTORS; UNIONS ACTIVE IN FIELD

Estimates of Strikers in Federated Crafts' Walkout in Hollywood Range from 1,000 to 5,000; CIO Offers Aid Picket lines deployed in front of nine Hollywood studios this week in support of a strike called by the Federated Motion Picture Crafts to lend weight to their demand for recognition by the producers as the collective bargaining agency for studio employees. However, the outcome of the strike, authorized last Friday night by three unions of the Federation and joined on Monday by eight others, all affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, hinged from the beginning on the stand to be taken by the Screen Actors' Guild, players' unit which numbers among its officers and in its ranks most of the top flight film stars and nearly all of the lesser actors.

The Guild at a meeting on Sunday night failed to vote immediate support and decided to continue independent negotiations with the producers on the question of its recognition as a bargaining unit for players. After a conference between representatives of the Guild and of producers on Tuesday it was announced that progress had been made toward an "agreement as to basic principals."

Estimates of the number of employees who joined the strike varied widely. Bridgeon Smith and Charles Lessing, officers of the Federation, claimed that 5,000 workers had obeyed the walkout order. Mr. Casey, on Wednesday, set the number of strikers at 1,000.

There was no evidence that production had been slowed up by the strike or that studio activities had been hampered.

At a mass meeting called by the Federation Tuesday night, a telegram from John Brophy, national director of the Committee for Industrial Organization, was read offering all needed support. Federated Crafts officials accused producers of aiding the IATSE in strike breaking and the IATSE of proselyting Federation members.

A peace plan proposed by the Central Labor Council to end the strike failed of immediate success on Wednesday when Federated Crafts turned down its terms after producers accepted. The two-point plan provided that all striking crafts should return to work immediately without prejudice and that negotiations would be undertaken by representatives of each striking union for establishment of wage scales and working conditions.

The strike, which was given sensational attention in newspaper headlines as the first appearance in motion picture production of labor difficulties which have afflicted other industries, actually was another step in a drive to organize all studio employees and in a struggle on the part of studio unions not included in the basic agreement signed by five IATSE craft unions and the producers to gain recognition and inclusion. The last time a major clash between unions and employers threatened the industry was in December, 1935, during a jurisdictional dispute between IATSE unions which resulted in the present basic agreement.

MUSIC UNION HEAD DARES CIO TO ENTER

James Petrillo, president of the Chicago Musicians' Union, long an air-tight AFL unit, this week dared the CIO to carry out its threat of seeking Chicago recruits. Confidently he said, "They would not get as far as the depot here."

Mr. Petrillo, virtually a dictator in the Chicago music field, is an outspoken enemy of John L. Lewis.

A similar dispute forms the background for the present strike. The scenic artists, painters and make-up men, three unions amalgamated as a single unit, refused the terms offered by producers for inclusion in the pact at a conference in New York several weeks ago. They demanded recognition as the sole bargaining agent for studio workers in their classification.

Subsequently this group joined the Federated Motion Picture Crafts, an association of 17 studio employees' unions, all affiliated with the American Federation of Labor but not included in the basic agreement with the five IATSE crafts.

Last week the producers began individual negotiations with each of the unions and with the Screen Actors Guild, not a member of Federated Crafts, on wages and hours. The scenic artists, painters and make-up men again demanded sole recognition and a closed shop before they would negotiate on wages and hours, and when this was refused they immediately voted to strike.

Two Unions Withdraw

On Monday the unions of stationary engineers, plumbers, machinists, boilermakers and welders, costumers and cooks voted to support the strike move. The Actors Guild, which last week had been reported on the verge of joining the Federated Crafts, at a meeting last Sunday night attended by 2,000 of its 5,600 members, instructed its directors to begin conferences with producers during the week and report results to a general meeting on Sunday. Those present also voted to continue to pass through the picket lines pending final action on the Guild's stand.

The Associated Motion Picture Costumers later withdrew from the strike and Equipment and Theatre Companies' Committees Meet IATSE To End Sound Service Impasse; Theatrical Guild Offers Fight

While attention was focused on Hollywood this week as the main front in labor's campaign for complete organization of the motion picture industry, unions made news also in the fields of the theatre, exchange, sound equipment servicing and film laboratory.

Equipment company and theatre representatives met with officials of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees in Chicago to arbitrate demands for recognition of theatre equipment service men's unions and solve a problem posed last week in Chicago, Cleveland and St. Louis, where union projectionists barred ERPI and RCA Photophone service men from the booths.

The IATSE, American Federation of Labor affiliate, continued its drive to organize theatre and exchange employees. A hint that the struggle between the AFL and the Committee for Industrial Organization may be waged in part in the industry's theatres was given in an announcement by the newly formed Theatrical Business Representatives Guild, a CIO partisan, that plans for IATSE unionization of unorganized employees would be met by a counter-attack.

The IATSE completed organization of theatrical unions in San Francisco, Portland, Philadelphia, Hartford, Seattle and Chicago. Exchange unions, organized under its auspices, have begun bargaining with managers in Denver and New Haven, and are active in Philadelphia, Kansas City, Seattle, Salt Lake City and New York.

Vito Marcantonio, former Congressman, said that the newly organized Film Technicians Union, non-AFL affiliated unit of laboratory workers, of which he is counsel, would move immediately for collective bargaining agreements with eight New York laboratories.

Equipment servicing was suspended in more than 500 theatres as a result of the refusal of union projectionists to allow ERPI and RCA Photophone service men to enter their booths. The action followed the opening of an IATSE drive to force unionization of all service men.

In the Kansas City area it was reported that the IATSE would set up a separate maintenance department for servicing theatres affected if a suspension was ordered there. The department would be staffed by projectionists who, according to the union, have been "studying service and repair of sound equipment for the past two years."

At the start of the meetings in Chicago, attended by representatives of ERPI, RCA and the theatres, it was indicated that complete began separate negotiations with producers. The carpenters, at first reported favorable to the strike move, later also voted to conduct separate negotiations and to ignore the picket lines. Machinists and molders on the fourth day of the walkout applied for negotiation meetings with Mr. Casey but Federated Crafts officials explained that this did not indicate a split in union ranks but merely signified the unions' wish to present demands for a closed shop. At a meeting on Sunday attended by 700 of its 1,700 members the Studio Utility Employees Local 24 voted to join the pickets after Mr. Casey denied their demand for immediate recognition and a union shop.

Strike leaders were openly disappointed in the Guild's decision to defer action.

Officers of the Guild repeatedly have said that their main objective is protection of the small salaried actors and bit players. At the meeting last Sunday night Robert Montgomery, president, told the meeting that the 1,200 senior members would "stand behind" the 4,400 junior members, that is, those receiving less than $250 a week.

Agreement Seen

The Guild and producers' committees issued the following statement Tuesday night: "After more than three hours in which general problems mutually concerning the actors and producers had been fully discussed representatives of both groups are unanimously agreed progress has been made toward an agreement as to basic principals. In all probability it will be necessary to meet on several succeeding days before any specific understanding can be reached. We shall hold the next conference on Thursday when more definite results may be expected. We feel that any statement of matters under discussion will not serve any good purpose. We shall, however, proceed expeditiously and we expect to complete discussions within reasonably short time."

The Guild demands are primarily for a closed shop and for access to the Central Casting Bureau records to permit the Guild to determine whether non-Guild workers are being employed. They ask abolishment of the call bureau, a minimum day wage of $25, pay for fitting time, elimination of weather permitting calls and time and a half for overtime. Demands regarding extras specify that there are to be no $3.20 calls, with a minimum of $5 daily and a definite set of equitable and fair rules to standardize work at all studios.

Strength Seen Added

The producers' committee, named to meet and negotiate with the Guild representatives, included Joseph Schenck, chairman of the board of Twentieth Century-Fox, and the following production managers: E. J. Mannix, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Hal Wallis, Warner Brothers, and Samuel J. Briskin, RKO Radio.

Despite the delay of the Guild, William Cullen, chairman of the Federated Crafts, said, "We are going to win this strike by the end of the week if we have to tie every studio employment roster in knots."

Federated Crafts officials claimed added strength for the strike after the mass meeting on Tuesday at which the telegram from the CIO offering aid was read and it was announced that John R. Robinson, coast maritime strike leader and now a representative of the machinists' union, would act as picket organizer. Hollywood and CIO leaders conferred on Wednesday with Federated officials and additions to the picket lines were scheduled. At the meeting strike leaders accused the IATSE of anti-strike activity and of offering membership and jobs to strikers.

The union delegates were told by officials that two members had answered newspaper advertisements placed by an employment bureau and had been advised to apply at Warner Brothers for jobs. According to the officials the members on arriving at the studio were met by a Mr. Blix, who offered them jobs at $7 daily for a six hour day with time and a half for overtime. Lou Blix is the manager of the stage hands local, an IATSE union. Federation leaders said they would send this information to the Labor Relations Board as evidence that the IATSE was attempting to buy off the strikers with jobs.

The strike committee charged that strike-breaking makeup artists and painters were passed through the picket lines on Monday night. Mr. Casey conceded that approximately 150 employees had been hired to replace those on strike but claimed also that 33⅓ per cent of the original strikers had returned to their jobs.

Leaders of the Federation countered Mr. Casey's estimate of the number of workers affected with the claim that 6,000 members of the 11 unions were on strike and that half of that number had been assigned to picket duties in relays of approximately 1,000 men and women.

The Paramount, Warner Brothers and MGM studios were the most heavily picketed on Monday. The Paramount gateman said that few of the pickets were employees.

Bridgeon Smith, Federated Crafts official, conceded that it was "entirely possible" that many of the pickets were not studio workers. He said that his committee was considering offers of help from several unions.

Says Truck Drivers Help

Charles C. Lessing, acting head of Federated Crafts, said that union truck-drivers were aiding the strike and that deliveries to several studios had been suspended.

According to Mr. Casey, all regular activities were continued as usual at the studios. Terming conditions "satisfactory," he said that the walkout was not spreading. Negotiations with the striking groups were being arranged as speedily as possible, he said.

The Central Labor Council stepped into the picture on Tuesday with a peace plan which may bring the present situation to a quick head. The council action followed Federated Crafts' appeal asking the council to order a boycott of all theatres throughout the United States showing films from companies affected by the strike.

The labor council committee, comprised of J. W. Buzzell, Chris Leahmann, Elmer Lots and Nate Saper, immediately presented the peace plan to Mr. Casey who said:

"The proposal intended to provide ways and means for ending the present labor dispute in the studios was presented this afternoon by the committee. I shall submit the proposition to the producers tomorrow. If all parties find the terms satisfactory I feel justified in asserting that the strike will be called off. In justice to all concerned I will not make public the suggested peace plan until the producers have had an opportunity to study it."

The pickets for the most part merely

CECIL B. DE MILLE PRESENTS QUIGLEY AWARDS TO WINNERS IN HOLLYWOOD

L. A. Chatham Receives Annual Silver Grand Award and Sid Holland the Bronze Plaque at Showmen's Luncheon

Those who make motion pictures paid tribute to those who sell them at the box office, when, on Wednesday, for the second successive year, studio and theatre executives gathered to welcome the winners of the annual Quigley Grand Awards and to witness presentation of the 1936 Silver and Bronze Plaques by Cecil B. DeMille to L. A. Chatham, manager of the Sooner theatre at Norman, Okla., and Sid Holland, manager of the Elco theatre at Elkhart, Ind.

The ceremonies were held at a luncheon given by Quigley Publications in the Hotel Roosevelt.

The Silver Grand Award was won by Mr. Chatham for his campaign on Warner Brothers' "Anthony Adverse" and the Bronze Grand Award by Mr. Holland for his entry on Columbia's "The Music Goes Round."

Jesse L. Lasky officiated as toastmaster. Speakers included Ned Depinet, A-Mike Vogel, Red Kann, Mr. Chatham and Mr. Holland.

Mr. Lasky spoke of the keen interest in the Quigley Awards through the Managers' Round Table, referring to the more than five thousand members throughout the world. He emphasized Martin Quigley's influence in the industry, as did other speakers.

"I feel," said Mr. Depinet, "that since the depression, when theatre advertising budgets were carved to the bone and the bone nicked a bit, the Quigley Awards have probably done more than any other factor to cause the showmen to put more money and effort behind selling the picture.

"I wish to express my congratulations to the winners, to Martin Quigley and to Motion Picture Herald for this inspiring competition which brought back some of the showmanship lost when the bankrolls got pretty slim."

Red Kann referred to the importance of showmanship as discussed by Mr. Depinet, and asked if showmanship by exhibitors and the Awards carried a meaning to the average individual in Hollywood.

Introduced by Mr. Lasky were Dr. A. H. Giannini, Sol Lesser, E. A. Alperson, Harry Sherman, Bill Pine, Maury Conn, Dixie Dunbar, Barbara Pepper, Michael Whalen, Rosina Lawrence, Grace Ford, Dorothy Lamour.

Mr. Lasky, introducing Mr. DeMille, said, "If we had canvassed the industry I can't imagine a more appropriate man to introduce the guests of honor. We have producers, directors, exploitation men. We call ourselves showmen, but how many men combine the feeling and understanding of the true meaning of showmanship? The man I'm going to introduce starts with the conception of his story. He studies it, analyzes it. He knows what he has to sell, what it will do at the box office. That kind of man is my old friend, my old associate for years, the popular Cecil B. DeMille."

Mr. De Mille, in making the presentations, told the guests:

"The great purpose of these Awards is much deeper really than a little plaque, because it gives the man in the field a different incentive. The inspiration that these men provide is of inestimable value to the entire industry, because Hollywood must become conscious of the fact that it is dependent upon the men to whom it turns over its product.

"Where you get the great showmanship ideas, in mv opinion, is in taking a product that is not too strong, that is a little wobbly on its own feet, and sending that over the top. That, gentlemen, I think is a real achievement and a real necessity.

"In the giving of these Awards I am very proud of Mr. Vogel's selections that I hand to these gentlemen, Mr. Chatham and Mr. Holland, but I would like to say a word for all those gentlemen who just missed the Award, and for those who tried and missed it by a great deal, because they are the ones who will get the Awards of tomorrow.

Worldwide Interest in Showmanship Attested by Entries from All Over the World, Says Toastmaster Lasky

"I feel that I am presenting an Award not only to these two gentlemen but to the great efforts of all the men who gave hours of effort, time and thought to the exploitation of these various pictures."

Sid Holland, in acknowledging the presentation, said that he was too thrilled to make a speech but thanked Motion Picture Herald for the honor.

Mr. Chatham said, "I consider it a very great honor to receive the Quigley Silver Award, and I'm sure that I also appreciate as well as Mr. Holland that such leaders of the industry have attended this luncheon."

Chairman Vogel cited the benefits of the monthly Awards in higher grosses and promotions to showmen.

Guests at the luncheon also included:

Bill Thomas, publicity director, Columbia studio;
Edward Finney, advertising director, Grand National;
S. Barret McCormick, RKO advertising director;
John Leroy Johnston, editor-in-chief, Fawcett Publications, Hollywood;
Jock Lawrence, publicity director, Samuel Goldwyn Productions;

ONE of the many reasons why competitors keep a sharp eye on Warners Brothers is because the company has a knack of turning out dynamic drama. "Little Cesar," "Five Star Final," "Public Enemy," "I'm A Fugitive From A Chain Gang," "Black Fury" and "Black Legion" are notable samples. Putting sensational material onto the screen successfully is not an easy thing to do. Countless snares, traps and pitfalls lie in the path of the unwary man who makes the attempt. Mervyn LeRoy, who established Warners as specialists in the production of powerful and daring drama with "Little Ceasar" and "Five Star Final," which he followed with "I'm A Fugitive" to prove his capability with such subject matter, is the producer of "The Deep South." It is to be released some time in August.

Mr. LeRoy is excited about "The Deep South." He holds that it has the same sympathetic appeal against social injustice that made "I'm A Fugitive" a hit. Additionally, it includes a compelling romantic love story. Its premise is a novel by Ward Greene. Those who keep track of such things report that the book has gone into eight printings and that it is provoking more word of mouth comment than any other book except "Gone With The Wind."

No saccharine story of moonlight and roses, mint juleps, Southern belles and mammies is this. It's a vital drama, a bold, courageous indictment of a social and legal system which can railroad a man to his death solely on the strength of circumstantial evidence.

Somewhere below the Mason and Dixon line a girl is murdered. A young Northerner who recently has come to the city with his wife is arrested and charged with the crime. Innocent, three forces demand his life. First, an unscrupulous prosecutor, master in the art of inflaming biased prejudices, plots to force a conviction that will enhance his political ambitions. Second, a politically rotten police force needs a conviction to cover up glaring inefficiencies. Third, there is a press which needs a lurid front page sensation to fatten circulation. The three combine to kindle the lustful fury of a mob. Against the terrorizing power of these forces, a humane governor and a faithful wife are helpless to prevent a lynching.

In his first production on his own for Warners, "The King And The Chorus Girl," Mr. LeRoy came up with a new star, Fernand Gravet. He seems to be in a fair way of duplicating that accomplishment in "The Deep South." With the exception of Claude Rains, who is the prosecutor, and Otto Kruger, defense attorney, the principal roles in the film are played by people virtually unknown to theatre-goers. Edward Norris, seen in minor roles in a few pictures, gets his first big chance as he plays the part of the accused. Gloria Dickson, assigned to the role of Norris' wife, is brand new. She seems to have the talents that should establish her as one of the finds of the year. A third tyro, Lana Turner, plays the murdered girl. Included in the approximate score of supporting players are Allyn Joslyn, Linda Perry, Cy Kendall, Donald Briggs, Elizabeth Risdon, Leonard Mudie, Claudia Coleman, Eddie Acuff, Elisha Cook, Sybil Harris and Clinton Rosemond. Hundreds of extras also appear.

That attention which Mr. LeRoy gives to production embellishment has not been permitted to lapse here. Biggest set in the film is the court room scene in which practically all of the dynamic drama takes place. Yet those sequences that are devoted to mass movement are said by those who have seen them to set a new Hollywood standard.

In adapting the story, Mr. LeRoy stressed the necessity of adhering rigidly to the spirit and temper of the original. That was the technique of "I'm A Fugitive," it may be recalled. It provoked a high degree of realism and the picture made a deep impression. It is expected that it will do likewise in this case. Thus it may be anticipated that "The Deep South" will be one of the pictures that will do much to eradicate the popular fallacy that the summer season is properly to be regarded as one devoid of worthy entertainment.

WARNERS, GRAND NATIONAL, FOX AND "U" OPEN NEXT CONVENTIONS

Warner Studio Executives on Way East to Sessions Starting Monday; Weiss To Make Four Serials for Columbia

20th Century-Fox Closes Convention in Paris, Prepares for Westwood Gathering; Independents to Convene

With Metro-Goldwyn-Meyer's annual sales convention in full swing at Culver City and Monogram's executives and field men arriving in Chicago to start that company's meeting, other distributors this week were completing final details of their parts in the program from which exhibitors will draw their product for 1937-38. The MGM meeting is reported on page 25 and Monogram's plans are announced on page 24.

Warner Brothers studio executives were on their way from the Coast for the convention which opens on Monday at the Waldorf Astoria hotel in New York.

Columbia announced that its product for the season will include 58 features, of which 16 will be westerns, also 126 short subjects, and 4 serials.

RKO Radio repored plans for 54 features to be announced at its convention which opens June 16th at the Ambassador hotel, Los Angeles.

Twentieth Century-Fox concluded its foreign meeting in Paris and began preparations for its national convention at the Westwood studios in California, May 30th.

Other convention dates, in chronological order, are: Grand National, May 16th to 19th; Universal, May 17th to 19th; Republic, May 31st to June 3rd; Paramount, June 10th to 13th, all in Los Angeles, and United Artists, starting June 14th with successive meetings in New York, Chicago and San Francisco.

The Columbia program is virtually the same as that for the current season with the exception of the 60 reels of serials which Louis Weiss will produce.

Important among features promised is "You Can't Take It With You," the George Kaufman-Moss Hart play which this week was awarded a Pulitzer prize. The play was bought by Columbia for $200,000. Director and cast for its production has not been announced.

Other vehicles listed in preliminary announcements by Columbia include "The Awful Truth," with Irene Dunne and Cary Grant; a special musical being prepared by Oscar Hammerstein; "The Winning of the West," to be directed by Frances Marion; "Grand Gesture," by Alec Rackowe; "The Man Who Won the War," "Chopin," and "Cape of Good Hope."

RKO Promises 54

The schedule of 54 features and 88 shorts announced by RKO-Radio is the same as its program for this year. The features will include 11 musicals, at least two of them starring Fred Astaire.

Ned E. Depinet, vice-president; A. A. Schubart, manager of exchange operation, and S. Barret McCormick, director of advertising and publicity, were in Hollywood last weekend conferring with S. J. Briskin and other studio officials on product plans and details of the convention which will open at the Ambassador hotel on June 16th.

RECORDING STUDIO PLANS COMPLETED

Construction plans have been completed and excavation started on the new $250,000 General Service recording studio in Hollywood, which is to accommodate the Western Electric licensee producers on independent lots.

The new building will house a scoring stage and a review room fully equipped for recording and dubbing.

Mr. Briskin said 15 productions would be placed in work in May. Units now in operation are "New Faces of 1937" with Joe Penner, Milton Berle, Parkyakarkus and Harriet Hilliard, and "The Toast of New York," with Edward Arnold and Frances Farmer.

20th-Fox Heads in Paris

Addresses by home office executives and discussions of coming productions featured the four-day Twentieth Century-Fox foreign convention in Paris, which closed Saturday night with a banquet at the Hotel George V.

Sidney R. Kent, president, presided at the meetings and introduced Walter J. Hutchinson, foreign department manager; Frank Harley, managing director for England; Benjamin Miggins, Continental managing director; Truman Talley, Movietone News executive; Colonel Jason Joy, studio official, and Les Whalen, foreign advertising and publicity manager.

Pictures screened for the sales executives, who represented every country in Europe and the Near East, included "Under the Red Robe," "One in a Million," and "Nancy Steele Is Missing," all with dubbed-in dialogue.

At the conclusion of the meetings Yvon Delbos, French Foreign Minister, presented Legion of Honor ribbons to Mr. Talley and Mr. Hutchinson.

Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board, on his arrival in Hollywood last Saturday after a vacation in Miami and Havana, said that the company's decision to bring foreign branch representatives to the convention which opens at Westwood May 30th was prompted by "the exceptionally fine business being done by the company and pictures in general."

"Lancer Spy," to go into production May 15th, will be given a $1,000,000 budget, according to Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president in charge of production. Germaine Aussey will star with Peter Lorre, George Sanders, Virginia Fields and Sig Rumann. Gregory Ratoff will direct.

The company last week signed a distribution agreement with Mrs. Osa Johnson, widow of Martin Johnson, for "Borneo," the last picture filmed by the explorer before his death in an air crash.

Paramount To Roadshow Two

Neil F. Agnew, general sales manager of Paramount, and Robert Gillham, publicity and advertising executive, announced the decision to roadshow both "Souls at Sea" and "High, Wide and Handsome." The two pictures, Paramount's first roadshows in five years, will open June 1st and July 1st respectively.

Harry Sherman, independent producer for Paramount, has selected titles for his six pictures to be produced next season. To be announced at the annual convention which opens June 10th are: "The Deputy Sheriff," "Man from Bar 20," "Tex," "Black Buttes," "Me and Shorty," and "Buck Peters, Ranchman."

Harry Sherman will produce six Hopalong Cassidy pictures between June 1st and December 1st. The series will star William Boyd.

Walter Wanger Sets Six

Walter Wanger has completed plans for six pictures in adition to "Vogues of 1938," now in production, for United Artists release next season. Titles are: "52nd Street," "Personal History," "Wuthering Heights," "Desert Intrigue," "Summer Lightning," and "Arabian Nights."

Universal Seeks Talent

Universal has launched a nation-wide talent search for 15 girls to appear as show girls in "Young Man's Fancy." Selections are limited to school and college applicants. Lucille Ryman, studio talent scout, is in charge of the contest.

James Whale, director of "The Road Back," has been signed again by Universal to supervise cutting and possible added scenes for the picture. The director held a previous contract with Carl Laemmle, Jr., which was to become effective April 22nd but as Mr. Laemmle was not ready for production he was able to resume his Universal connection.

Cagney Signed for Musical

James Cagney has been signed by Grand National for the leading role in "Something to Sing About," Victor Schertzinger musical planned by Grand National for next season. The arrangement postpones production of "Dynamite," for which Cagney previously was signed.

Edward Peskay, vice-president in charge of distribution, was in Hollywood this week conferring with all producers on release dates for product now being edited. The May schedule will include "The Girl Said No," "Sing, Cowboy, Sing," "Small Town Boy," and "Marked Money."

HOLLYWOOD GOES MUSICAL, RAISES NEW SEASON'S GROUP TO FIFTY

Proposed Adaptation of Opera to Films Still in Discussion Stage; Company to Concentrate on American Works

Hollywood appears to be convinced that music is about to reach a fortissimo in motion pictures, and as evidence offers plans for production of at least 50 socalled "popular" musical features for 1937-38, compared with 39 this season. The most optimistic of Hollywood's music impresarios even believe that the screen is ready for full opera, but on this some disagreement has been expressed. In any event, a musical renaissance can be expected by exhibitors.

Adaptation of opera to the motion picture has been the subject of many long and loud discussions of recent date. So far, however, the progress has been chiefly talk. But, one thing is certain: The motion picture, which has attracted into its service the leaders in various arts, crafts and sciences, has come now to include the art of music, and is bringing to Hollywood the foremost conductors and composers. Not only is this true in musical productions, but also in musical scoring—that is, the writing, arranging and conducting of background music.

The new schedules will bring music written or conducted by Leopold Stokowski, Erich Wolfgang Korngold, Herbert Stothart, Arnold Schoenberg, Werner Jenssen, Max Steiner, Antheil, George Gershwin, Dimitri Tiomkin, Jerome Kern, Sigmund Romberg, Irving Berlin, Boris Morros, Leo Forbstein, Nathaniel Finston, Nathaniel Shilkret, James O'Keefe, and others. Lily Pons, Grace Moore, Gladys Swarthout and Nino Martini again will be the forerunners, but other noted singers appear due soon on the screen, led by Kirsten Flagstad.

Columbia will close this season with the musical "When You're In Love" and a second on which Oscar Hammerstein II is working; next year the company will have at least two, and possibly more, with "Intermezzo," starring Grace Moore, and a second definitely with Miss Moore.

GB Pictures will have two this year, "Head Over Heels in Love" and "Back Stage," and already has one, entitled "Gangway," planned for 1937-38.

Grand National Pictures' 1936-37 schedule include three musicals: "The Girl Said No," "Something to Sing About" and "Honolulu Honeymoon." Next year there will be more musicals, starting with two from Victor Schertzinger.

Imperial Pictures plans eight "outdoor musicals," adapting musical scorings and singing to the western.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is increasing its musical program from the "Born to Dance," "Maytime," "Great Ziegfeld," "Broadway Melody" and "A Day at the Races" of this year, to "Rosalie," "Firefly," "Girl of the Golden West," "Hats in the Air," "B Before High C," "Johann Strauss," "Great Day" and "Show Shop" already in line for 1937-38.

Monogram's new plans call for at least two musicals in the new year, including "College Sweetheart" and "Land of the Blue Sky Water," based on the song.

AND NOW A PROTEST AGAINST MUSIC

Protest against the use of "high-grade" musicians in motion pictures which are beneath the real worth of the talents of the artists was voiced in Minneapolis by the North Central Music Educators conference, last week.

Pleased to note the increased use of outstanding musical talent in motion pictures and that an increasing number of the better films have good music and drama as the principal theme, members of the conference asserted they are greatly disappointed to observe the questionable employment of the talent of many musical performers, especially stars of the operatic stage, in some of the recent pictures.

Paramount's seven of this year will be extended to include at least ten. This year's Paramount musicals are represented by "Waikiki Wedding," "Turn Off the Moon," "College Holiday," "Big Broadcast," "Swing High, Swing Low," "Champagne Waltz" and "Mountain Music." Next season's already include "High, Wide and Handsome," "Double or Nothing," "Big Broadcast of 1938," a Victor Herbert musical, a Bing Crosby number from Major Productions, another, to star George Raft, and "Sweet Sunday," "Artists and Models" and "Show Business."

RKO is going to double its musical output. This season the company has had "Swingtime," "Shall We Dance?" and "A Girl from Paris," whereas next season the company will have at least one starring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, one each starring Lily Pons, Ginger Rogers and Nino Martini, and "The Radio City Revels" and "New Faces."

Twentieth Century-Fox will have at least a number equal to the five musicals of this season, the present group comprising "Sing, Baby, Sing," "Pigskin Parade," "One in a Million," "On the Avenue" and "Wake Up and Live." Scheduled to date for next year are "You Can't Have Everything," "Alexander's Ragtime Band," "Sing and Be Happy," "Ali Baba Goes to Town" and "Sally, Irene and Mary."

United Artists's 1937-38 musicals include "The Goldwyn Follies" and "Walter Wanger's Vogues of 1938," succeeding Walter Wanger's lone United Artists musical of this year, "Fifty-second Street."

On the present Universal schedule are "Three Smart Girls," "When Love Is Young" and "Top of the Town." On next year's program will be "One Hundred Men and a Girl," and three more to star Deanna Durbin, and "Broadway Jamboree," "Four Black Sheep," "Riviera," "Dancing for Love" and "Hippodrome."

Warner Brothers likewise will increase its musical schedule, this year making "Gold Diggers of 1937," "Ready, Willing and Able," "Stage Struck," "Cain and Mabel," "Sing Me a Love Song," "Melody for Two," "Singing Marine" and "Campus Scandals." For 1937-38 the company will have "Varsity," starring Fred Waring, a Mervyn LeRoy musical starring Fernand Gravet, and others.

Tendency to Make Music Integral Part of Story "Instead of Incidental Theme or Overtone," Says Hays of Idea

From the score or more independent companies will come more musical subjects for the new season.

Practically all the foregoing deals with the socalled "popular" musical, not classical. The treatment of the classical has yet to assume tangibility. There is a move pointed in that direction, the first definite word of actual operatic adaptation to motion pictures coming from the new Allied Arts Productions, Inc., which incorporated in New York a few weeks ago to produce films of serious musical works, such as symphonic poems, ballets and operas, as well as shorter compositions. Deems Taylor, music critic and music commentator, is serving as executive vice-president in charge of music.

Theodore Benedek, writer, and president of Allied Arts Productions, said that he long had been contemplating such an enterprise, and that while headquarters will be in New York, production will be in Hollywood. Other officers are Dr. Arnold Genthe, photographer, and John D. Williams, stage director and producer, both vice-presidents. Arthur S. Friend, an attorney, is secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Benedek explained that the company intends to concentrate on the work of American composers. "All the music that we use will be 'program' music—that is, it must contain a story," he said. "We have no intention of creating cinematic settings for symphonies or any form of 'pure' or 'abstract' music. Such an aim would involve us in endless controversy."

Among the works of American composers which Mr. Benedek and Deems Taylor hope to use are "Skyscrapers." "Birthday of the Infanta" and other compositions by John Alden Carpenter; and Mr. Taylor's own "Through the Looking Glass" suite, and perhaps "The King's Henchmen" and "Peter Ibbetson." From the foreign pieces at their disposal they have selected Verdi's "Aida" and "Othello," and Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," "Parsifal" and parts of "The Ring" cycle for immediate consideration.

No musicians have been signed as yet, Mr. Benedek said, but several important conductors and singers had been apprised of the enterprise.

"We hope to strike a perfect compromise between the stage and the screen," Mr. Benedek said. "We propose to remain true to the spirit of each composition we present, and scores will be edited or shortened only when absolutely necessary for film purposes."

Will H. Hays said last week, in an interview with Nat J. Ferber, in Liberty magazine, "During the coming year the tendency will be to make the music an integral part of the story instead of an incidental theme or overtone. Story and music will be made one for the other, from beginning to end."

"More and more music will play a part in the presentation of the motion picture story," Mr. Hays continued. "We have already reached the stage wherein the great music of the opera has been freely interpolated; but we are going further. 'The Plainsman' and 'Anthony Adverse'—Paramount and Warner Brothers, respectively—are endowed with original music of a genuinely classic caliber created specifically for them. And, for these, two composers of

15 PRODUCERS BUY 63 BOOKS, PLAYS FOR USE IN NEW SEASON PROGRAMS

42 Stories Come from Authors under Contract or from Individuals Writing Primarily for Films; Only Five Plays

Acquisition of story material for next season's product moved forward in the month when 15 Hollywood producing agencies purchased 63 vehicles from the legitimate stage, from published novels and staff writers. Of the 63 properties, 42 came from authors under contract or from individuals writing primarily for motion pictures. This points toward a policy of producers to take their material from sources familiar with motion picture technique, for last month original stories also led with a total of 42 out of 68 buys while the month before 55 were in the list of 93 acquisitions.

The legitimate theatre continued to fall far behind as a source of picture material, with five plays, only three of them recent productions, going to Hollywood. Sixteen novels, including three published magazine stories, completed the total.

MGM Buys Eleven

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer was the heaviest buyer in March, with a total of 11 vehicles, comprising five original stories, three books and three plays. Radio followed with 10 original stories while Paramount was next with seven originals and one novel. Twentieth Century-Fox bought six original stories and one book, and Republic Pictures six original stories and one book. Universal also took four originals and one book, while Warner Brothers acquired three books and one play. Grand National purchased two original stories and one book, and Imperial Pictures bought two books. Carl Laemmle, Jr., purchased the play, "The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse," currently drawing crowds on Broadway, for transfer to the screen with possible release through United Artists. Principal Pictures bought one original story, Columbia one book, Condor Pictures a book, Samuel Goldwyn one original story and Monogram one book.

A complete list, by titles and companies, of the story purchases in March, with all available production credits, follows:

Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse, The, play by Barrie Lyndon, produced on Broadway by Gilbert Miller after success in London, bought by Carl Laemmle, Jr.

Apple a Day, An, original story by Jerry Wald and Bert Granet, bought by Radio.

Armored Taxi, original story by Jack Andrews, purchased by Twentieth Century-Fox.

B Above C, original by Arthur Sheekman and Dalton Trumbo, bought by MGM.

Beauty and Brains, original story from the pen of Felix Jackson, acquired by Universal.

Booloo, original story by Walter Post, acquired by Paramount for production by Clyde E. Elliott in the Malayan Peninsula with Colin Tapley starred, others in cast to be natives.

Charlie Chan at College, original by Helen Logan, bought by Twentieth Century-Fox for production by Sol Wurtzel starring Warner Oland.

Charlie Chan on Broadway, original by Helen Logan, obtained by Twentieth Century-Fox, to star Warner Oland in another of the series.

MONOGRAM SETS 42 FEATURES AND $4,333,000 SALES QUOTA FOR 1938

Franchise Holders and Studio Executives Meet with Sales Forces in Chicago for Five Business Sessions

Average Increase in Production Cost Set at 25 Per Cent; 26 Melodramas, Two Sets of Westerns

Franchise holders from the field and home office and studio executives of the new Monogram Pictures were assembled in Chicago Thursday for the company's annual sales convention at which the identities of stories and casts for 42 features and a sales quota of $4,333,000 are to be announced by W. Ray Johnston, president.

Actual convention proceedings begin Friday morning, continuing through the weekend, and the sales drive will get under way on May 12th, directly after the official opening of all Monogram key city exchanges. "Save your dates for Johnston in June and July" will be the keynote.

Production costs will be raised on each feature, and by a substantial amount in the case of the new "specials," said Mr. Johnston at the convention headquarters in Chicago's Drake hotel. Augmented production budgets likewise were considered in determining the sales figure for the coming season.

The average increase in production costs will be 25 per cent, and the proposed 42 features will comprise the largest program of the company to date. Some 26 melodramas and two series of westerns will make up the program. Heading the group is a special unit of "Certified Attractions," for which all stories already have been purchased and outstanding players sought. The signing of Jackie Cooper to star in "Boy of the Streets" is the company's first step toward the use of "name" players.

Mr. Johnston gave the convention details of the following 26 properties for production in 1937-38:

Boy of the Streets (temporary title), starring Jackie Cooper, for release July 1.
Paradise Isle, with Warren Hull and Movita, from the story by Allan Vaughan Elston, containing backgrounds filmed in Samoa, directed by Arthur Collins, available July 1.
Romance of the Limberlost, by Gene Stratton-Porter, available July 1.
College Sweetheart, musical based on Leona Dalyrymple's Woman's Home Companion story, "Blind Date," available July 1.
Freckles Comes Home, sequel to "Freckles," by Gene Stratton-Porter, available July 1.
Land of the Sky Blue Water, with the melodies of Charles Wakefield Cadman.
Wolf Call, based on Jack London's "That Spot."
Queen of the Yukon, based on Jack London's "Daughter of the Aurora."
The Outer Gate, by Octavus Roy Cohen, with Ralph Morgan and Kay Linaker, available July 1.
Luck of Roaring Camp, The, by Bret Harte.
The Hoosier Schoolboy, by Edward Eggleston, available July 1.
A Bride for Henry, from Josephine Bentham's Liberty Magazine story.
Scandal, from Kathleen Shephard's "Tintype of a Lady."
Saleslady, by Harold Morrow.

CLUBWOMEN PROTEST NUDE ADVERTISING

Chicago clubwomen, aroused by the advertising of Loop theatres which have featured strip-tease and other "nudity" dancers, are reported to have sent copies of the advertisements to New York film and theatre executives in an effort to halt the practice.

One Chicago newspaper, opposed to the use of photographs of "strip-tease" dancers as presented, is reported to have assigned one artist whose sole job it is to "paint clothes" on the pictures.

Federal Bullets, by George Fielding Eliot.
Blazing Barriers, by Edwin E. Parsons, with Frank (Junior) Coghlan, Florine McKinney and Edward Arnold, Jr., available July 1.
The Marines are Here, by Franklin Adreon, Jr.
False Colors, by Henry Brandt.
The Thirteenth Man, by John Krafft, with Inez Courtney, Weldon Hepburn and Eadie Adams (on loan from MGM), available July 1.
Legion of Missing Men, by Norman S. Hall, with Ralph Forbes, available July 1.
The Girl Next Door, by Stephen Warding.
Port of Missing Girls.
The County Fair, by Felice Hepburn.
Flying Orders.
My Old Kentucky Home, by Hugh W. Prince.
Telephone Operator.

An official welcome to Chicago will be extended at 9:30 Friday morning by Aaron Saperstein, president of Allied Theatres Association of Illinois. Response will be made by Mr. Johnston, and then an address on "Selling the New Monogram" by Edward A. Golden, general sales manager.

Brief talks are scheduled for Friday afternoon by Scott R. Dunlap, vice-president in charge of production; Louis S. Lifton, director of advertising and publicity; O'Henry Briggs, president of Pathe and interested financially in Monogram; by Sol A. Rosenblatt, lawyer and chairman of the one-time NRA's motion picture code administrator, and a Monogram director, and by William Jaffee, Monogram counsel.

Speaking for the field exchange owners will be William Onie, Cincinnati; Fred Judd, Des Moines; A. M. Goldstein, Seattle, and George Blumenthal, San Francisco.

Henri Elman, president of Monogram-Capitol Exchanges, in Chicago and Indianapolis, was host at a cocktail party Thursday afternoon at his Chicago exchange on Wabash Avenue.

On Friday evening the convention banquet will take place at the Drake.

Saturday's sessions will be devoted to talks on selling, exchange operation and production. Among those to address the delegates are Norton V. Ritchey, in charge of foreign sales; Herschel Stuart, home office executive; Mr. Golden, sales manager; J. A. Sisto, Monogram stock underwriter, and John W. Mangham, Steve Broidy, Dave Selznick, Ray Olmstead, Lon Fidler, Sam Decker and Howard Stubbins. A second dinner meeting will be held Saturday evening, again at the Drake.

Others in Chicago for the convention, from the exchanges, are:

Ben Welansky, Boston; Harry Berkson, Buffalo; Carl Harthill, Indianapolis; C. W. Trampe, Milwaukee; Nate Schultz, Cleveland; Ed Blumenthal, Dallas; Carr Scott, Oklahoma City; William Hurlbut, Detroit; William Norris, Kansas City; Lester Durland, Kansas City; Ben Nathanson, Minneapolis; Charles Weiner, Minneapolis; R. O. Ringler, Des Moines; William Strickland, Omaha; W. W. McKendrick, Salt Lake City; Sam Rosen, Philadelphia; Harry Bachman, Washington.

Others are E. C. Krofta, H Edward Lurie, Milwaukee; Lee W. Chapman, Carl W. Scheuch, Samuel E. Schultz, Cleveland; W. P. Humston, A. J. Simmons, Kansas City; W. V. Young, Dallas; Don Nelston, Des Moines; Harry Spann, P. H. Savin, Roy Springer, W. E. Osborne, Atlanta; Ben Oletsky, Harry Crull, Washington, D. C.

The convention was told that Monogram's policies will be determined by an advisory committee consisting of Messrs. Johnston, Stuart, Golden, Dunlap, Ritchey, Mangham, Stubbins, Blumenthal, Elman, Trampe, Welansky, Decker, Felder, Fidler and Broidy, the last named 10 representing franchise holders.

New exchange deals were announced. Joe Felder, formerly home office circuit contact, assumes branch managership of the New York exchange on May 10th; Lon Fidler resigned as district manager for Grand National in Denver and Salt Lake to take over the Monogram franchise for both cities; W. W. McKendrick, formerly Grand National manager in Salt Lake, will assist Mr. Fidler as Monogram manager in Salt Lake; Midwest Film Company in Milwaukee took the franchise there and changed its company name to Monogram Midwest Film Company; Charles Weiner has been placed in charge in Minneapolis; Sam Rosen was placed in charge in Philadelphia, and Henry Bachman became manager at Washington, occupying a new building there.

Buffalo offices were opened on Pearl Street. Olmstead-Stubbins, Inc., has acquired the Pacific Coast franchise, for Seattle, Portland, Los Angeles and San Francisco, with A. M. Goldstein of Seattle supervising both Portland and Seattle, and George Blumenthal managing the San Francisco office.

Monogram Film Distributors, Inc., purchased the Omaha and Des Moines exchanges of Majestic Pictures Company from Max Weintraub, who is retiring to live in California. Monogram gets all current products of Majestic and will complete the releasing of such of those pictures for which commitments have been made. W. H. (Bill) Strickland will manage in Omaha, and F. E. Judd, formerly with Republic Pictures, is manager of Des Moines.

L. P. Britton and Phil Sherman will assist Steve Broidy at the new Monogram exchange in Boston, Mr. Sherman resigning from GB Pictures. In Portland, Cecil Farnes, formerly manager for Republic, joins the Monogram exchange, the while Ed Blumenthal became president of the new Monogram Pictures, Inc, in Dallas, in the headquarters formerly occupied by Mr. Blumenthal's Amity Film Exchange.

Harry Scott, a pioneer distribution executive, on Wednesday was appointed Monogram manager in St. Louis.

MGM STARTS CONVENTION SEASON ANNOUNCING 44 TO 52 FOR '37-38

Detailed Plans of 19 Productions Given Field Forces; 21 Directors, 73 Featured Players, 100 Writers, 20 Composers

Hollywood's new motion picture sales convention season, heaviest in the history of the production capital, started Monday morning with the arrival of a special train from the East bearing Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exchange and home office delegates to the largest organization sales meeting of Leo the Lion in 10 years. It also was the official beginning of the sales convention season for the industry. (See page 18.)

Metro-Golden-Mayer announced a minimum of 44 and a maximum of 52 feature productions for 1937-38, and 201 short subject releases, including its News of the Day newsreel.

Some 24 full-fledged stars, said by the company to be the largest number ever assembled under contract at any of the California studios, will figure prominently in the schedule for the new year. The star roster as detailed to the delegates includes the following:

Lionel Barrymore
Freddie Bartholomew
Wallace Beery
Joan Crawford
Nelson Eddy
Clark Gable

Hats in the Air, musical by Dwight Taylor, starring Eleanor Powell.
Merry Christmas, by Norma Krasna, starring Luise Rainer.

TRUCK DRIVERS CALLED TO ACT AS WAITERS

Delegates to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sales convention arrived in Hollywood in the midst of the labor difficulties.

They were assembled on Stage 5 of their company's studio for luncheon and speeches when it was learned that the union waiters of the studio had refused to pass the picket lines outside the gates.

Things were smoothed over quickly, however, and while most of them probably did not know it, the waiters who handled the service were recruited from the ranks of truck drivers and longshoremen and had been put up at the studio overnight to avoid any interruption in the extensive preparations.

The remaining 25-to-33 productions will be selected from among the following 47 books, plays and original stories which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has already purchased:

The Foundry, by Albert Halper.
Pride and Prejudice, by Jane Austen.
Anchor Man, by Fanny Heaslip Lea.
The Four Marys, by Fanny Heaslip Lea.
As Thousands Cheer, musical by Moss Hart and Irving Berlin.
Bright Girl, by Vina Delmar.

Regional Sales Conferences

Regional sales conferences were held Sunday afternoon between division and branch managers, and general convention sessions started Monday morning.

On Monday, Mr. Mayer was host at a luncheon at the studio, where the delegates met the company's stars, players and production executives, and saw previews of several feature pictures.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings, additional previews were held, at the Carthay Circle theatre. Wednesday night Hal Roach gave a "Days of '49" barbecue at his studio at Culver City, and on Thursday night the social climax took the form of a large studio banquet presided over by Mr. Mayer. The special convention train leaves for the east Friday morning.

Sightseeing tours through southern California, a trip to Catalina Island and other events were conducted for the delegates, between the business sessions held for laying out new sales policies, studying trends of motion pictures in the forthcoming product, observing of studio problems by sales delegates and a discussion of the salesmen's problems with their studio colleagues.

Howard Dietz addressed the delegates on Tuesday, on the general aspects of sales promotion. Silas Seadler discussed advertising, and William Ferguson explained his 1937-38 exploitation plans for the company, with Barrett Kiesling explaining the goodwill trips which he makes to newspapers, theatres and exchanges.

Mr. Dietz said that his company went more heavily into national exploitation than any other and would continue to do so. Mr. Seadler described as an important good will asset the continuity of man-power within the organization.

It was heard around the convention hall that the company plans a $3,000,000 expenditure on national advertising campaigns for the bigger pictures.

Admission Prices Low: Lichtman

Tom Connors discussed general sales organization and E. M. Saunders talked about bookers' sales and office management in the exchanges. Both Mr. Rodgers and Mr. Lichtman gave the keynote speeches on product and sales policies, followed by Alan Cummings and an address on physical operations of exchanges and the development of sales manpower.

Mr. Lichtman said motion pictures were being sold too cheaply and asserted the cost of film entertainment had not kept pace with the rise of other prices. He pointed out the average admission price in the large theatres was $.75 before 1930 and that today it is down to $.40.

Later, a short subject sales forum was conducted by Fred C. Quimby, Pete Smith, Robert Benchley and Hal Roach.

The delegates paid silent tribute to the memories of Marcus Loew, Irving Thalberg and Felix Feist.

NEW RECORDS IN SCHAEFER DRIVE

United Artists' cash receipts from film rentals exceeded by 40 per cent the biggest previous weeks in the company's history during the final week of the "George Schaefer Drive", sales campaign conducted in honor of the company's executive sales head.

A. W. Smith, Jr., general sales manager, reported that sales quotas set down on January 24th at the beginning of the drive were surpassed by every one of the branches during the 14 weeks.

Mr. Rodgers is understood to have told the salesmen that the company's sales policy in 1937-38 will again be a flexible one, with each situation studied individually and allocations based upon returns during the past two years. This system is said to have been responsible during the present season for one of the largest domestic gross intakes in the company's history.

It is expected that terms in some of the percentage groups will be slightly increased, due, it is said, to larger investments to be made in some of the new product.

In addition to the Roach "Our Gang" two-reel comedies, probably including 12 subjects, the delegates were told that James A. FitzPatrick will again contribute 12 "Travel Talks," and that Pete Smith will continue with his novelty shorts. With the Harman-Ising short subject contract expiring this season, Mr. Quimby, as short subjects general manager, has arranged for a new series of 13 color cartoons.

Balcon Meets Salesmen

Michael Balcon, supervisor for MGM in England, under Ben Goetz, met the salesmen for the first time, and at the various luncheons and dinners given both at the Culver City studio and the Ambassador Hotel, virtually all of the company's players, directors, writers and executives were introduced.

Mr. Mayer confirmed the general impression that Norma Shearer had signed a new contract and would continue to star for the company, making two pictures annually for three years at a reported salary of $150,000 per picture, for a total of $900,000 for the six. The deal includes a provision that Miss Shearer become a partner with Mr. Mayer in the company in which the late Irving Thalberg was associated. J. Robert Rubin is the third member. The Shearer deal is said also to include settlement of her equities in the Thalberg pictures.

Sam Shirley, district manager, headquarters in Chicago, and Jack Flynn, district manager, headquarters in Detroit, were winners in Metro's annual billings competition and were presented two weeks' salary by Mr. Rodgers. Portland, Buffalo, Salt Lake and Cleveland exchange managers, office managers, bookers and salesmen also were awarded two weeks' salary each as winning exchanges in this competition. Special awards for merit, signalized by a lion's head pin with a bar including one star, went to Burton Bishop, Charlotte manager, for the best branch results and to Louis Amacher, Portland manager, and Maurice Saffle, Salt Lake manager, for ending their drives with only one unsold possibility.

The same award was given 13 salesmen.

50 Musicals Set For Next Season

international renown, Antheil and Erich Wolfgang Korngold, were employed.

"Of course, the greatest talent in the world will be needed to write the music. To this end the studios have made a very convincing start. Here are a few of the world-famous composers and conductors who will have a hand in the pictures scheduled for the coming months:

"Mr. Korngold, of the grand opera of 'The Dead City.'

"Igor Stravinski, one of the few moderns often listed among the immortals.

"Arnold Schoenberg, one of the world's great composers.

"Leopold Stokowski, world-famous conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

"Werner Jenssen, composer, and conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra."

Mr. Hays predicted that the great symphonic orchestras, here and in Europe, "will be playing from scores written for motion pictures—this within months rather than years."

Herbert Stothart, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer musical director and himself composer of scores for "Mutiny on the Bounty," "Romeo and Juliet," "Good Earth" and "Maytime," warned of the new musical trend that scores for pictures should create a mood in an audience, but at the same time never should be so perceptible as to intrude on dialogue or situation.

Max Steiner, musical director of RKO-Radio and winner of last year's award of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for his score of "The Informer," and an officer of the French government's musical academy because of his contributions to music, believes with Mr. Stothart that music scorings in dramatic pictures must always be subordinated to the drama.

Taking note of the growing use of music in motion pictures, Mr. Korngold observed that "it is in the writing of background music for films that the composer has his fling today." Mr. Korngold won the 1937 Academy award for his musical score of "Anthony Adverse."

Boris Morros, who brought Leopold Stokowski to the screen, said that he is convinced there is no such thing as "high brow" music for the screen—"if we know how to present it properly to motion picture audiences." He cited Mr. Stokowski's playing of Bach's Fugue in G Minor, in Paramount's "Big Broadcast of 1937."

Reports Forward Move

Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, studio contact in Hollywood with women's clubs for the Motion Picture Producers Association, last week completed a survey of production and reported "a forward move in music."

Next to the Deems Taylor musical-film project, a noticeable move toward the classical in film music was the recent engagement by Paramount of Kirsten Flagstad, the famous Wagnerian soprano, for "The Big Broadcast of 1938." Miss Flagstad will sing the "Battle Cry of the Walkyries" from "Die Walkuere," rendering the declamation of the call to her sister warriors from the Nibelung opera in costume and with all the scenic investiture of the original presentation. She will have the full orchestral support of the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of New York in both recording and photography, under the direction of Guillaume Pelletier, conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York.

Boris Morros expects to make a "Carmen" screen musical with all of Bizet's vocalization and instrumentation.

HOUSE COMMITTEE ASKS FILM INQUIRY

Move Aimed at MPPDA, Theatre-Owning Producers, Sound, Music, and Trailer Companies

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

Motion picture matters came to the fore on both sides of the Capitol this week, as the judiciary committee of the House of Representatives submitted a favorable report to the House rules committee on a proposed investigation of the industry and the Senate patents committee began a study of the copyright bills.

The investigation of the industry, proposed by Representative Sam Hobbs of Alabama, a member of the judiciary committee, would be directed primarily at the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, theatre-owning producers, manufacturers of reproducing equipment, music publishing houses and producers of trailers.

Approval of the Hobbs resolution was voted by the House judiciary committee Tuesday as the Senate patents committee took up the copyright bills introduced by Senators F. Ryan Duffy of Wisconsin, a member of the committee, Joseph F. Guffey of Pennsylvania and Morris Sheppard of Texas.

Hearings Possible This Month

Following the meeting of the patents committee, it was announced that the three bills will be studied during the next few days and that hearings probably will be called after the committee has disposed of a bill dealing with the Court of Patent Appeals, which is next on the calendar. It is expected that the hearings may be called late this month.

In recommending that the House rules committee, which must pass upon all measures proposing investigations, give favorable consideration to the Hobbs resolution, the judiciary committee set in motion what would be one of the most exhaustive studies of the industry undertaken by Congress in a number of years.

However, there is considerable doubt whether the rules committee will authorize the investigation this session.

A number of other proposals for inquiries, including one of the broadcasting situation, are pending before it, and there has been evidenced a reluctance to permit any investigations which might be long drawn out and expensive.

Five Objectives Outlined

In introducing his resolution, Representative Hobbs, who heretofore has been in the news chiefly for his drives against "mail order" insurance companies, outlined five objectives for the investigation, as follows:

The organization, functions and financing of the MPPDA, its purposes and accomplishments, and the extent to which its members have cooperated to suppress competition and restrain trade.

The activities of the members of the MPPDA to monopolize or control the industry by such devices as uniform exhibition contracts, withholding of product from independent theatres, allocation of product to controlled theatres, unfair and unreasonable zoning and protection, compulsory block booking and blind selling, forcing out of business and acquisition of independent theatres, and other unfair practices.

The efforts of theatre-owning producers to regulate the admission prices of independent theatres by limitations in exhibition contracts and by withholding films for unreasonable periods from low-admission houses.

Sound, Music and Trailers

The relations, corporate, contractual and otherwise, between the producers and distributors of motion pictures, on the one hand, and the manufacturers of electrical equipment for reproducing sound in theatres, the principal music publishing houses, and the manufacturers of screen trailers, on the other hand, and the effect of such relations on the independent exhibitors and the public.

The effect on the independent exhibitors and on the public of percentage playing, compulsory designation of play dates and other terms and conditions imposed by the producer-distributors on the independent theatre owners, and the special favors granted to the producer-distributors' owned, controlled and affiliated theatres, and discrimination practiced against independent theatres in such terms and conditions.

Law Changes to be Considered

Following its investigation, the judiciary committee would be instructed to report to the House as to "any changes in the antitrust laws, the copyright laws, the laws against using the mails to defraud, and any new measures which may be necessary or desirable to cure any abuses which may be found to exist in the organization, financing and practices of the motion picture industry."

In the Senate, the Duffy copyright bill, practically the same as the measure which was passed by that body last Congress but failed in the House, is the most important of the three measures pending before the patents committee and will be the basis of any legislation recommended. The Guffey bill also provides for modernization of the copyright laws, but the Sheppard bill is designed merely to clear up the situation with respect to broadcasting.

GB Gets League Contract For Assembly Equipment

The League of Nations has awarded a contract to Gaumont British for the installation of complete projection equipment in two of its Assembly Halls. The rooms will be used to show League members documentary and educational films, and will be known as the "Salle de Commission" and the "Salle de Conseil." In addition to special subjects dealing with international problems, newsreels of import to members will be shown regularly.

Hays Is Red Cross Speaker

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, will be one of the speakers at the national convention of the American Red Cross in Washington on May 13.

Studying American Methods

American methods of motion picture production are being studied by Baron K. Surritomo, holder of extensive interests in Japanese production and currently in Hollywood as guest of the Paramount studio officials.

Exhibitor Charge Brings Fox Action

The Independent Exhibitors Association of New England, meeting in Boston last week, passed a resolution urging its members to instruct their projectionists to eliminate a General Motors advertising sign in the new Walter Winchell-Ben Bernie Twentieth Century-Fox Film "Wake Up and Live," on the grounds that it was inserted by arrangements between the motion picture company and the motor manufacturer.

Forwarding of copies of the resolution to the home office of Twentieth Century-Fox, in New York, brought demands on Monday from Fox that the exhibitor organization retract the resolution publicly, because, said Felix Jenkins, Fox counsel, the resolution is "not only intemperate in tone but includes statements which are false in fact."

Burke Named Auditor

William A. Burke, office manager of RKO in Kansas City, has been named traveling auditor for that district by the home office. John Wangberg, head booker, becomes office manager and Robert Riddle, formerly with Grand National in Omaha, succeeds Mr. Wangberg as head booker.

IATSE PUSHES DRIVE IN THE FIELD

unionization of the service men would be demanded.

While no settlement had been reached when the meetings adjourned Wednesday it was understood that, as a result of the conferences, servicing would be available to the theatres in the event of a serious breakdown. Routine inspections would be barred, it was said.

IATSE Drive Attacked

Announcing that the Theatrical Business Representatives Guild would start an immediate drive to organize theatre ushers, doormen and other "front of the house" employees, Hal Olver, president, attacked the AFL move to organize these workers through the IATSE. In a statement issued from this Guild's headquarters in New York, Mr. Olver claimed that nine years ago he organized theatre managers, press agents and treasurers with AFL encouragement. The Federation later abandoned his organization, Mr. Olver said, and completely ignored theatre employees until the present threat of CIO organization moved them to action.

"There is only one thing wrong with the picture," the statement said. "The IATSE waited too long. The managers, agents and treasurers have learned to take care of themselves and have organized by themselves without the aid of professional labor organizers at fancy salaries. The new organization is the Theatrical Business Representatives Guild."

"I predict," Mr. Olver added, "that the AFL unions in show business will ignore the salary rights of its members next fall when contracts come up and will sign a three year or a five year agreement with the producers and employers at a straight scale, in order to keep out the inevitable CIO entrance into show business."

Mr. Olver claimed that the Guild has 3,400 members in branches in ten cities.

The IATSE drive to organize "front of the house" employees has been proceeding for some weeks in cities throughout the country. Progress in the formation of unions under the IA banner was reported this week from San Francisco, Seattle, Chicago, St. Louis, Hartford and Portland, Me.

In Philadelphia it was reported that the Alliance had signed up all the first run Warner houses and most of the neighborhoods. Efforts to bring in the managers and assistants were over-balanced when Warner Brothers presented a week's salary bonus to the assistants and two weeks' pay to the managers. The first meeting of the new union was set for this week when demands for recognition were to be submitted to officials of the circuit.

Cooperation in the IATSE drive was offered this week by two locals of the Building Service Employees' International, in New York and Salt Lake City, which announced that their ranks were open to theatre employees of all classifications.

Exchange Unions Negotiate

Efforts sponsored by the AFL to organize exchange employees bore fruit this week in two cities. A wage scale presented by the New Haven local to exchange managers was forwarded to the home offices for consideration. Details of the scale were not disclosed. William Barry, business manager, and Harry Feldman, official of the IATSE, acted for the union.

The Denver Film Employees Union, its membership increased to 66 through the joining of employees of the Twentieth Century-Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exchanges, discussed terms of a contract with exchange managers last week. The union asked $35 for head shippers, $25 for assistants, $22 for head inspectors and $20 for other inspectors. Time off in the week for Sunday workers also was asked.

Organization work in the exchanges continued in Seattle where more than 70 employees were reported members, in Philadelphia where 100 per cent representation of the 300 eligible employees was claimed, and in Kansas City where a membership of 110 of the 300 eligible was reported. The drives in all cases were conducted under the supervision of IATSE representatives.

EQUITY TO ORGANIZE RADIO PERFORMERS

Actors' Equity Association will undertake the unionization of radio talent in the near future, a spokesman for the organization said this week. Equity's interest in the radio field has been open for some time and has led to increasingly frequent reports that a move toward organization was imminent.

Court Orders Bills in DuArt-Consolidated Suit

Federal Judge Robert T. Patterson in New York has ordered the plaintiff and defendant to file bills of particulars in the $500,000 damage suit brought by the DuArt Film Laboratories, Inc., and Arthur Gottlieb against Consolidated Film Industries, Inc. DuArt alleges that it entered into an exclusive contract in 1934 with U Film Laboratories, Inc., a subsidiary of Universal Pictures, to develop film and that Consolidated induced Universal to breach the contract. Consolidated claims it had a prior contract.

Henry Dazian Dead

Henry Dazian, 83, former theatrical costumer and legitimate play producer, died in his home at Miami Beach, Fla., Tuesday night after a long illness. His theatrical activities started in the days of Jarrett and Palmer, producers of the original "Black Crook" at Niblo's Garden. Funeral services were held in Miami Beach Wednesday.

Revocation Bill Passes

The Dunnigan Bill, permitting revocation or refusal by the licensing authority to issue theatre licenses for one year to theatres conducting immoral shows was passed on Wednesday by the State Senate at Albany, N. Y.

Brandt Reelected

Harry Brandt, president, and all other officers of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York, were reelected at the annual meeting Wednesday at the Hotel Astor. This will be Mr. Brandt's fifth term.

Vandals in Two Hollywood Raids

paraded in front of the studio entrances and made no attempt to molest non-strikers or prevent them from entering. The first violence of any kind in connection with the strike was reported on Monday night, when a small group of men raided the cosmetic company owned and operated by Percy, Monte, Ern and Wally Westmore.

Sprinkle Creosote on Stock

The raiders, threatening the night watchman and janitor with knives, sprinkled creosote on the fixtures and stock and fled. Damage was estimated by police at $10,000. The four brothers are heads of the make-up departments for Warners Brothers, Walter Wanger, Twentieth Century-Fox and Paramount, and it was reported that the attack resulted from the fact that studios had sent players to the Westmore establishment for make-up and hairdressing.

An unnamed official of the Federated Crafts said the raid had been "framed to turn public sentiment" against the strikers.

Six Hurt in Fight

A second and more serious outbreak occurred on Tuesday when a gang of 30 men battered down doors at the Hollywood headquarters of the IATSE, shattered windows, hurled chairs, wrecked furniture and threw several IATSE men downstairs. Six men were taken to the Hollywood Receiving Hospital after the fight, three of them with broken bones and the others with cuts and bruises.

Police said they did not believe that the raiders were members of Federated Crafts. They had disappeared when police cars arrived.

Although the pickets offered no resistance to actors or other employees who entered the studios through the lines they were reported on Tuesday to be taking snapshots of everyone who entered. Mr. Cullen explained that the unions were preparing a "rogues gallery" to be used as a strike or boycott weapon.

Catholic Actors Guild Honors Buck at Dinner

Over 600 guests and members of the Catholic Actors Guild of America met at the Astor Hotel on Broadway Saturday night to honor Gene Buck, playwright and president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, with a testimonial dinner. Former President Herbert Hoover was the principal speaker. Others who addressed the gathering included Postmaster General James A. Farley, Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to President Woodrow Wilson; Clarence Budington Kelland, author, and J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S GREATEST YEAR 1937-1938

Production If Any

As this is written, early on what may or may not turn out to be an eventful Monday, the question of tense hangs unanswered and unanswerable above your correspondent's head. Last night, as you will learn from the news pages if you haven't from the air waves, the actors met, talked about what to do with respect to the strike of the craftsmen, and decided to talk the whole thing over with producers between now and next Sunday. The reader will understand, therefore, that those of the following statements which refer to the now and hereafter are conditionally accurate.

Whether or not because impending events cast their shadows across the present, the production level, lately risen to a crowded 50, eased off to 46 . Twelve pictures were started, a normal number, but 16 were finished and taken to cutting rooms, enough to suggest the application of a bit of pressure. The April totals are 44 started, 46 completed.

Paramount put three in work last week. "Wild Money" will present Edward Everett Horton, Louise Campbell, Lynne Overman, Porter Hall, Lucien Littlefield, Esther Dale, Colin Tapley, Benny Baker, James Sheriff and Nick Lukats. Louis King is directing. In "Double or Nothing," which Theodore Reed is directing, Bing Crosby, Mary Carlysle, Martha Raye, William Frawley, Benny Baker, Andy Devine, Samuel Hinds, Fay Holden and J. Carrol Naish are featured. Larry Crabbe, June Martel, Lucien Littlefield and John Patterson are the principals in "Forlorn River," which Charles Barton directs.

G-M Starts Two

Two films started at Grand National. "The Shadow," a Max Alexander production, will present Rod LaRocque, Lynn Anders, Norm Ainsley, James Blakely, Cy Kendall, Walter McGrail, and Kenneth Harlan. Lynn Shores is directing. "Sweetheart of the Navy" again teams Cecelia Parker and Eric Linden, with Roger Imhof, Bernadene Hayes, Cully Edwards, Henry Rocquemore and Mary Orr in support. Duncan Mansfield is directing the B. F. Zeidman production.

"The Singing Kid From Pine Ridge" got under way at Republic. It includes Betty Bronson, LeRoy Mason, Tom Smith, Charles Middleton, Gordon Wickland, Loreh Rethe, Ken Cooper, Frankie Marion, Jack Ingram, Bud Osborne and the Tennessee Ramblers.

After several postponements MGM finally started "You'll Be Married by Noon." Robert Young and Florence Rice are featured with Barnet Parker, Hugh Marlow, Irene Franklin, Warren Hymer, Tom Kennedy, Joe Caitz and Jack Norton. Edwin L. Marin is the director.

Start "Can't Have Everything"

Adhering to its temporary schedule of one picture a week, 20th Century-Fox started "You Can't Have Everything." Cast names are Alice Faye, Ritz Brothers, Don Ameche, Gypsy Rose Lee, Charles Winniger, Rubinoff, Anthony Marton, Joan Davis, Frances Drake, Arthur Treacher and Tip, Tap and Toe. Norman Taurog is directing.

Universal's new starter is "West Coast Limited." With Ford Beebe directing, it offers Lyle Talbot, Polly Rowles, Henry Hunter, Henry Brandon and Frank Reicher.

ROLL YOUR OWN TOTAL

A report of talent under contract to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer reads: 100 writers, 75 featured players, 20 directors and 20 stars, exclusive of the Marx Brothers.

"Mr. Dodds Takes the Air," a Mervyn LeRoy production, went into work at Warners. Present cast assignments are Kenny Baker, Jane Wyman, Gertrude Michael, Frank McHugh, Alice Brady and Henry O'Neill. Alfred E. Green is directing.

RKO-Radio started "Super Sleuth." The cast lists Jack Oakie, Ann Southern, Eduardo Ciannelli, Edgar Kennedy, Joan Woodbury, Alan Bruce, Willie Best, Bradley Paige, Frank M. Thomas and William Corson. Ben Stoloff is directing.

As the month closed Crescent started "The Right to Kill," a Tom Keane picture which I. V. Willat will direct.

Finish Seventeen Films

Five studios, each of which finished two, accounted for 10 of the 17 completed pictures. Three independent producers each contributed one to major company releases. Columbia checked "Girls Can Play," formerly "Miss Casey at the Bat," off the active list. The cast includes Charles Quigley, Jacquelyn Wells, Rita Hayworth, John Gallaudet, Marc Lawrence, Peggy Stratford, Patricia Farr, Ruth Hilliard, George McKay and Guinn Williams. Lambert Hillyer directed. "Texas Cyclone" also was moved to the cutting room. It features Charles Starrett, Barbara Weeks, Hal Taliaferro, Al Bridge, Dick Curtis and Jack Lipson. Leon Barsha directed.

The first of Radio's two is "There Goes My Girl." Ann Southern and Gene Raymond head the cast, which included Richard Lane, Maxine Jennings, Alec Craig, Gordon Jones, William Corson, Maxine Jennings, Bradley Page, Frank Jenks and Joan Woodbury, Ben Holmes directed. The second production, "You Can't Beat Love," will present Preston Foster, Joan Fontaine, William Brisbane, Barbara Pepper, Alan Bruce, Bradley Page, Frank M. Thomas and Richard Lane. Christy Cabanne directed.

At 20th Century-Fox "Escape from Love" and "Sing and Be Happy" finished. The first features Michael Whalen, Gloria Stuart, George Sanders, Cora Witherspoon, and Gerald Oliver Smith. Eugene Forde directed. In the second, Anthony Martin, Leah Ray, Joan Davis, Dixie Dunbar, Helen Westley, Allan Lane, Andrew Tombes and Burton Churchill will be seen. James Tinling directed.

Finish Two Universals

A Trem Carr production, "I Cover the War," is one of the Universal two. Directed by Arthur Lubin, the cast is made up of John Wayne, Don Barclay, Gwen Gaze, Major Harris, Pat Somerset, Charles Brokaw, James Bush, Arthur Aylesworth, Jack Mack, Olay Hytten and Franklyn Parker. The second picture, "Armored Car," will present Robert Wilcox, Judith Barrett, Cesar Romero, Irving Pichel, Tom Kennedy, David Oliver, William Lundigan, Jack Powell, Inez Courtney and Tony Hughes. Lewis R. Foster directed.

More important of the pair completed at Warners probably is "Ever Since Eve." Marion Davies and Robert Montgomery are starred, with Patsy Kelly, Frank McHugh, Marcia Ralston, Allen Jenkins, Barton MacLane, Frederick Clark, William B. Davidson, John T. Murray, Pierre Watkins, Harry Hayden and Louise Fazenda. Lloyd Bacon directed. In "Lady Luck" Barton MacLane, Ann Sheridan, Peggy Bates, Dick Purcell, Walter Cassell, Lottie Williams, Eugene Jackson and Charles Foy will be seen. Louis King directed.

Powell, Rainer Starred

MGM completed "The Emperor's Candlesticks." William Powell and Luise Rainer are starred with Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan, Frank Morgan, Henry Stephenson, Bernadene Hayes, Donald Kirke, Douglas Dumbrille, Charles Waldron, Bert Roach, E. E. Clive, Rollo Lloyd, Frank Conroy and William Stack. George Fitzmaurice directed.

"It Might Happen to You" was finished at Republic. It will present Owen Davis, Jr., Alan Baxter, Andrea Leeds, Astrid Allyn, Al Shean, Walter Kingsford, Christian Rub, Elsa Jannsen and Edward Colebrook. Phil Rosen directed.

For Paramount release, B. P. Schulberg completed "The Great Gambini." The cast includes Akim Tamiroff, John Trent, Marian Marsh, Genevieve Tobin, Reginald Denny, William Demarest, Edward Brophy, Lya Lys, Allen Birmingham, Roland Drew and Ralph Peters. Charles Vidor directed.

Also for Paramount, Major Pictures completed "Midnight Madonna," an Emanuel Cohen Production. Warren William, Mady Correll, Robert Baldwin, Nancy Clancy, Edward Ellis, Jonathan Hale and Frank Reicher are the cast names. James Flood directed.

Last of the completed productions is "Vogues of 1938," Walter Wanger-United Artists. Screen names included are Warner Baxter, Joan Bennett, Helen Vinson, Frances Langford, Mischa Auer, Alan Mowbray, Jerome Cowan, Betty Wyman and Marla Shelton. Irving Cummings directed.

Leo Carillo has been given the role in Harry Sherman's production of "The Barrier" played by Mario Carillo in the 1927 version. . . . "Captains Courageous" will start at the Carthay Circle May 14 at $1.65 top on a two-a-day schedule.

RULING AFFECTS STATUS OF BOARD OF REVIEW

Holds Law Is Unconstitutional Making Recommendations of Board Censorship Instrument

Judge Worth W. Trummell of the Circuit Court of Dade county, Florida, this week ruled unconstitutional the state law prescribing compliance with the recommendations of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, a volunteer organization, as the sole instrument of censorship control over motion picture exhibition in Florida.

Judge Trummell's ruling was made Monday in dismissing a case against Samuel Cummings, of Jewel Productions, on four charges of exhibiting "Ecstasy", a film not approved by the National Board of Review, in Miami and St. Petersburg. Under the statute ruled against, such an act is defined as a misdemeanor.

Producers have been paying an assessment of $6.25 for each 1,000 feet of film submitted to the Board of Review for approval. This item aggregates approximately $75,000 a year. The Florida situation is paralleled in only two communities, Providence, R. I., and Portland, Ore., where municipal authorities, by informal agreement, accept the National Board seal as tantamount to official approval.

The $6.25 rate was established in 1919, when the fee was raised from the $3.50 level determined upon when the National Board was founded in 1909. The general charge fixed by official state and municipal censor boards ranges from $2 to $3. The total amount paid by producers to the National Board since the present fee was agreed upon is estimated well above $1,000,000. All screen product except newsreels is submitted to the Board by the cooperating companies.

The Florida jurist held that the law is unconstitutional because it delegates legislative authority to an unofficial board in another state operating without legal status or regulation.

Sources of Revenue

The National Board of Review, discussing its source of revenue, said that "in addition to the payments by producers on reels submitted, the board receives a modest income from the sale of its informational literature. As the demand for this service increases, it is slowly placing the expense of this work on a self-sustaining basis apart from any funds collected on its review charge to the motion picture industry. The department of the Better Films Council is partially sustained by membership fees of two kinds—associate at two dollars per annum, and cooperating at $10 per member per annum. The fee of $1 is asked for each member of an affiliated, organized group under the Better Films or the Motion Picture Study Club plan. The board is also open to donations from groups and individuals not connected with the motion picture industry."

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, originally called the National Board of Censorship, was organized in March, 1909, by the Young People's Institute of New York City, of which the late Charles Sprague Smith was founder. This followed a closing of the motion picture theatres in New York City by then Mayor George B. McClellan because of the alleged conditions of the theatres and the nature of the film exhibited in them. Wilton Barrett is the present executive secretary of the board.

DEATHS OF WEEK

Mexican Exhibitors

James Holloway and James Ellenay, American exhibitors of Jaurez, Mexico, opposite El Paso, were drowned last Friday when their skiff capsized in a storm at the huge El Elefante Dam, 89 miles south of the border.

William Gillette

William Gillette, grand old man of the American theatre, died of a pulmonary hemorrhage in Hartford Hospital at Hartford, Conn., last Thursday. He was nearing his 82nd birthday.

IN THE COURTS

Nebraska Court Holds Bank Night a Lottery

Judge Fred Messmore of the United States district court at Beatrice, Neb., this week ruled that Bank Night was in violation of the state's anti-lottery laws, upholding the ruling of Attorney General Hunter.

The court, handing down a decision in a test case brought against the Beatrice Theatre Corporation granted a permanent injunction to halt the game. An immediate appeal will be taken.

Adjourn Brandt Action To Examine Loew Officer

Argument on the motion in which Brandt Theatre, Inc., Times Square Theatre Corporation and operators of 32 other neighborhood houses seek permission to examine before trial Charles C. Moskowitz, assistant treasurer of Loew, Inc., in New York, has been adjourned until May 10. The suit is based on Loew's change of policy from the four and three-day split week to five and two days.

Permits Century Appeal

Federal Judge Robert T. Patterson in New York has allowed Century Productions, Inc., Samuel Cummings, Empire Laboratories, Inc., Richard Fiedler, Cravath Wells and the Bob-Ed Theatre Corporation to appeal from a decision in favor of Frederick Beck Patterson who alleged that the defendants used portions of his film, "Shooting Big Game With a Camera" in their picture "The Jungle Killer."

Mary Pickford Wins Suit

She claimed the real estate company sold her the interest without having obtained a permit from the State Corporation Commission.

Warners Sued Over Song

Wayne Weisher and Priscilla Wayne Sprague have filed suit in the federal court at Los Angeles against Warner Brothers, Inc., and Cosmopolitan Corporation, Inc., claiming copyright infringement of the dramatic composition entitled "Let's Pretend." The plaintiffs, alleging that the Warner film, "Sing Me a Love Song," embodies scenes and sequences from their story, ask an injunction, confiscation of negatives and positives and an accounting of profits.

Postpone Fox Hearing

The resumption of hearings in the William Fox bankruptcy action at Atlantic City, scheduled to begin this week before Federal Referee Robert Steedle, has been postponed until May 10.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

FOR realism of the kind that not even the modern Hollywood studio technologist counterfeits quite adequately, Walter Futter, formerly of Broadway and now a British motion picture producer, took his company to Egypt, scene of "Jericho," which he is making for the British Capitol Films. With him went Thornton Freeland, director; Paul Robeson, singing star of the picture; Henry Wilcoxon, actor, and others.

More realistic even than the realism in "Jericho," was Mr. Wilcoxon's unscheduled visit, with Mr. Robeson, to the tombs in the Great Pyramid, as described by Mr. Wilcoxon to his brother, Robert Owen Wilcoxon, in a letter to Hollywood the other day.

Paul Robeson and Herbert Wilcoxon were camped with the Futter unit down near the pyramids outside of Cairo. During an interval in filming, the two players decided to go inside the Great Pyramid. It was all very awesome and none too easy-going. Finally they crawled through the tiny passage from the great hall and arrived in a room at the exact geometrical center of the pyramid. This was the King's tomb. It was a simple but impressive chamber, some 35 feet long, by 18 feet wide and 18 feet high. The stones making up the room were enormous, each weighing well over 20 tons.

After they had been in the room for a moment or two, Wilcoxon noticed the extraordinary acoustic properties. On impulse, he suggested that Robeson should sing a deep bass note. This came back true and full and strong. Then he asked Robeson to sing three notes that would harmonize—the first to be loud and long; the second, of medium strength and length; the third, softer and shorter. Back came a beautifully strong and resonant chord like that of an organ. Both Robeson and Wilcoxon were immensely pleased.

After a short pause, Robeson started to sing the bass aria from Mozart's Magic Flute, "O Isis and Osiris." To Wilcoxon, it was the most impressive bit of singing he'd ever witnessed—the giant Negro from New Jersey, son of a minister who had escaped out of Southern slavery, a former American football player and frequenter of Broadway stage and Hollywood Boulevard, standing legs astride in this centuries-old vaulted death chamber of historical Egyptian Kings, pouring out his flood of melody. At the finish of the song, Robeson and Wilcoxon left the tomb and, without a word, wended their way quietly back to Walter Futter's movie camp, there to resume "Jericho" for exhibitors' screens in America and England.

Charles (Buck) Jones, pioneer western star, complains that the world has gone sissy, even on westerns. Buck said that because western pictures have an unusually wide international circulation, he has to watch out for the censors of about 22 foreign countries for stage-coach robbing, gunplay, kidnapping and the like.

"Singapore and the Malay States are the worst of the lot," he says. "We have to cut out miles of film before we ship anything over there. That's because the natives are so excitable. If they see any gunplay in a movie they go out with the idea that they're cowboys, and before they shake that notion loose, they've killed a couple of dozen persons."

DENIES REPORT OF HIS DEATH

This department, on April 17th, told how, on a lonely night, nine years ago, while counting the day's receipts in his office, George Reister, manager of the Ohio theatre in Mansfield, Ohio, was shot and killed by a bandit who staged a holdup. Either by coincidence or design, the shot was fired simultaneously with one on the screen, covering the sound of the holdup bullet and thus enabling the bandit to negotiate a getaway.

The copy of MOTION PICTURE HERALD containing the story had hardly started circulating when, much to our astonishment, Mr. George Reister, after these nine years, walked into our editorial offices to announce that the report of his murder was exaggerated. It was another fellow.

Seems that Mr. Reister had been managing the Ohio theatre in Mansfied for the Warner Brothers for a long spell, and a day or two before the holdup, he was transferred eastward without any local announcement by the circuit. His successor of only a few hours was the murder victim, and the similarity in names—the new manager being George Rafter—resulted in an erroneous identification in Ohio newspapers. The mistake in print was never rectified, and went into the newspaper records as such, being carried down through the years. Reister is now managing the Plaza in Englewood for Skouras.

Don't look now, but the solitary Swede, Greta Garbo, is reported to be showing strong signs of gregarious instinct—great changes are reputedly coming over her. They say she now actually stops to chat with co-workers on the set at Metro's California studio. Although there has been no official confirmation of the report, Howard Strickling at the studio is watching carefully.

Joseph Ferdinand Gould, one of the few in New York who seem to realize that the city had a history before Minsky, has, since his graduation from Harvard, written 8,800,000 words on his encyclopedia "Oral History of Our Times." Now he's about to embark on a new undertaking of almost equal scope, a biographical dictionary containing 1,000 sketches of early New York settlers, using more millions of words, for the WPA.

Mr. Gould's encyclopedic fluidity makes him eligible for a job in any of New York's motion picture press departments.

HARRY MARTIN, motion picture editor of The Commercial Appeal, in Memphis, and one-time champion hog-caller of Sunflower County Mississippi, had something vital restored to his life the other morning, by Bob Burns, formerly of Van Buren, Arkansas, and now of bazooka renown in Hollywood.

It was an eight weeks old pig, built on the Duroc model with a bright red paint job, a four-inch clearance and 18 inches over all. This included the "crank," which is on the rear.

The pig, which arrived by express from Hollywood, was appropriately deposited on Mr. Martin's newspaper desk several hours before he arrived at his office. Members of the staff had tentatively named it "Grampaw Snazzy," after one of Mr. Burns' radio relatives, until Mr. Martin, out of his vast knowledge, said it wasn't that kind of a pig at all. So it will remain "Aunt Boo" until it becomes pork chops.

Mr. Martin thought it significant that the pig should merely be identified with Burns' calling card and no further word of explanation between one back-country boy and other. However, as between a movie critic and a movie actor, Mr. Martin remembered that maybe it was a "plug" for the new Bing Crosby-Bob Burns motion picture, "Waikiki Wedding," in which Burns is co-starred with a little pig named Wafford, for Paramount.

Warner Brothers are right proud of their Busby Berkeley's proficiency in selecting beautiful girls to fill the choruses of the many Warner musicals. So proud, in fact, that the home office press department is covering the country with two full longsheets of copy in explanation of Mr. Berkeley's job of putting "beauty on a business basis," as Warners describe it.

"In casting his girls for a picture," says the statement, "Berkeley surveys the market just as the nuts-and-bolts man surveys his.

"The famous dance director looks at thousands of faces and figures in the course of a year. He looks at them whenever he sees them, whether on the street, in night clubs, or at private parties. He is always looking at women. Of the thousands he sees per annum he finds about 200 that he can use. Of the two hundred there are perhaps a hundred who are kept fairly busy. The other hundred are 'alternates.'"

Warner Brothers' press agents call Busby Berkeley a "tycoon" of beauty. His parents know him as William Enos.

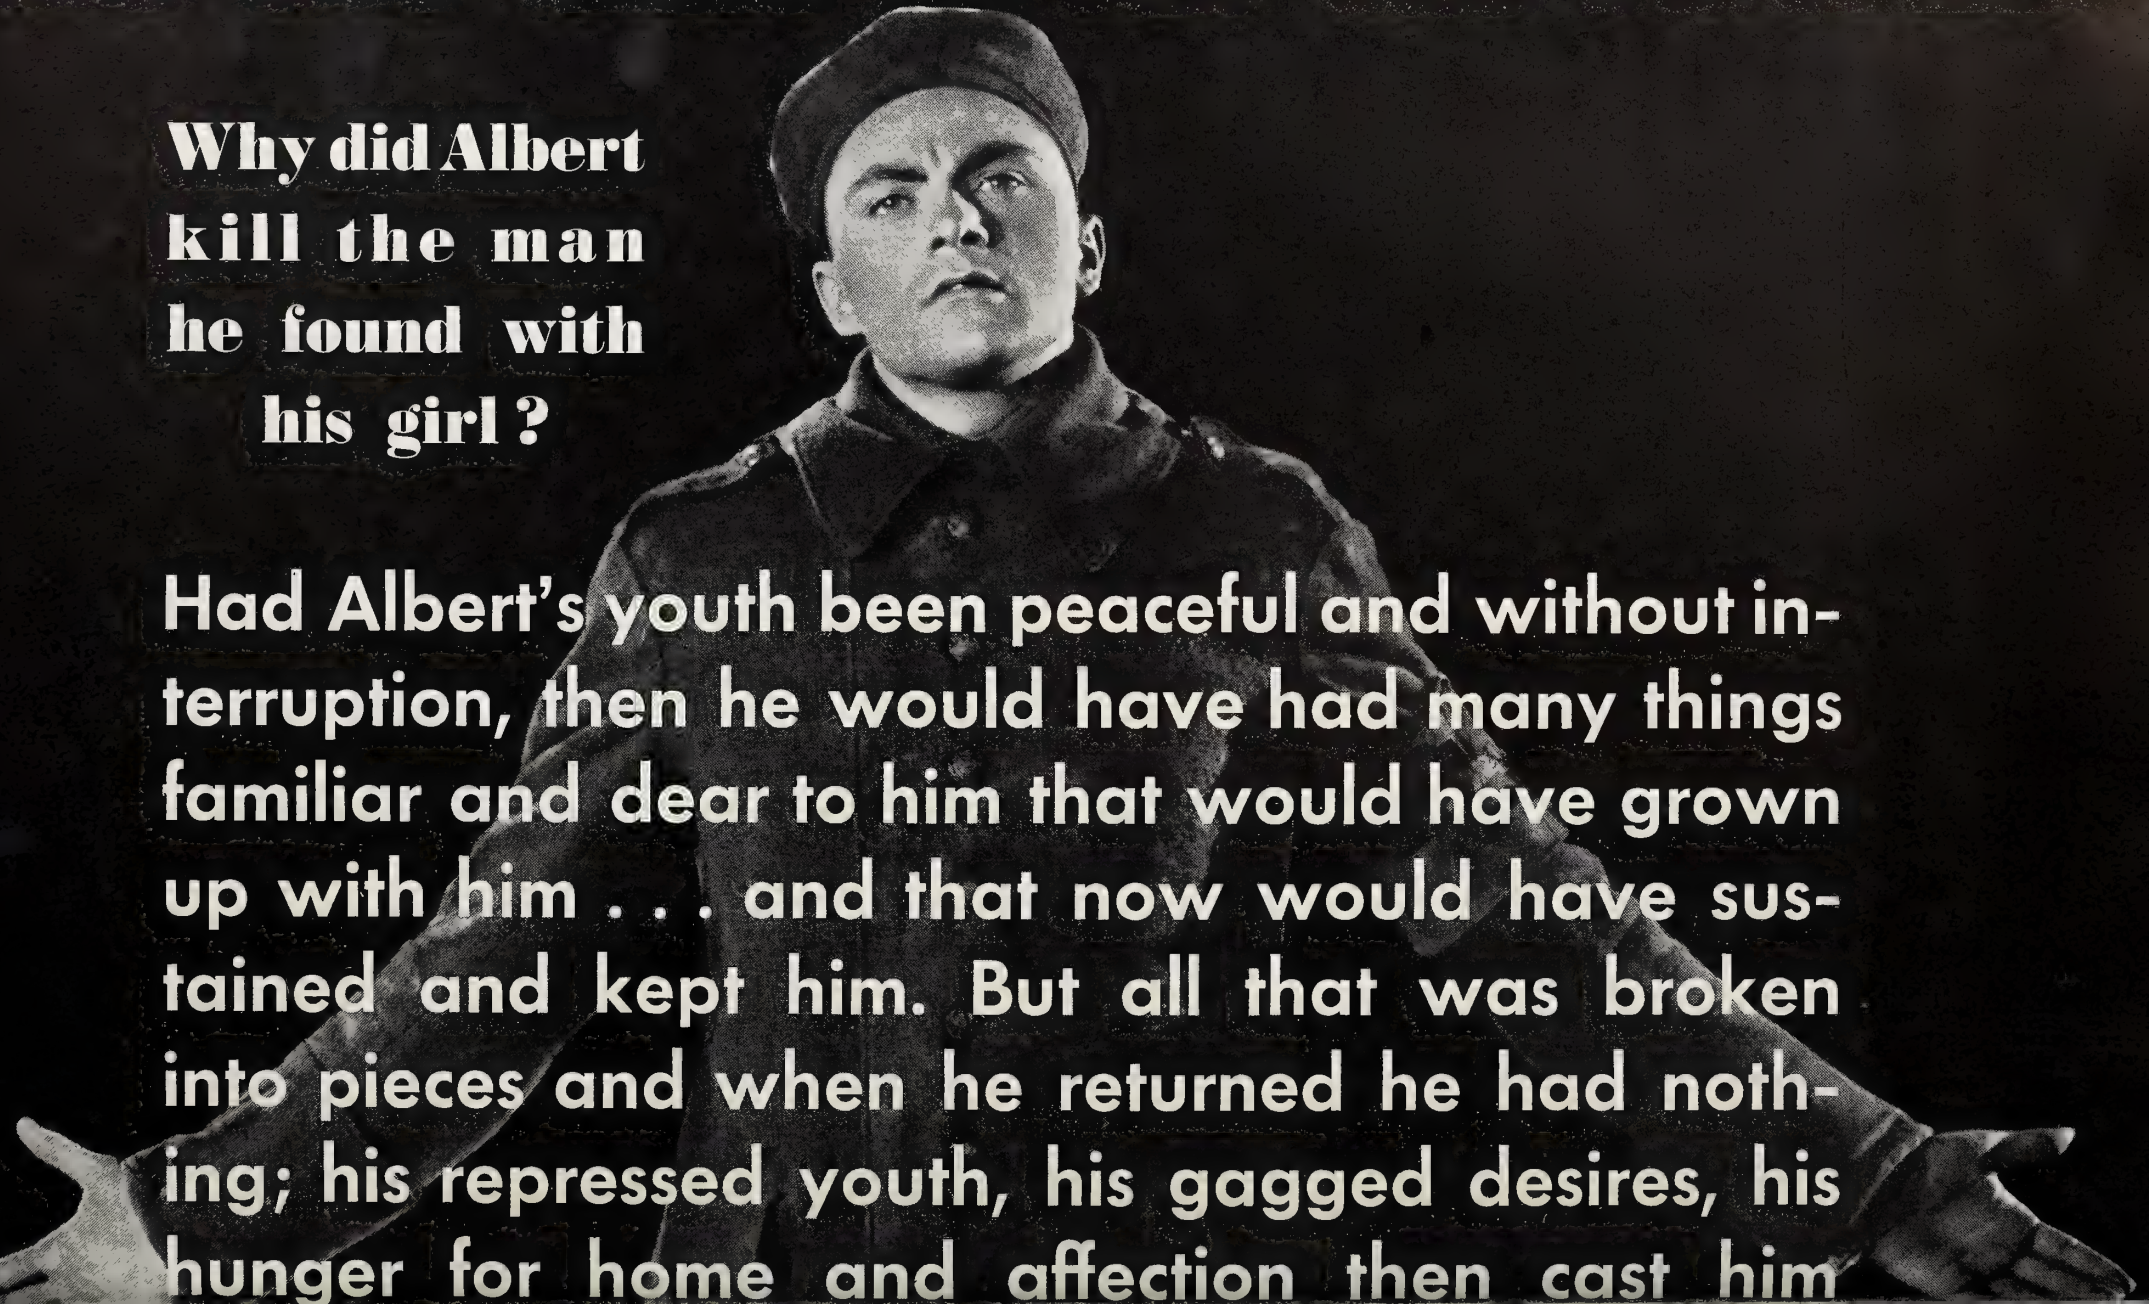
News and newsreel cameramen in Germany must now pass examination conducted by Wilhelm Goebbels' Ministry of Propaganda and Public Enlightenment. None is asked to show his work, or his knowledge of camera art. They are required, instead, to give a brief digest of the contents of Fuehrer Adolph Hitler's autobiography, "Mein Kampf" (My Battle); define "system parties"; and, enumerate what prominent Germans were arrayed against Hitler in November, 1923 (when he made his unsuccessful putsch).

WE DEFY YOU TO READ THIS . . .
AND NOT WANT TO SEE THE PICTURE!



Why did Albert kill the man he found with his girl?

Had Albert's youth been peaceful and without interruption, then he would have had many things familiar and dear to him that would have grown up with him . . . and that now would have sustained and kept him. But all that was broken into pieces and when he returned he had nothing; his repressed youth, his gagged desires, his hunger for home and affection then cast him blindly upon this one human being he supposed he loved. And when that was all shattered he knew of nothing but to shoot; he had been taught nothing else. Had he never been a soldier he would have known many another way. As it was, his hand did not falter . . . for years he had been accustomed to shoot, and not to miss. In Albert the dream-ridden adolescent, in Albert the shy lover, there still sat Albert the soldier.

Shall We Dance

(RKO Radio)

Dancing and Singing

RKO-Radio had "Shall We Dance" out for a series of unannounced previews and audience reaction convinced the producer that the feature compared favorably with and probably was potentially a greater entertainment and commercial hit than any of the preceding Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers shows, whereupon it was considered ready for one of those Hollywood professional previews. Producers, directors, actors, writers and musicians from the home lot and practically all others were out in force. About a thousand ordinary folk who get into theatres only by paying their way also attended. The assemblage applauded many times during the action and at the finale, leaving the impression that "Shall We Dance" probably will do better at the box office than any of its predecessors.

There is more embellishment than in the earlier Astaire-Rogers features. The music, either sung or used as accompaniment, does not seem to be up to former standards. No one was heard humming or whistling any of the tunes as the crowd milled out into the street. There's nothing the matter with the dancing, however, either as it presents Astaire in solo or in that in which he is joined by Miss Rogers. The comedy content is distinctly superior.

Though the story has a comedy romance theme, it actually is a series of gags interspersed with music and dancing. The suitation that brings the dancers together is a gag. The boy is in love with the girl and wants to marry her. Another suitor is something she can get along very well without. A gag is used to arouse her romantic interest. Another is used to effect a marriage of convenience and still another to convince the girl that she should stay married to him. Edward Everett Horton's comedy contributions are the result of a cleverly conceived and written succession of gags, and Eric Blore's big moment, which practically "steals the show," is an expert reading of an hilarious confusion of spelling in a telephonic conversation. Some of Astaire's dancing is ballet gagging, as is the roller skating number with Miss Rogers. Of course they have several straightaway flying feet numbers and Astaire's ballet with Harriet Hoctor and her ballet solo are high art.

As both Astaire and Miss Rogers have pretty well established themselves as a strong name draw combination, the show is not one that should require very much selling. The public has come to know just what to expect of them. On the whole, the show is gay and pleasing.

Previewed in Pantages Theatre, Hollywood. After the show, boyish Mr. Berman was here, there and every place in the lobby accepting compliments. Mr. Red Kann of Motion Picture Daily was quite amused by the manner in which the doorman bellowed orders that the various dignitaries' cars be driven up. But when the roarer began roaring "Mr. Kann's car! Bring Mr. Kann's car up right away!," Red began looking around for himself.—Gus McCarthy.

Kid Galahad

(Warner)

Prize Fight Melodrama

The production is spun of the stuff that usually goes over with the masses who pay the freight. It's spun in the correct way, too. The adjective "good" is applicable to story, acting, directing and production value.

Basically the film is a prizefight melodrama. There is also a vivid dash of the conflict of triangular romance, emotion-stirring action and some of the better qualities of a gripping gangster story. Comedy has been incorporated into dialogue, situations and action. The leading roles are in the hands of such capable players as Edward G. Robinson, Bette Davis, Humphrey Bogart, Harry Carey, Jane Bryan, Joe Cunningham, the newcomer William Haade, and another young chap, Wayne Morris, who established himself as a personality to be considered in future production.

Nick Donati, fight manager, to whom the roar of the crowd is dear but who always keeps his mother and sister secluded from its vicious influence, dreams of discovering a fighter whom he can develop into a champion. He comes upon one accidentally when bellboy Galahad knocks out "Champ McGraw" of the rival manager, Turkey Morgan.

Donati becomes a man of fury when he thinks that not only is his secretary-pal, Fluff, in love with his protege, but that the boy is in love with his sister Marie. Donati sends the boy into the ring to take a beating in the real fight. He has made known to Turkey that he is hedging his bets. Turkey announces that if Donati is not on the level, it means death. For half the way Galahad, following Donati's treacherous instructions, takes a fearful beating. Then Fluff and Marie explain to Donati. Understanding, Donati sends his boy out to win. In the dressing rooms Turkey is bent on killing Donati and Galahad. There is a roar of shots. Turkey and Donati die.

Though long in running time, the film does not lag, nor does it resort to irrelevant material. While the show is probably more suitable for adults, it is not too grim or forceful for juveniles.

Our Fighting Navy

(Wilcox, British)

Naval Melodrama

Produced in cooperation with the Navy League, and with the cooperation of the British Admirality, this subject is effective action melodrama of the popular type and has no propagandist atmosphere though the strength and technical efficiency of the British Navy certainly is conveyed in a convincing manner.

Official cooperation not only has provided some striking pictures of a fleet at sea and of the mechanism of the modern fighting ship, but it has been responsible for some of the highlight episodes. Notable are the detail with which a torpedo attack is pictured and the realism of a magazine explosion which shatters a battleship.

The cruiser Audacious, commanded by Captain Markham, is ordered to the West Indies Squadron, to watch developments in the state of Blanca, where the British colony is in danger owing to revolutionary conditions. Markham is glad of the order because he is in love with Pamela, daughter of Brent, the British consul at Blanca. Pamela, back from Europe, is sent to the Consulate under the escort of a lieutenant of the Audacious, but the two are captured by the rebels, who carry them aboard the battleship El Mirante.

The El Mirante's guns are trained on the British Consulate, in which the President of Blanca has taken refuge, and the rebel leader opens fire, confident that the British cruiser will not retaliate, owing to the hostages on the El Mirante. Markham, however, first laying a smoke screen between the rebel ship and its shore target, engages it successfully. The lieutenant and the girl dive from the deck of the rebel ship and are picked up by a boat from Audacious, which then launches a torpedo attack on the El Mirante, and sinks it.

The best of the acting is that of Robert Douglas as the gallant naval captain, with Richard Cromwell seconding him well, and Noah Beery contributing a picturesque study of the flamboyant President.

Retitled, it should be saleable on its authenticity, its story interest and the special appeal of its scenes of naval battle.

Jump for Glory

(Criterion-United Artists)

Melodrama

The reformed crook formula is used again, with the not uncommon variation that a refugee from American justice uses London as the scene of his new exploits, finds his past the chief obstacle to his happiness, and achieves vengeance and respectability at one blow.

The story is not too logical or convincing, but its separate incidents are speedy enough. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Alan Hale are well cast. There is woman appeal in the plight of the man up against circumstances and in an episode in which he risks his neck in order to prove himself guilty of murder and the woman he loves innocent.

Ricky Morgan, a college boy down on his luck in New Orleans, is involved in a bootlegging venture with Jim Dial, of the underworld, and, under suspicion of murder, is compelled by Dial to become his ally in a series of burglaries. On the first chance he breaks free and gets to London, where he continues to operate as a "cat burglar." A receiver shows him a ring which was once his own property and tells him that it belongs to Glory Howard, who is about to be married to a Colonel Fane, actually another alias for Dial. Trying to steal back the ring from the girl's apartment, Ricky is wounded by her. She lets him go free, and in a few weeks they are lovers. Discovering the identity of Fane and Dial, he persuades Glory to marry the crook to save Ricky from exposure. On the day of the wedding Ricky tackles Dial, who is shot. To clear Glory, Ricky repeats for the police an apparently impossible leap from a roof. But facts are discovered to indicate suicide by Fane. The obvious selling angle is the hero's "leap for love."

The Last Night

(Amkino)

Russian Documentary Film

A prefactory note says that this production is offered in celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the October, 1917, revolution and is based on incidents that occurred during the night before the reds swept into power. The happenings of that night, with the tide of conflict shifting first to the side of the white army and then to the red, are viewed as affecting the members of two families, affiliated with opposite sides, and it may be remarked as a commentary upon the advancing technical talent of the Russian impresarios that neither family is made to appear perfect. Even the hero of the night is played as an uncouth and overzealous sailor, a device which adds, cunningly, to the impressiveness of the doctrinal declarations placed in his mouth.

It is hardly necessary to synopsize the film beyond saying that most of the principals are killed, inadvertently or otherwise, in the street fighting that goes on during the night, including the boy of the boy-meets-girl episode, a tragedy starkly depicted but quickly passed over, as are the other individual killings, in order that the major issues of the conflict may be emphasized. In the matter of proportion the picture deviates from the Hollywood war picture norm in that, whereas the war sequences of the American type production are subordinated to the personal narrative, the Russian pattern reverses this scheme.

Characterization is in the Russian manner, heavily underscored yet forceful. The continuity is a good deal better than the Moscow average. Much of the street fighting is graphically staged. English subtitles appear to translate the Russian dialogue adequately .

Reviewed at the Cameo theatre, New York, which had a capacity audience on the afternoon before May Day, many of those present discussing the picture in Russian with manifest enthusiasm and all responding resoundingly to the explicitly phrased doctrinal passages.—W. R. W.

Angel's Holiday

Comedy-Melodrama

As is usual when Jane Withers is the central player, she is practically the whole show. Of course, the supporting players are essential to the development of the plot and they do much that helps makes the film amusing entertainment, but when it comes time for excitement, Jane is the one depended upon to provide it. She does so here in a manner with appeal for her juvenile adherents as well as grownups who appreciate something light and gay.

Basically the story is a hokum yarn of a hokum publicity stunt that goes sour. Worldly wise "angel" (Jane Withers), tips off "Nick" the reporter (Robert Kent) that the disappearance of a movie actress—the role is played by Sally Blane—is just a gag to land free newspaper space. The flare-back is something that neither the actress nor press agent anticipated. The actress actually disappears. Kidnapers imprison her in her voluntary hideout and ask for ransom. "Nick" thinks that "Angel" has double crossed him because she's in puppy love with him while his affections for the actress make the kidnaping a very serious affair. However, when "Angel" and "Nick" are grabbed by the mob, the little girl escapes and finally convinces the police she is telling the truth. As the gang is rounded up, the actress is freed and "Angel," knowing she has several years to wait, renounces her love for "Nick" in favor of the star.

The picture moves speedily. Action and dialogue are well blended and the various situations intelligently established. Specialty interludes, particularly Miss Withers' mimicing and Joan Davis' song number, serve to break up the suspense as well as to balance the comedy.

The Thirteenth Chair

(MGM)

Mystery

Not very many days were spent in the making of the picture. It probably holds the world's record for time in the cutting room, inasmuch as two days after it was finished it was given an unannounced preview. A couple of days later the press was invited to see it. Familiarity with formula mechanical procedure of a formula moving picture property undoubtedly facilitated the speed. As everybody knew what was expected, it is not too much to assume that audiences will know what to suspect, a formula mystery melodrama, accompanied by all the supposedly necessary adjuncts of romance, comedy, suspense, thrill and surprise.

As "The Thirteenth Chair" comes up on the screen, it seems like an old friend. The principal source of interest is wonderment as to what the passage of time has wrought in it. In this case, Bayard Veiller's old play has grown stout and fairly good to see, mainly

Records Broken At Music Hall

Unique in the Radio City Music Hall's history, "A Star Is Born," Technicolor photoplay hit starring Janet Gaynor and Fredric March, gives promise of doing greater business in its second week than in its opening engagement.

The film has been building steadily since its opening day — each day's business exceeding the previous day, until last Sunday night's box office receipts counted up to a record for any evening in the Music Hall's history. With business continuing at the present rate, "A Star Is Born" will accomplish the rare feat in show business of beating its own record on its second week.

A HOLDOVER SENSATION IN ALL PICTURE HISTORY!

because of the work of Dame May Whitty in it. Other than that it is the same familiar stock acquaintance.

All that one knows he will find in a complicated mystery melodrama is to be seen in this picture. A man has been killed. Many are suspected. A mystic holds a seance. Another person is killed. Someone in the room, to which there was neither ingress nor egress, must have done it. All is baffling to those implicated, but, as carried out on the screen, it wouldn't give even the most amateurish super-sleuth a good mental workout.

For entertainment purposes, the show doesn't offer very much. A few fairly good names are scattered through the cast. Those who see the picture probably will be more interested in seeing whether the film confirms their suspicions than in anything else.

Rootin' Tootin' Rhythm

(Republic)

Western

The constant increase of the number of admirers of Gene Autry, as evidenced by exhibitors' reports to "What the Picture Did for Me," seems to indicate a desire for the singing cowboy type of hero.

It is now quite evident that music in Westerns has outgrown its baby clothes, and singing has taken a larger part of the footage, so much so that in this picture the singing on more than one occasion breaks the thread of story continuity. The result is that the picture appears to be one of Autry's lesser efforts.

The supporting cast is one especially geared for high powered action, and it is regrettable that the production does not utilize their talents with the six-gun. Monte Blue, Al Clauser and his Oklahoma Outlaws, Max Hoffman, Jr., Charles King and Hal Taliaferro constitute an imposing array of manpower, especially suited to the story of warfare in the range country. Smiley Burnette is almost as much a fixture in an Autry picture as Autry himself. He is good as usual and much superior to his role. Armida and Ann Pendelton supply the feminine interest.

The story is this: Cattle having been stolen from his ranch, "Gene" (Autry) and his companion, "Frog" (Smiley Burnette), set out to track down the rustlers. Donning the discarded clothes of two outlaws, who have a price on their heads, "Gene" and "Frog" arrive at a small town. Mistaken for the outlaws they escape with the help of "Stafford" (Monte Blue). "Stafford," leader of the rustlers, has been waiting for the two outlaws to run "Gene's" herd across the border. "Gene" and "Frog" spike "Stafford's" plans and best the real outlaws in an encounter.

Cafe Metropole

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy Romance

Four factors considered necessary to entertainment and commercial success have been included in this frothy, farcical, comedy romance. They are personalities, story content, directorial technique, and production value.

The film presents Loretta Young and Tyrone Power, principally supported by Adolphe Menjou, Gregory Ratoff, Charles Winninger and Helen Westley. The secondary players also are familiar and all blend their talents into a smoothly working unit. The director, Edward H. Griffith, has concentrated on handling sophisticated romances. "Animal Kingdom," "Another Language," "No More Ladies" and "Ladies in Love" demonstrate his technique. The smartness of "Cafe Metropole" is the manner in which Mr. Griffith has endowed a rather trite story with a comedy verve.

The aim has been to appeal to the sophisticates, yet not be so cute as to miss the run-of-the-mill crowd usually not very interested in the doings of the upper crust.

The locale is Paris. Experiencing money troubles, "Monsieur Victor" (Menjou) has in debt to him the tax impoverished American, "Alexis" (Power). To the Cafe Metropole come the "Ridgeways" (Winninger, Helen Westley, and Loretta Young, as the royalty worshipping daughter). Sly "Victor" forces "Alexis" to impersonate a Russian nobleman. The girl falls for him immediately and he does for her. But complications arise. Only dire threats from "Victor" force "Alexis" to continue the deception. Up pops "Paul" (Ratoff), the real Russian. But the daughter has seen through the scheme all along and persists in charming "Alexis."

Previewed in Grauman's Chinese Theatre. The picture was shown to an audience drawn by the promise of a major preview in addition to "A Star Is Born." For once the pay-their-way customers greatly outnumbered the invited professional and press guests, and seemed to think the show was all right.—G.M.

Behind the Flood Headlines

(William J. Ganz - American Red Cross)

Flood Relief Work

The floods that inundate large areas every year, causing havoc to homes and acute distress to human life, also sound the S.O.S. for the humanitarian work of the American Red Cross. This work provides food for the hungry, shelter for the homeless and medical care for the sick, also lends itself to the task of rehabilitation. In this subject, a graphic and stirring reminder of the devastating fury of uncontrolled waters, we see the Red Cross going about its job with the competence and sureness of experience. The film is well worth the playing both for the story it unfolds and for the cause it represents. Distributed free through the chapters of the Red Cross. The narration is by Lowell Thomas. Running time, 11 minutes.

Hollywood Party

(MGM)

Spectacular

This is an item in the Star Parade series and suggests a production budget equal to the overhead of many a fair-to-middlin' feature length production. Elissa Landi and Charley Chase are mistress and master of ceremonies, introducing a battery of entertainment personalities such as Leon Errol, Joe E. Brown and Anna May Wong, who appear between show numbers presenting more or less adorned pulchritude in dance routines and again as merely gorgeous figurines. There are band numbers, too, and fashion notes and an Hawaiian interlude, all in striking color and smartly integrated. Some of the early Broadway Melodies had less to recommend them as entertainment and seldom does a short subject of remotely comparable calibre come to screen. This film will stand up under more exploitation than it is reasonable to expect it to receive in this era of double decker programs.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Bosko and the Pirates

(MGM)

Diverting

Quite a while back the Harmon-Ising Cartoon people turned out a sensationally successful subject called "The Old Mill Pond," if memory serves, in which frogs impersonated (or whatever the word for that might be) various colored musical stars. This is a natural follow-up on that subject and as like it, yet different enough, as one blues song is like another. Cab Calloway, Bill Robinson, the Mills Brothers and Lewis Armstrong are among the personalities seen, in froggish caricature, and heard in action. The subject merits and will stand up under special billing.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Tennis Tactics

(MGM)

Stimulating

When a pair of champions like Commentator Pete Smith and Courtmaster Fred Perry get together nothing less than a California earthquake could prevent the occurrence of something worthwhile, and no temblors interfered with this undertaking. The tennis champion is shown at his best as net wizard, trick shot star and match player. Freak camera treatment is resorted to at intervals for the purpose of covering technical points quickly and painlessly, and again a feminine stooge is employed to break up the even tenor of the expository material. It is pretty hard to conjure up a mental picture of the audience that wouldn't like the subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Penny Wisdom

(MGM)

Outstanding

Is there no limit to that Pete Smith's versatility? Why, the man even understands cooking. That is to say he understands it well enough to enlist the expert aid of Prudence Penny when he sets out to make a picture about it, and he understands picture making well enough to enlist the interest and sympathies of a stuffy projection room full of male critics on the first morning of Manhattan's spring. The subject is incredibly smooth and immensely amusing, yet full of culinary wisdom for the ladies of the skillet as a plum pudding is of rum. Done in color at color's best, the picture demands marquee mention.—Running time, 10 minutes (and seems 5).

Three Smart Boys

(MGM-Roach)

Satisfactory

In somewhat less than the customary length and with a minimum of uproar the Our Gang youngsters show what might happen to boys who feign illness to escape school. The appeal is wholly juvenile and the action is slowed down to allow for laughter in proper places and amounts. Probably it will reach gale proportions at matinee performances. Older observers are likely to find the film less amusing. —Running time, 11 minutes.

CUTTING ROOM

Lady Luck

(Warner)

Melodrama and Romance

This is a horse race story with what looks to be a new plot. The finale is the reverse of what might be expected. Usually a race track picture tends to work some one's reformation. No one is reformed in this. In fact, after a rather novel love story has been mingled with the excitement of horse racing, things are just as they were.

A race gambler and his girl partner enjoy much success betting at various tracks. The gambler, stopping off in his home town, falls in love with another girl, and because of love for her forswears gambling. He takes a nominal paying job, but gets a lot of fun out of making and winning mental bets. The blood of gambling is in his veins, however. When the Santa Anita season opens, he violates his pledge to his wife, plunges into his old gambling life and again cleans up. Easy come, easy go. When he returns to join his mate, he not only finds that she doesn't want him any more, but that his humble job is gone. An amicable divorce is arranged. The gambler returns to the horses and the colorful characters of the race track.

Louis King is directing the original screen play which Roy Chanslor wrote. Barton MacLane is in the role of the gambler who couldn't reform. His pal of the tracks is Ann Sheridan, and the girl he married is Peggy Bates. Other principals are Dick Purcell, Walter Cassel, Lottie Williams, Eugene Jackson and Charley Foy.

Release date: June 10.

Colorful Bombay

(MGM)

Absorbing

The sage old admonition to "always leave them wanting more" is heeded somewhat overzealously in this case. The color camera enters the "gateway to India," strolls all too briefly about the new and older sections of the city and leaves as it came, the FitzPatrick Traveltalker keeping up an informative and unobtrusive comment the while. A good deal more time could have been spent no less entertainingly.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Bars and Stripes

(MGM)

Mediocre

A far-fetched and cumbrous story coating is contrived for conveyance of vocal and orchestral numbers that might have been more impressive, and might not, if presented formally. Vyola Von, Dick Winslow and Maynard Holmes are principally concerned. The subject adds no lustre to the trade mark.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Muchmore Quits MGM

Celebrating Anniversary

Helen Fager of the Boston Traveler is celebrating her 10th anniversary as motion picture editor of the newspaper this week.

National Drive on 'Prince and Pauper'

As "The Prince and the Pauper" had its premiere in New York Wednesday evening at the Strand theatre on Broadway, Warner Brothers announced a national advertising and exploitation campaign aimed at millions of potential theatre-goers. The drive will include coverage in newspapers, magazines, on the radio and with billboards as well as tying in the coronation of England's King George VI with the picture's sequence depicting the actual coronation of an English King.

The billboard campaign is to spread through 1,400 selected cities, giving the feature a one-week advance and a three-week current billing with exhibitors being given permission to "snipe" the signs with day-and-date announcements of local showings. The fan magazines are expected to reach approximately 16,000,000 readers.

The New York Herald-Tribune book section will also promote the picture through its syndication channels and other national campaigns include a "Fruit of the Loom" boys shirt tieup featuring shirts worn by the Mauch Twins, starred in the film. Over 2,000 stores including the chains of Sears Roebuck, Kresge and the Belk Stores will display the merchandise and ads; the Whitman Publishing Company will put a 10 cent edition of the Mark Twain novel, on which the picture is based, on the market and the Knox Gelatine Co. will have the Mauch boys in their advertising. Time magazine, last week, also featured a picture of the two boys on its cover.

All the foreign consulates were officially represented at the gala Strand opening.

France Honors Officials

Walter Hutchinson, foreign manager of Twentieth Century-Fox, and Truman Talley, vice-president in charge of Movietone News, were elected Chevaliers of the Legion of Honor of France in Paris Monday for "distinguished services" performed in the interests of France. Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Talley were in Paris for their company's foreign sales convention when the citations were made.

Flood Damage at $15,000

A total of about $15,000 in damages was suffered by five downtown theatres in Pittsburgh in last week's flood. The waters reached a crest of 35 feet. The houses hit were the Penn, Stanley, Alvin, Fulton and Barry. While the physical effects were slight, most of the costs to the managements was in the form of labor for every theatre was manned for days by extra crews stripping basements and getting ready for all emergencies.

Blank-Paramount Deal Is Extended

The inability to complete all of the legal phases of A. H. Blank's new partnership operating contract with Paramount for the Tri-State Circuit by the expiration date of the present agreement this Thursday, resulted in an extension of the present contract until July 6 on Monday. The new pact will be completed well in advance of that date, it is expected.

At the same time, details of the reorganization of Olympia Theatres, New England Paramount circuit, are being worked out in conferences in New York with John Ford of Maine and New Hampshire Theatres, Martin Mullin and Samuel Pinanski of New England Theatres and Y. Frank Freeman, Paramount theatre head.

New England's bid of $4,000,000 for Olympia's assets was given court approval in Boston recently. The fact that Olympia owns 50 per cent of Maine and New Hampshire Circuit creates a situation which makes possible several pooling and other cooperative arrangements between the two circuits.

A reduction of $1,730,000 on the assessed valuation of the Brooklyn Paramount property as made by the Tax Department has been granted by the New York supreme court. The department had assessed the property at $4,800,000. In granting the reduction, which was sought by Allied Owners Corporation, owners of the property, the court said that "the property is overimproved" and pointed out that while the theatre occupies two-thirds of the building, it yields less than one-third of the total income derived from the property.

Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe in New York last Thursday allowed Root, Clark, Buckner and Ballantine, attorneys for Paramount, an additional $25,000 on account for their services for the period from July 3, 1933, to March 31, 1937. in the reorganization proceedings.

Americans Heard On French Bill

by PIERRE AUTRE
in Paris

The Cinema Commission of the French Chamber of Deputies in Paris this week met with and heard representatives of the American motion picture industry explain that their pictures were extremely moral since they did not glorify wrongdoers and always showed the forces of law and order triumphant. The meeting was held as part of the program of the commission to gather information to be used in drawing up a new French film measure, which is expected to be drafted immediately at the conclusion of the hearings of the fact finding committee.

Among those heard by the committee was Harold L. Smith, Paris representative of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., who pointed out that American companies had invested more than $10,000,000 in France for studios employing hundreds of Frenchmen and that the French industry benefited to the extent of $10,000 for every American film released

Adolph Zukor Officer Of Legion of Honor

Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board of directors of Paramount Pictures, was made an officer of the Legion of Honor of France in recognition of his contributions to the advancement of motion pictures as a world art medium. Mr. Zukor was decorated by J. J. Viala, French Consul at Los Angeles, on the set in the company's studios where Ernst Lubitsch was directing "Angel."

Mr. Zukor was also made a member of the Order of the Crown of Italy and presented with a cross of membership by the Italian consul general Gaelano Vecchietti in New York on March 29th at the testimonial dinner given him by the Independent Theatre Owners Association.

Roxy Hearing Gets SEC Report

Participation of Roxy stockholders in the reorganization appeared less probable on Monday with the submission of a report by the Securities and Exchange Commission on the plan now before Special Master Addison Pratt. The SEC report was prepared by R. A. Winter, assistant chief accountant and investigator for the New York office.

The report notes, however, that it has been "unofficially said that the new Roxy company is willing to assume certain obligations in order to partly compensate Class A stockholders," from whom the debtor company received $3,750,000.

Twentieth Century-Fox has offered to pay Class A stockholders of the Roxy Theatre Corporation in New York $1 per share, it was shown at the final hearing Tuesday on the proposed plan of reorganization of the company before Special Master Addison S. Pratt in the federal court.

The plan, with the recent amendments offered by 20th Century-Fox is described in the report as "more favorable now than in its original form." Mr. Winter said that the total cost of the property to the new company will be $4,834,688, including new cash, bonds and stock. He estimated the present value of the property at $3,639,846. Estimating depreciation at three per cent, instead of the two per cent used on the Roxy's books.

Commenting on future prospects for the Roxy, the report points out that Howard S. Cullman, trustee, has estimated 1937 earnings at $300,000 while interest charges and depreciation for the year will amount to $536,364. Mr. Winter's estimate, on the basis of an average of $5,600 per week for the last 32 weeks, is only $274,495 for 1937. All estimates are contingent upon ability to obtain a supply of good pictures.

"Star Is Born" Holdovers

"A Star Is Born" will be held for a second week in 16 of the 22 towns where the picture is now playing, it was said by the United Artists home office Monday. Of the six remaining cities, four have never held a picture for a second week. Among the cities keeping the film for extra time are Wilkes-Barre, Scranton and Philadelphia, Pa.; San Diego and Los Angeles, Cal.; Utica, N. Y.; Columbus, Ohio; Nashville, Tenn.; New Haven, Conn.; Springfield and Worcester, Mass.

Schein to Submit New RKO Plan

George Schein, representing 125,000 shares of RKO common stock, told Special Master George W. Alger in New York this week that he will present a new plan of reorganization for the company before the close of the hearings. Special Master Alger is holding hearings anent the plan of reorganization for RKO as proposed by the Atlas Corporation and agreed to by the general creditors' committee.

Wilfred Merrill and N. Peter Rathvon of the Atlas Corporation were the only witnesses called at the Monday session. Mr. Merrill said that Keith-Albee-Orpheum would be able to pay accumulated dividends on its preferred stock in 1938 and that some of the larger stockholders did not desire a dividend because income taxes would run too high.

Doyle to Expand London Theatres

by CLIFF HOLT
in Melbourne

Stuart F. Doyle, managing director of the Australian circuit, Greater Union Theatres, Ltd., announced this week that with the formation of London Theatre Centre, Ltd., he proposes to expand his theatre interests in England. The first hint of his intention was made some months ago in New York, and his announcement breaks a silence which he has maintained since his visit there late last year.

It is reported that £500,000 is involved in the enterprise. Two theatres are to be erected on a corner block in Regent Street, Piccadilly.

Connected with the London end of the plan are Harry Lane, of the London builders, Lane, Fox and Company; G. Wigham Richardson of Swan, Hunter and Richardson, the ship-builders; Sir Alan Cobham; Sir Dudley De Chair, former Governor of New South Wales, and R. W. G. Mackay. Financial and business personalities connected with the scheme in Australia are F. J. Smith, the Honorable T. G. Murray and Sir Sidney Snow.

All Paramount Exchanges Top Sales Drive Quota

For the first time in the history of any Paramount Pictures sales drive, each exchange topped its 100 per cent quota in finishing up on the "Adolph Zukor Silver Jubilee" sales drive, Neil F. Agnew, vice-president in charge of distribution, announced Wednesday in Los Angeles prior to leaving for a vacation in Hawaii.

In the district managers' division, William Erbb, heading district number one, consisting of Boston, New Haven and Maine, had the highest record. Milton Kusell, in charge of district number two, composed of New York, Brooklyn, Jersey, Albany and Buffalo, was second. Heading the branch managers' division was Myron Sattler, of New York. The leader in the salesmen's division was Irwin Lesser, also of New York.

40 PER CENT OF ALL SEATS IN 93 LARGEST CITIES; ONE FOR 9 PERSONS

Forty per cent of motion picture exhibition in the United States is concentrated in 93 large cities.

Cities having a population of 100,000 or more have approximately one theatre seat for every nine persons, an average unchanged in the last two years in spite of slight variations in population and an increase in theatre building. Neither of these factors has been sufficient to vary the ratio computed for the 93 cities in the classification which have a total of 36,755,032 inhabitants and 4,032 theatres with a seating capacity of 4,118,353.

A survey to determine the ratio of population to theatre capacities and consequently patronage possibilities in the large cities where competition is keenest reveals a wide range of difference with local conditions the sole determining factor.

Ratios Vary from 5.5 to 17.6

The ratios vary from 5.5 in Miami to 17.6 in Birmingham. This city, however, is the only one in which the figure exceeds the general average of 14.4 computed for the country exclusive of the large cities. New York, Buffalo and Tacoma are the only cities in which the average for the 93 municipalities, 8.9, is maintained.

The 8.9 ratio has been continued since 1935, although nearly every city in the list shows a slight change from a similar table computed in that year. The population of the cities included in the investigation, according to United States Census estimates, has increased from 36,435,000 to 36,755,032. The number of theatres in these cities, according to the Film Boards of Trade figures, has increased from 3,873 to 4,032 and the total seating capacity from 4,083,000 to 4,118,353.

Seating Average Drops

The average seating capacity of the theatres in the large cities decreased slightly in the two years from 1,054 to 1,021 while the average seating capacity of the 16,258 theatres in the country remained unchanged at 610. However, 40 per cent of the total seating capacity of the country's theatres and 25 per cent of the total number of theatres are in the 93 cities.

The extent of the concentration of motion picture exhibition in cities of 100,000 or more inhabitants is shown by the fact that in the smaller places there are only 6,322,279 seats in theatres operating to serve the rest of America's 90,765,968 persons. These theatres are scattered over thousands of cities, towns and villages. The last federal census reported more than 2,000 places with populations of more than 2,500 and less than 100,000.

Each theatre in the large cities thus has

Ratio of Theatre Seats to Population In 93 Cities of More Than 100,000

Ninety-three of the largest cities of the country, having populations of more than 100,000 are included in the following analysis of the ratio of population to theatre seats in April, 1937, as compared with April, 1935. The population figures are based on the latest official United States census computations and the theatre statistics are from the Film Boards of Trade.

a potential drawing power of 9,116 persons while the average possible market for theatres in other sections is 7,424 persons.

The tabulation in the adjoining columns, listing the 93 cities together with their populations, number of theatres, seating capacities and ratios of population to capacities as computed for April, 1935 and April, 1937, is interesting in connection with the question of overseating. That local conditions are in wide variance in their bearing on the situation is shown by the fact that the ratio does not vary in accordance with size or geographical location.

In many cities the actual drawing population from suburban districts outside of the city limits increases considerably the actual population upon which the survey is based. On the other hand the populations of some other cities do not represent a true tabulation of the possibilities of the market because of local economic or sociological conditions. Many southern cities, for example, present their own unique problem because of the large negro population.

It will be noted that nearby cities or cities within the same territory, in general, have similar ratios.

20th Century-Fox Promotions In Home Office and Exchanges

Thirteen promotions among the personnel of the home office and the New York and Pittsburgh exchanges of 20th Century-Fox have been announced by John D. Clark, general manager of distribution. Jack Bloom, assistant manager of the contract department at the home office, has been named manager to succeed the late Nat. B. Finkler. In adsales, Director Lee D. Balsly has promoted Edgar Hollander from manager of ad sales at the New York exchange to supervisor of the eastern district. Mr. Hollander was succeeded at the exchange by Elliott McManus, formerly contact man at the home office.

Heading a list of five promotions announced by Manager Ira H. Cohn of the Pittsburgh exchange, C. C. Kellenberg was named branch sales manager on May 1, succeeding A. W. McCormick. The latter had resigned to take over operation of the Beaver theatre at Beaver, Pa. Other promotions in Pittsburgh are E. S. Thorpe, in charge of zone 2 as film salesman; George Ball, booker; Benjamin Hanna, in charge of the shipping department; Irving Stein, in charge of night shipping. Promoted to new posts in the home office's contract department are Samuel J. Epstein to assistant contract manager; Ralph DeBurgos, section supervisor; Nat Rosen, Murray Scher and Angela Mandella, data clerks.

Harold Franklin, former RKO theatre head and more recently with Columbia at the Hollywood studios, arrived in New York from California last Thursday and is reported planning to reenter the exhibition field. Mr. Franklin declined to comment on whether he was looking for theatres but he did have several conferences with John Eberson, theatre architect.

PRODUCERS, EXHIBITORS AND RADIO OFFICIALS TACKLE STAR BROADCASTS

20th Century-Fox Follows Paramount in Naming Studio Executive to Supervise Appearances and Check Scripts

"Paramount on Parade" Program Dropped as MGM Considers Starting One; Air Exploitation Continues

Conferences of producers, exhibitors and radio broadcasting representatives to discuss regulation of the use of film stars and material on the radio programs are being arranged as a result of the first meeting of a committee appointed by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to study the problem.

Twentieth Century-Fox this week followed the lead of Paramount in appointing a studio executive to supervise radio appearances of its contract stars and to check all scripts.

The "Paramount on Parade" program, which did not conflict with theatre hours, was discontinued last week. The announcement was followed by a report that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer was considering a similar program.

While the MPTOA committee was considering ways and means of attacking the problem, producers and exhibitors alike continued wide employment of radio exploitation.

The meeting proposed by the MPTOA committee was dependent on a conference later this week between Walter Vincent, chairman of the exhibitor group, and Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, at which the procedure to be followed was to be decided.

The committee, which includes Lewen Pizor of Philadelphia, Arthur Lockwood of Middletown, Conn., and Samuel Pinanski of Boston, in addition to Mr. Vincent, agreed that unregulated use of film talent and material on radio pragrams was potentially injurious to theatre business and to the stars themselves.

A statement issued after the meeting said: "The discussion brought forth a unanimity of opinion that the function of the radio and that of the motion picture are so greatly at variance that a meeting of producers, exhibitors and broadcasting executives might be fruitful of an understanding and an agreement that would be beneficial to all concerned."

A possibility discussed by the MPTOA group was that of sending a questionnaire to leading exhibitors to determine whether film radio programs are injurious to theatre business, beneficial or without effect.

Studio to Check Radio Use

All arrangements for radio appearances of Twentieth Century-Fox contract stars will be made through the studio casting department and scripts of proposed radio entertainment will be submitted for approval, it was announced this week.

Lou Schreiber, casting director, was appointed executive in charge of the department. The move was said by studio officials to be not so much censorship as a desire to derive the fullest benefit from radio exploitation without delaying production. Mr. Schreiber's duties are identical with those of Ruby Cowen, employed by Paramount for essentially the same purpose.

GAIN IN RADIO SETS PUT AT 2,000,000

A survey compiled by Dr. Daniel Starch, market researcher for the Columbia Broadcasting System estimates that there will be 2,000,000 more radio families in the United States in the summer of 1937 than there were last year.

The total number of sets will be 34,000,000, according to the survey, in 25,000,000 homes; 4,000,000 extra sets in homes, and 5,000,000 sets in automobiles.

Paramount Program Ended

The weekly series broadcast from the Paramount Hollywood studios over the NBC red network concluded last week with an all musical program. A company announcement reporting the conclusion of the program said: "Because of the change from Eastern Standard Time to Daylight Saving Time and the diminishing of radio audiences due to the arrival of warm weather, the weekly broadcast will be discontinued after Sunday's program until next fall."

The program, received in the east at 12 noon, was initiated in the studio at 9 o'clock. The change to Daylight Time moved the studio hour for the broadcast to 8 o'clock.

Theatre, Producers Use Air

Use of radio exploitation by both producers and exhibitors has continued without abatement. The premiere of David O. Selznick's "A Star Is Born," at Grauman's Chinese, Hollywood, on April 20th, was broadcast over the Mutual network, and the story was played in abbreviated form the following week on the Lux Theatre of the Air program.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has signed a contract with WFIL, Philadelphia, to "plug" roadshow attractions at the New Locust. For the premiere of "Captains Courageous" the company used two 100-word spot announcements daily for a week.

Exploitation of "Shall We Dance," RKO Radio's new starring vehicle for Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, included 187 broadcasts of songs from the picture from the general air release of the score on March 17th to May 5th.

"Wake Up and Live," Twentieth Century-Fox musical, received two major network "plugs" the week of its release. Most of the cast took part in the Ben Bernie-American Can program over NBC, and "Hollywood Hotel" over CBS featured a group from the picture, including Ben Bernie and Walter Winchell.

The Warner Brothers circuit in cooperation with WCAU in Philadelphia, has launched a program entitled "Let's Go to the Movies." A commentator reviews pictures on Wednesday and Friday evenings, and parts of the sound track are broadcast.

The 12 Denver Fox theatres give three half-hour broadcasts each week over KLZ. The programs are on Sunday, Monday and Wednesday and usually include talent from the Denver theatre orchestra and the Tabor theatre stage show. An announcer tells what is playing currently at the Fox theatres.

The East Iowa Sing Fest, a new sustaining program over Iowa stations every Saturday night from 11:30 to 12:30, originates in the Paramount theatre in Cedar Rapids.

DuPont to Make Lenses of Plastic

Experiments are being started at the DuPont laboratories on a plastic material to use in the manufacture of lenses, all of which have previously been made of glass or quartz. The material would be similar to that already available in England, according to Peter Koch de Gooreynd, Anglo-Belgian industrialist and co-inventor of the plastic lens process employed in that country, who announced the American experiments at a demonstration of the invention at the British Empire Building in New York. An American company will be formed to exploit it in this country and Canada, he said, adding that the material would probably be available within six months.

Formed according to specifications by a moulding machine, the lenses require no grinding or polishing, and they are "practically" unbreakable. The material used in England is of resinous base, and lenses made from it were declared by Mr. Koch de Gooreynd to be 30 per cent more transparent than glass lenses and to weigh 50 per cent less.

Associated with him in the development of the process were Arthur W. Kingston and Dr. W. Ewart Williams.

Perry Going to London

A. W. Perry, general manager of Empire Films, Ltd., in Toronto, is expected to leave soon for London to look into the producing situation there to inspect new product for the coming season. Empire Films holds the Canadian distributing contract for Gaumont British, as well as Republic and Educational product from the United States.

Pulitzer Winners To Be Made Films

The Pulitzer Prizes in letters and journalism for the current year were announced in New York Monday night by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, at the annual dinner of the alumni of the university's School of Journalism and two of the awards winners, it was discovered, a novel and a play, soon will be produced as motion pictures. "Gone With the Wind," Margaret Mitchell's novel of the South, is now the property of David O. Selznick, and the most distinguished play, "You Can't Take It With You," already has been purchased by Columbia. Miss Mitchell and George Kaufman and his collaborator, Moss Hart, will receive $1,000 prizes.

For the most distinguished book on the history of the United States, the committee selected the "Flowering of New England," by Van Wyck Brooks. Allan Nevin's "Hamilton Fish, the Inner History of the Grant Administration," was adjudged the most distinguished biography "teaching patriotic and unselfish services to the people." Robert Frost received the poetry award for the third time in his career with "A Further Range," published by Henry Holt.

"You Can't Take It With You," Mr. Kaufman and Mr. Hart's current comedy hit on Broadway, was purchased by Columbia last January for $200,000, said to be the largest sum ever paid for the picture rights to a stage or fiction property. The price paid by Mr. Selznick for the Mitchell novel, which he bought from its galley proofs, has never been made public but reports have it that the producer has refused as much as $250,000 for the property.

Bell Companies Win Duovac Suits

Judge Nields in the federal court for the District of Delaware has handed down his decree in the anti-trust suits brought by General Talking Pictures Corporation and Duovac Radio Corporation against American Telegraph and Telephone Company, Western Electric Company, and Electrical Research Products, Inc.

As foreshadowed in his earlier opinion, Judge Nields, after reviewing the briefs on both sides, has now formally dismissed the charges as to the AT&T and Western Electric and denied the injunction sought against ERPI. The court retains jurisdiction in case ERPI hereafter should endeavor to enforce the socalled "equality" and "repair and replacement" clauses in some of its early contracts.

These provisions Judge Nields in his decision found had been necessary and legal during the research and promotion period of talking pictures as a means of insuring the integrity and proper servicing of the Western Electric equipment which ERPI leased to producers and exhibitors. Subsequently, as the court found, ERPI did not enforce these restrictions to suppress competition and later voluntarily eliminated them from its contracts.

This litigation started in 1932.

New England Circuit Holdings Show Gains

New England independent theatre holdings have decreased approximately 17 per cent in the past two years, and circuit holdings have increased about eight per cent, according to a supplement just added to the 1937 Theatre Guide issued by the Boston Film Board of Trade.

The fact that a number of town and fraternal halls which formerly housed silent films have been deleted from the new guide partly accounts for the loss on the independent side of the ledger, but it cannot account for the fact that circuits have grown to such a marked degree. New England, not including Connecticut, is shown to have 350 circuit theatres and 658 independent houses in the guide.

Dirigible Will Fly Coronation Films

The operators of the dirigible Hindenburg this week reversed the definite decision made recently and will now delay the sailing of the big ship, on its second flight of the season to the United States from Europe, for two days to permit it to pick up newsreel prints and news photographs of the coronation of King George VI in London. The ship will leave Frankfort-on-Main, Germany, on May 13 instead of May 11, as originally scheduled, and is due to arrive at Lakehurst, N. J., late in the afternoon of May 15.

BRITAIN CERTAIN TO RETAIN QUOTA BUT AWAITS INDUSTRY'S OWN IDEAS

Runciman Urges Trade Get Busy; Strabolgi Calls U. S. Outlet Chief Problem; Moyne Puts Home Market First

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

The situation in regard to legislation amending the Cinematograph Films Act of 1927 is practically unaltered by the declaration of Walter Runciman, president of the Board of Trade, in the House of Commons, though that announcement was important in one respect; it indicated a definite intention on the part of the Government to legislate in some form before the present Act expires.

Mr. Runciman's statement, already reported briefly by cable, was, in full:

"The principal recommendation of Lord Moyne's Committee is that the Quota should continue for another ten years. The Government accepts this recommendation and proposes to introduce the necessary legislation before the end of the year, but further discussions with trade interests concerned with other recommendations of the committee will be necessary before legislation is drafted."

Inasmuch as the continuance of the Quota, in one form or another, was regarded as inevitable by all sections of the trade, the significance of this statement lies in its hint to the industry to get busy with its agreed plan, or put up with legislation in any form which the Government may select. On the other hand it may mean, in practice, no more than that the Cabinet, failing trade agreement, will re-enact the Quota in its present form. It is probably best to regard it as a "ginger" hint to the three trade associations, now in conference.

Propagandistic Debate

On the same day there was staged in the House of Lords a debate in general terms on the film problem which had considerable significance as an indication of the prevailing atmosphere in political circles. The debate was frankly propagandistic in object, the motion before the House being the purely academic one that "a flourishing British cinema industry is of increasing importance, and all practicable steps should be taken to assist its foundation on a firm basis."

The interesting feature of this occasion was the fact that Lord Templemore, for the Government, accepted the motion and that in doing so he officially affirmed that the Government "are determined to maintain conditions in which the industry can not only hold its present position, but expand considerably." Also seen as significant was this remark of Lord Templemore: "Many of the products of British studios are able to bear comparison with films produced anywhere in the world. Outside the U. S. A. the market for British films has greatly improved but progress in the U. S. A. has been very slow."

The importance of the American market to the future of British production was underlined in the debate, which was inaugurated by Lord Strabolgi (previously Lieut.-Commander Kenworthy, M. P.) by the statement that the 1927 Act, while a stimulus, had not been a complete success, and that a crisis existed as shown in the fact that British studios, capable of producing 58 films concurrently, were actually occupied by 13 only.

BOARD OF TRADE, KRS AGREE ON QUOTA LAW

It was reported in London this week that the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries, the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, and the Kinematograph Renters Society would submit a report to the Government registering agreement on all major points of the Cinematograph Act leaving minor differences to decisions of the Board of Trade.

A minimum cost principle will be approved by the FBI and the KRS while the CEA at present wants a quality clause as against the FBI's plan for a quality plus cost basis and the plan of the KRS for a cost basis with the quota reduced in inverse proportion to cost.

Producers and distributors are agreed on a minimum cost of £15,000 but differ on their recommendations for Quota percentages, the FBI standing for the Moyne suggestion of 20 per cent for distributors and 15 per cent for exhibitors. The CEA and KRS suggest 15 and 10 per cent, the KRS separately asking for ten and five with provision for the average cost to be £20,000 or £25,000.

Accusing financiers of being "a flock of sheep" who first rushed into the industry and then withdrew, leaving good producers short of money, Lord Strabolgi soon got to the point that the real cause of the production crisis was the lack of an American outlet.

Charges Foreign Domination

"Great pictures have been made here," he said, "but it has been found practically impossible to get the vast majority of them exhibited in other countries, and particularly in the United States.

"Yet the American industry as a whole would not make a profit unless they could sell their great films, and many of their other films, over here.

"Quota 'quickies' made in this country, usually by Americans, are held up to derision in America and do our industry a great deal of harm.

"Our industry is under foreign domination and control."

Turning aside to attack the theory of Government control of the industry—unless he could see the possibility of a Government permanently of his own Labor complexion—Lord Strabolgi returned to his text in his final passage, in which he asked:

"Why should we not enter into a trade agreement with America under which, in return for a share of this great English-speaking market, we shall be allowed a quota of, say, 20 per cent of British films in the American market?"

Another Propagandistic Group Forms; Several Reciprocity Plans Advanced; New Tax May Affect Americans

As the debate proceeded, the note of the "American danger" continued to be sounded. Lord Ponsonby found cause for alarm in the fact that British youth has learned to say "Yep," and that it absorbed "blatant, nauseous, vulgar pathos"—apparently, in his analysis, only from American films. The comment from Viscount Bledisloe was to recall conversations with Chaplin and Fairbanks in which they had deplored the impossibility of making better films than the public wanted, and the Earl of Iddesleigh also discounted a good deal of the other speaking by accusing British producers of a technique inferior to that of France and the States and suggesting that the best thing the Government could do would be to subsidize technical training.

Moyne Emphasizes Home Market

In many ways the most significant contribution to the debate was that of Lord Moyne. With the whole trend of the public agitation now veering toward a scheme of forced reciprocal trading with the U. S. A., it was interesting to hear the chairman of the recent Films Act Committee saying, as a result of his prolonged investigation into the trade situation:

"The foreign market is necessary for big spectacular productions but, in my opinion, the home market will prove the more important factor in the development of the British industry.

"Our Quota at present provides only for one-fifth of the home market for British films. If the quality of British films should justify a gradual raising of the proportion to a more equal share, there should surely be sufficient scope for profitable production here, just as much as in France, Germany, Italy and other Continental countries where home-made films have won a commanding position."

New Propaganda Council

A day before the House of Lords debate, there was launched, under the title of the British Films Advancement Council, another propaganda organization, backed by a number of Members of Parliament and other politicians and public men, for the official purpose of "taking such action as may be expedient to bring before the public, public authorities, social and educational institutions and the Government, the national, economic and educational importance of British films, and to secure public support for such legislation, or other measures, as may be necessary to assure to British films fair treatment in all countries which market film products in the United Kingdom."

The sting of this declaration is, obviously, in the tail. The new organization seems, in fact, to have been established with the definite purpose of agitating the policy of reciprocity now favored by British producers. At the inaugural meeting there were such remarks as that from Sir William Wayland, MP: "If the U. S. A. spent, say, one-third of the millions she receives from her films in this country in buying back British films for exhibition in America, the great American public would know far more about this country than it does at present." Lord Strabolgi, Sir Edward Campbell, MP, Professor Graham Kerr, MP, and Thomas Levy, MP, are active in this new body. Mr. Levy is prominently associated with the

"Dixey Scheme" of cooperative distribution by exhibitors.

While the outlines of a powerful campaign of propaganda and publicity inside and outside Parliament for the theory of reciprocity are thus gradually shaping, details have leaked out of what reciprocity, as understood by the British producer, means in definite trade terms. They are contained in one of a number of documents in which the views of members of the Film Group have been expressed and, while they do not necessarily reflect the final policy of that body, they do definitely indicate the principle which producers are advocating in the conferences of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, Kinematograph Renters Society and the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries. The conferences have been suspended temporarily while the points at issue are being placed before the councils of the organization.

The first and most striking full measure feature of this reciprocity plan is that it is suggested it should be optional. Distributors are offered the choice of complying with Quota obligations or of contracting out of them by acquiring foreign rights in British films.

This principle is indicated in a draft clause which proposes:

"A renter of foreign pictures contributing not less than £8,000 ($40,000) towards the cost of a British picture, in return for the foreign distribution rights of such picture for any one State, shall be deemed to have fulfilled his quota obligation in respect of the same footage of film as he would have been permitted to introduce from such State against the acquisition of a corresponding British film."

In terms of practice this means that, assuming the picture bought for export to be 6,000 feet in length, the company purchasing it would be free to import, for distribution in England, 24,000 feet of its own product, or four features, free of any obligation to provide quota coverage for that footage in England. In the shortest possible terms, a quota film has been bought for export instead of for British distribution. There is the important difference that a minimum price of £8,000 is suggested. It is possible to buy two "quickies" for this amount.

Another clause provides that the option of reciprocity on this basis shall apply only to British films costing a minimum of £12,000, and there is an indication that some producers want the figures fixed at £40,000, with a stipulation that the export contribution shall amount to at least 25 per cent of the amount.

Sees Product Assured

It is made plain by other suggested provisions that a British film sold for export under the plan shall not be available for the distributor's internal Quota. This leaves the exhibitor free of any fear of shortage, it is suggested, inasmuch as the foreign pictures covered by the Export Quota will not need to be covered by British internal Quota, while the exported British film will be available for the exhibitor's Quota.

In many respects this plan, which bears a close resemblance to the theories advanced by Simon Rowson before the Moyne Committee, has an affinity to the policy favored by American distributors that the Quota, instead of being computed on footage, should be based on footage modified by cost; in the broadest terms, that a picture costing twice the statutory minimum, if one is fixed by Parliament, should obtain double Quota value. In practice, this indicates a willingness on the part of American companies to make higher priced pictures in England, for world distribution, in return for more reasonable Quota provisions.

"We appreciate the many letters we have received from fellow exhibitors, throughout the United States, and Canada, who have mentioned seeing our articles in the Motion Picture Herald.

"We recently received a very appreciative letter from Buck Jones, who pledges us every support in breaking box office records in small towns. He thanks us for our praise in 'What the Picture Did for Me.'

"Am trying for the Quigley Award, to see what we can do about it in this neck of the woods."

Tilbury, Ontario.

Differences in Plans

The main difference lies in another clause of the drafted Film Group scheme, which provides that the reciprocity alternative to Quota shall only apply to films made by "British controlled companies."

Another important difference is that the proposal does not free the distributor from the footage obligation of 20 (which may become 50) per cent, but merely allows him to satisfy it in a new, and more costly, way.

It is obvious that the obligation to buy export footage, without any effective control over its quality, may be more onerous on the distributor than an internal Quota, and unless there are provisions at a later stage to meet the American companies' desire that an increased cost in their Quota pictures shall be compensated by a reduced footage, it is probable that the alternative Quota will continue to be regarded by the KRS as a system of forced exports, and to be opposed. At the same time, its optional character very well may appeal to certain American companies which already are committed to the policy of making films in England for the U. S. market. Chief of such companies are United Artists, Twentieth Century-Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, but, so far as is generally understood, only United Artists can be said to be handling the product of "British-controlled companies."

First Trade Reactions

The first trade reactions to the reciprocity alternative are that it does provide a possible basis for discussion between British and American interests, but that two very high fences have to be jumped. One is the British industry's desire to keep studio floor space active by an increased internal Quota; this is in line with the Government's desire for an increase in the British screen time occupied by British films. The other is the objection of American interests to accepting increased obligations under an Act which they already find extremely onerous, and their disinclination, over and above their opposition in principle to an Export Quota, to accept responsibility for selling in U. S. pictures of which they have not controlled the quality.

Financial Backing Reported Aim

Alexander Korda, head of London Films and a partner in United Artists, and who is sailing for the United States this week, is reported making the trip to New York primarily to seek new financial backing.

It is understood that immediately on his arrival in New York he will proceed to Hollywood for business conferences with Dr. A. H. Gianinni, president and chairman of the board of United Artists.

A deal on distribution between the London Films executive and Herbert Wilcox is reported here. Mr. Wilcox has started production of "Victoria the Great" at the Korda studios at Denham. The picture is being produced by Imperator Film Productions, Ltd., for world distribution by RKO.

Mr. Korda's position has been critical since the retrenchment ordered by the Prudential Assurance Company, which is financially interested in London Films.

The future policy of London Films, following the retrenchment ordered by Prudential Assurance Company, financially interested in the producing concern, was discussed at a weekend dinner conference at Denham, it has been learned. Besides Mr. Korda and his associates, Winston Churchill also was present. The reason for Mr. Churchill's presence could not be learned but there was some indication that there might be a political implication, in view of Mr. Korda's recent statements to the press on the lack of sufficient financing in England for production and his support of the Moyne recommendation for a government film commission.

New Tax and American Companies

The special tax on increased profits announced in Neville Chamberlain's Budget, as a national defense contribution, may affect certain American film companies whose British subsidiaries have increased their turnover considerably in the last three years.

Although the tax is likely to be modified, in response to protests, its principle will probably remain the same. This is that, on any increase of profits over the standard profit computed from the returns of the years 1933, '34, '35, a special tax will be levied at the following rates:

Increase of Profit	Tax
6 per cent	Nil
6 - 10	20 per cent
10 - 15	25 per cent
Over 15	33 1/3 per cent

Alternatively the tax may be levied on the amount by which profits exceed 6 per cent on the total issued capital of the company.

Many British subsidiaries of U. S. film companies probably are making much bigger profits today than in the three standard years. Although accusations frequently are made in England that these companies evade income tax by high costing of films, the inland revenue department has accepted their accounts and, presumably, is in a position to establish a basis for the national defense impost. Most of the companies have only nominal capitals, and, presumably, will be charged on actual profits.

British Carbons Dearer

The agreement between the CEA and Ship Carbons, Ltd., has been modified, the discount allowed from list prices being reduced from 15 per cent to 5 per cent. The agreement dates back two years. It was made after the Government, as a war precaution, had placed prohibitive duties on foreign carbons, as a protection against price exploitation.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended May 1, 1937, from 111 theatres in 18 major cities of the country was $1,220,691, an increase of $36,812 over the total for the preceding week ended April 24, 1937, when 105 theatres in 17 large cities aggregated $1,183,879.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

Ambassador-Conn-Melody

HEADLINE CRASHER: Frankie Darro, Kane Richmond—This is a lively action drama that got by on a midweek date.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SING WHILE YOU'RE ABLE: Pinky Tomlin—One of the best of the independents' musicals. Show this. One of the questions asked: "Will you have more Pinky Tomlins" Showing it hit the spot. Box office receipts showed it. Running time, 65 minutes. Played April 16-18.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Chesterfield

MISSING GIRLS: Roger Pryor, Sidney Blackmer—Fair Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Columbia

AVENGING WATERS: Ken Maynard, Beth Marion—This old western filled the house on Saturday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LEGION OF TERROR, THE: Bruce Cabot, Marguerite Churchill—Fair midweek business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PENNIES FROM HEAVEN: Bing Crosby, Madge Evans—One can pick flaws in the story as a whole but those who come to be amused and like Bing Crosby will find this much to their liking. Our patrons seemed to enjoy this. The first day was average, the second day above average, proof that it received word-of-mouth praise.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

First National

GREEN LIGHT: Errol Flynn, Anita Louise—An excellent picture which did extra business and pleased everyone. Many said it was the best picture we have ever shown here. It wasn't that good, perhaps, but it's the type of picture that we are proud to show, and it ranks right up among the better pictures. The wood tick-spotted fever angle brought the story right into our own backyard. Play it, by all means. Played April 18-19.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

THREE MEN ON A HORSE: Frank McHugh, Joan Blondell—A very funny picture, but did not do the business that I expected.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Grand National

HATS OFF: Mae Clarke, John Payne—Only a fair program picture. The recording not so good, too jerky, hard to understand. Running time, 67 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

DANGEROUS NUMBER: Robert Young, Ann Sothern—Fair. Had a number of people remark that it was too silly.—Barney DeVietti, Strand Theatre, Helper, Utah. General patronage.

LAST OF MRS. CHEYNEY, THE: Joan Crawford, William Powell, Robert Montgomery—Good picture, well produced. Played on Sunday and Monday to good business.—Barney DeVietti, Strand Theatre, Helper, Utah. General patronage.

LIBELED LADY: Jean Harlow, William Powell, Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy, Walter Connolly—A real treat for the box office and patrons. Play it, and advertise it; you'll never regret it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

MAMA STEPS OUT: Guy Kibbee, Alice Brady—Will get by on week nights. Lacks something.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MAYTIME: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy, John Barrymore—Tops and big box office in any spot. Running time, 130 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

OUR RELATIONS: Laurel and Hardy—Personally, I thought this the worst Laurel and Hardy I ever saw for there were at least two too many of them, but the cash customers seemed to enjoy it, judging from the laughs. Running time, 74 minutes. Played April 10-11.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BIG BROADCAST OF 1937, THE: Jack Benny, Burns and Allen, Bob Burns, Martha Raye—This seems to have a little of everything the public wants. Good Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BORDERLAND: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—Up to the standard Hop-A-Long Cassidy series. Good turnout and few complaints. Good.—Barney DeVietti, Strand Theatre, Helper, Utah. General patronage.

BORDERLAND: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—Excellent sound and photography. But turns out just an ordinary western. Not up to the Autrys or Ritters.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GENERAL DIED AT DAWN, THE: Gary Cooper, Madeleine Carroll—A little bit long and a little bit heavy, but it got by on Saturday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOPALONG CASSIDY RETURNS: William Boyd, Evelyn Brent—Good Saturday picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

JOHN MEADE'S WOMAN: Edward Arnold, Francine Larrimore—Played on Bank Night. People did not like this picture very much. Just fair.—Barney DeVietti, Strand Theatre, Helper, Utah. General patronage.

JUNGLE PRINCESS, THE: Ray Milland, Dorothy Lamour—Sweet little picture. Large attendance and pleased all.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

LET'S MAKE A MILLION: Edward Everett Horton—Entertaining little program picture, with Horton investing in an oil well that flops, due to crooked promoters. Horton forces return of the money and then the well "comes in," so everybody is happy. Played April 14-15.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

MAID OF SALEM: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Well-made, well-acted picture of early days in the New England Colonies. Drew some extra business. Played April 18-19.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

MAID OF SALEM: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Pretty good. The acting by Miss Colbert very good but the type of story just don't please our patrons. Running time, 84 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS: Charles Ruggles, Alice Brady—Played on Bank Night. Rather weak to stand alone. Fair.—Barnet DeVietti, Strand Theatre, Helper, Utah. General patronage.

MY AMERICAN WIFE: Francis Lederer, Ann Sothern—Very entertaining comedy. Good midweek business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PLAINSMAN, THE: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—One of our biggest disappointments. Personally thought it the best outdoor picture we had ever played, but for some unknown reason, it did not do business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER: Ralph Bellamy—Good Saturday picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THREE MARRIED MEN: Lynne Overman, William Frawley—I can't give this very much. Doubled it with a Gene Autry and so got by.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

VALIANT IS THE WORD FOR CARRIE: Gladys George, Arline Judge—A very good picture, but I couldn't get the public interested.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WAIKIKI WEDDING: Bing Crosby, Shirley Ross, Martha Raye, Bob Burns—A very pleasing show both for the audience and the box office.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

WIVES NEVER KNOW: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Entertaining comedy. Good midweek business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Republic

COMIN' 'ROUND THE MOUNTAIN: Gene Autry, Ann Rutherford, Smiley Burnette—This boy certainly clicked with our audience, but many of the western fans do not like hill-billy music.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

HAPPY GO LUCKY: Phil Regan, Evelyn Venable—Just so-so. Got by on a midweek date.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

OLD CORRAL, THE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—The plot is weak, the action is implausible and bordering on the ridiculous, direction is very poor, the recording is mediocre. Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette and the Sons of the Pioneers redeem the picture with a great number of good songs which could better have been made into a two-reeler. Gene Autry was one of our best box office bets, but our patrons won't take any more like this one. Played April 21-22.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

RIDE, RANGER, RIDE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Autry is getting to be a good bet on Saturday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROUND-UP TIME IN TEXAS: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—A good Gene Autry picture. The title is misleading as most of the action takes place in Africa. Smiley Burnette helps along nicely. In my opinion, Smiley is definitely a part of this series and without him this series would not be quite the same. I believe it would be good policy to have Smiley Burnette in mind and write in enough of a part for him. Naturally the music and singing have helped this series. In this the Cabin Kids help the musical part along very nicely. This proved popular and business on this was above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

RKO Radio

BRIDE WALKS OUT, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond—This was doubled with "Charlie Chan at the Opera" and we did a good Sunday-Monday average with this bill.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

DANCING PIRATE: Charles Collins, Frank Morgan, Steffi Duna—Very good picture that made us go without our meals, as we had to dig down to pay for a class "A" picture that didn't make film rental. RKO looks better this year, but last year's product sure missed at the box office.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

PARK AVENUE LOGGER: George O'Brien, Beatrice Roberts—This picture broke our Tuesday and Wednesday record. Very well liked by everyone. Very good picture, for my situation at least.—Barney DeVietti, Strand Theatre, Helper, Utah. General patronage.

PLOUGH AND THE STARS, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—My people are fed up on this type of picture. Very few liked it. Fair for small towns.—Barney DeVietti, Strand Theatre, Helper, Utah. General patronage.

SEA DEVILS: Victor McLaglen, Preston Foster—Patrons liked this one very much. Not big box office, but a swell picture in any spot. Running time, 85 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

SOLDIER AND THE LADY, THE: Anton Walbrook, Elizabeth Allan, Margot Grahame—Back to 1870 in Russia of old days. Did not please generally. Patrons did not care for foreign stuff and classed it as "too brutal," etc. Good work by leads, including Margot Grahame, but did not care for story or settings. Played April 16-17.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

THAT GIRL FROM PARIS: Lily Pons, Gene Raymond, Jack Oakie—An excellent picture with everything in it to make a good production—action, comedy, good acting, good singing, good for either large or small towns, city or country. Played April 3.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

WINTERSET: Burgess Meredith, Margo—Some excellent acting, nothing else to it. Many dark scenes that spoil the picture. Also much of the talking was so low it could not be heard. Rated a four star picture. I would rate it as a one star. Played April 17.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

AMBASSADOR BILL (RE-ISSUE): Will Rogers—Proved a very good drawing card on Good Friday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BANJO ON MY KNEE: Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea, Walter Brennan—I do not consider it much above the ordinary run of pictures but there was plenty of action and drew more than the average attendance and pleased our patrons and that is always good. Played April 10.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

BANJO ON MY KNEE: Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea—Excellent subject. Drew to an extra large crowd. Pleased all. Played April 21-23.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

BANJO ON MY KNEE: Barbara Stanwyck, Joel McCrea, Walter Brennan—Fox can take a bow for the making of this. It is different from the usual run and it is also outstanding. I for one would include this in a list of the ten best. Walter Brennan may be said to steal the show. Without Barbara Stanwyck and Joel McCrea there would be no story but it is the work of Walter Brennan that will be remembered the longest, but every single member of the cast does perfect work. One must also include in the praise of this the director, the technicians and writers.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE OPERA: Warner Oland, Boris Karloff—This is one of the best in this series. So if they like Chan, they are sure to like this. This was doubled with "The Bride Walks Out," and we did a good Sunday-Monday average with this bill.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

DIMPLES: Shirley Temple, Frank Morgan—Rather thin story, but no complaints from audience. Just fair business on Easter Sunday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HALF ANGEL: Frances Dee, Brian Donlevy, Charles Butterworth—Not a bad picture. Just got by on a midweek date.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOLY TERROR, THE: Jane Withers—Very well received. Played to above average business. Had many people remark that they liked Jane much better than Shirley Temple; many of the children made the same remark. This is a dandy picture with plenty of action.—Barney DeVietti, Strand Theatre, Helper, Utah. General patronage.

LLOYDS OF LONDON: Freddie Bartholomew, Madeleine Carroll, Tyrone Power, Sir Guy Standing—A very fine production which played to above average business.—Barney DeVietti, Strand Theatre, Helper, Utah. General patronage.

LOVE IS NEWS: Loretta Young, Tyrone Power, Don Ameche—An excellent comedy drama that will please all. Give it preferred time.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

NANCY STEELE IS MISSING: Victor McLaglen, Peter Lorre—This picture played to below average business. Those who saw it, liked it, and did not fail to say so. Good.—Barney DeVietti, Strand Theatre, Helper, Utah. General patronage.

OFF TO THE RACES: Jed Prouty, Shirley Deane, Spring Byington—The Jones Family. This is a dandy little picture and up to the standard for this series. Well liked.—Barney DeVietti, Strand Theatre, Helper, Utah. General patronage.

ONE IN A MILLION: Sonja Henie, Adolphe Menjou—A good program picture sold as a special. Running time, 95 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ON THE AVENUE: Dick Powell, Madeleine Carroll, Alice Faye, Ritz Brothers—My people like this type of picture very much and, as a result, we did capacity business.—Barney DeVietti, Strand Theatre, Helper, Utah. General patronage.

RAMONA: Loretta Young, Don Ameche—A very beautiful picture. Good midweek business. Tied up with the Campfire Girls on this one.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SEVENTH HEAVEN: Simone Simon, James Stewart—This one was tops. In any spot. Running time, 100 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

SING, BABY, SING: Alice Faye, Adolphe Menjou, Gregory Ratoff, Ted Healy—This crazy farce comedy did a good midweek business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STOWAWAY: Shirley Temple, Robert Young, Alice Faye—One of the best this little star has made. Shirley sure can act. It is too bad that her pictures don't draw any more at the box office. Alice Faye deserves a big credit mark in making this a good picture. Her acting very good. Running time, 86 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

STOWAWAY: Shirley Temple, Robert Young—An excellent picture. Shirley Temple was not the whole show, as the other performers made a good showing, and Shirley added greatly to the performance, making an extremely good show. Played April 24.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

WHITE HUNTER: Warner Baxter, June Lang—Good subject. Pleased and did good business. Played April 24-25.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

WILD BRIAN KENT: Ralph Bellamy, Mae Clarke—I am very much surprised at a major company like 20th Century-Fox releasing such a picture. The recording and photography were bad. Running time, 60 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

HISTORY IS MADE AT NIGHT: Charles Boyer, Jean Arthur, Leo Carrillo—This is a fine production and was liked by the majority of the patrons. Good business. Many remarked that Leo Carrillo stole the show. Be sure and give him billing if he is liked in your spots.—Barnet DeVietti, Strand Thetare, Helper, Utah. General patronage.

Universal

FLYING HOSTESS: Judith Barrett, William Hall—Good midweek business. Good action picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

FOR THE SERVICE: Buck Jones—A lot of dark scenes in this picture, but where Buck Jones is, it is O. K. with our patrons. He has never let us down at the box office yet. Thank you, "Buck Jones," for your letter. We think you 100 per cent here. You make them, we'll play them.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

GIRL ON THE FRONT PAGE, THE: Gloria Stuart, Edmund Lowe—Entertaining action drama.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MY MAN GODFREY: William Powell, Carole Lombard. The perfect comedy-drama. Nice Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

POSTAL INSPECTOR: Ricardo Cortez, Patricia Ellis—This picture went over big; perhaps the flood at the time of showing had something to do with it. Running time, 59 minutes.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

RIDE 'EM, COWBOY: Buck Jones—Auto racing farce comedy. Usual Saturday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SEA SPOILERS: John Wayne, Nan Grey—Very good subject, but failed to draw as it should. Several comments. Running time, 60 minutes. Played April 9-10.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Neighborhood patronge.

THREE SMART GIRLS: Deanna Durbin, Ray Milland, Binnie Barnes—This is a honey. While it is true that Deanna Durbin is entitled to all the praise that has been given her, it is also true that if she was not in the picture at all it would still be a fine picture. It is that kind of a foolproof story. This is real amusement treat if there ever was one. Business on this above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TWO IN A CROWD: Joel McCrea, Joan Bennett—Nice little comedy drama. Doubled it with a western on Saturday and did a good business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Warner Bros.

CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE: Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland—A big, spectacular picture, but did not do as much on Sunday as I expected.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GIVE ME YOUR HEART: Kay Francis, George Brent, Roland Young—This rather weepy emotional drama took a nosedive on a midweek date.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GIVE ME YOUR HEART: Kay Francis, George Brent—Very good program picture. I had many compliments from the ladies saying how much they liked Kay Francis. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity

TOM THUMB: Comicolor Cartoons—This is a top notcher. By all means play this one. A delight to both young and old. Your patrons will ask for more, after seeing this one. Running time, 7 minutes.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Columbia

SPEED MAD: New World of Sport Series—This short contains plenty of thrills. Shots of Indianapolis Auto Races with crashes galore. These World of Sport subjects are always good. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

WHOOPS, I'M AN INDIAN: 3 Stooges—Not as much laughter as usual, but still awfully good for Saturday night. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Educational

BIG COURTSHIP, THE: Two-Reel Comedies—Why do they do it? Terrible.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

BOY, OH, BOY: Bert Lahr—Good comedy. Pleased.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

BUG CARNIVAL, THE: Terry-Toons—Nice black and white cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DITTO: Two-Reel Comedies—Not up to the Keaton standard but will get by.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

FLYING SOUTH: Terry-Toons—Lovely music with this cartoon of birds and animals preparing for winter.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S.D. Small town patronage.

HAPPY HEELS: Two-Reel Comedies—Pretty good. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

JAIL BAIT: Buster Keaton—Keaton was the funniest man on the screen fifteen years ago and he's just about as good today. Running time, 2 reels.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MODERN HOME: Tim and Irene—Poor short subject.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

PLAY! GIRLS: Song and Comedy Hits—Very good short with several excellent acts. Running time, 11 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SEE UNCLE SOL: Song and Comedy Hits—A very good single and out of the ordinary.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BORED OF EDUCATION: Our Gang—A good comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HIT AND RUN DRIVER: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—A very good "Crime Does Not Pay" short. Did not seem to go over quite so well as the others of this series but it is good. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MODERN TOKYO: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—These colored travelogues are a most charming substitute for the trip itself.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

OUR GANG COMEDIES: Always amusing. We consider them a draw in themselves.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

QUAINT QUEBEC: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Great short. Beautiful color and interesting talk. Running time, 9 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

LUCKY SPILLS: Grantland Rice Sportlights—Very interesting. Running time, nine minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MUSIC OVER BROADWAY: George Hall and Orchestra—A very fine musical. Very interesting.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

PANELESS WINDOW WASHER, THE: Popeye the Sailor—Good cartoon. Average comments.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

PLAY SAFE: Color Classics—Very good. Paramount has been making very good short subjects.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

PUDGY TAKES A BOW-WOW: Betty Boop Cartoon—Just a fair cartoon. Tiresome at times.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

SONG HITS ON PARADE: Headliners—Very good. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

THAT'S THEIR BUSINESS: Paragraphics.—On a quaint one-man industry.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WHERE SNOW IS KING: Paragraphics—Good sport reel devoted to skiing and attempted skiing. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

TWILIGHT ON THE TRAIL: Screen Song—Entertaining song and comedy reel, featuring Louise Massey and The Westerners. There is a new angle to the comedy portion of the reel that brought plenty of laughs. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

BRIDAL GRIEF: Superba Comedy — Splendid comedy which got plenty of laughs. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HAPPY THOUGH MARRIED: Edgar Kennedy Comedies—Not much to this two-reeler. My patrons wearying of Kennedy and his mother-in-law. Don't believe a comedy star should also be used in features. —P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HIGH, WIDE AND DASHING: Sports with Bill Corum—Pretty good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LADIES' DAY: Sports with Bill Corum—Just another sport reel. Nothing distinctive. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

PUTTING ON THE DOG: Sports with Bill Corum —Nothing much. Supposed to be something else, and this filled in. Running time, 1 reel.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

SO AND SEW: Smart Set Series—Good Comedy. Running time, 2 reels.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

TOONERVILLE PICNIC: Rainbow Parade Cartoons —Pretty good color cartoon.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

BEACHCOMBERS: Oswald Cartoons—This is an exceptionally good one, enjoyed by everybody. Running time, 7 minutes.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TURKEY DINNER: Meany-Miny-Moe Cartoons—A fair cartoon. Didn't make a hit like some of the other Meany-Miny-Moe cartoons. Running time, 7 minutes. —Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

YOU CAN BE HAD: Universal Comedies—What I would call punk and did not seem to fare so well with our patrons.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Vitaphone

NATURE THE ARTISTS: Colortour Adventure—Colored flower reel. Too long time on one scene makes it drag. Otherwise beautiful.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Aanamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PLAY STREET: Broadway Brevities—A very fine two-reel musical without the ordinary vaudeville. Like the old Warner musicals used to be before 1937. Give it preferred time.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SHE WAS AN ACROBAT'S DAUGHTER: Merrie Melody—A good colored cartoon. Not up to average but will get by. Story of a news reel.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Serials

Mascot

FIGHTING WITH KIT CARSON: Johnny Mack Brown—We're four chapters from the finish. I wouldn't say it's outstanding but I believe it has brought us many times over the film rental we are paying.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Republic

DICK TRACY: Ralph Byrd, Kay Hughes—Very well put up serial.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Republic

ROBINSON CRUSOE OF CLIPPER ISLAND: Mala—As a serial this is about on a par with most serials. The locale is rather restricted and there does not seem enough variety from week to week. But my pet peeve with serials is still present in this and that is to change the beginnings of the chapter with the endings from the last chapter. This is so unnecessary and it holds serials up to ridicule as a whole. For example, at end of chapter seven, Mala and the Princess jump on to a tilting rock and are hurled down a rocky cliff into the water below. At the beginning of chapter eight the rock tilts but they clutch at a trailing vine and they are saved. I overheard a couple of youngsters remark "they didn't show this last week." It is easy enough to criticize but how would I do it, as they must have their suspense at the end of the chapter. Well, here is how I would do it. Mala and the Princess are pursued by the natives. In front of them is a chasm; behind them are the natives in hot pursuit. End the chapter here. The suspense is complete—if they go forward there is the danger of falling into the chasm; if they go backward they fall into the natives' clutches. At the start of chapter eight, I would have Mala and the Princess leap across the chasm, land on the tilting rock. You can have the thrill of the tilting rock, they grasp the vine and are saved and elude the pursuing natives. All the possible thrills would be extracted from these sequences without holding up the serial to ridicule. I hope serial producers can learn that there is no need of killing the hero at the end of each chapter and bringing him to life at the start of the next chapter.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ROBINSON CRUSOE OF CLIPPER ISLAND: Mala—Only two more chapters. The saints be praised! This serial started out fairly well, but has been getting worse with each chapter. Levine takes unforgivable liberties. Last week the ending clearly showed an airplane (carrying the hero, of course) crashing into the ocean; this week that scene was omitted and the airplane never got within 100 feet of the water. Levine kills his hero every week and then revives him the next by changing the story. Even the kids give it the ha-ha. You can't appreciate good and poor direction until you compare the glamorous island girl of "Mutiny on the Bounty" with the heroine in this serial, who, believe it or not, are one and the same.—Ted Stump, Elted Theatre, Absarokee, Mont. Rural patronage.

VIGILANTES ARE COMING, THE: Bob Livingston, Kay Hughes—In a territory largely controlled by circuits, we are unable to secure the amount of product we need to operate. We were fortunate in securing a contract on "Vigilantes Are Coming," and to our surprise it is doing a wonderful business. We are on the eleventh episode now; it has held up all the way through to capacity business. We term it a mid-week magnet.—John A. Gavan, Broadway Theatre, Butte, Mont. General patronage.

Stage and Screen Productions

CUSTER'S LAST STAND: Rex Lease, Lona Andre —I thought this was very poor, but it managed to hold up for fifteen episodes.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Universal

ACE DRUMMOND: John King, Jean Rogers—This starts off like a good serial.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Allied Invites All Independents To Convention

Allied States Association of Motion Pictures Exhibitors this week invited all independent exhibitors to attend its 1937 convention, May 26th to 28th, at the Pfister hotel, Milwaukee.

"An opportunity will be given to everyone to give expression to suggestions which will cure some of the evils which have so long existed within the industry," asserted P. J. Wood, convention chairman. "This invitation is extended in good faith to all independent exhibitors, including Ed Kuykendall" (president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America) "and the independent exhibitor members of his organization," said Mr. Wood from his own exhibitor organization headquarters in Columbus, Ohio.

"As general chairman," he continued, "it is my intention to purge the session of all hooey and to stay away from meaningless resolutions. The outlook for a constructive and well attended convention is bright."

In conjunction with the convention, there will be a display of new theatre equipment and accessories, the following companies having already indicated they will have their product on display:

RCA Manufacturing Company, International Seating Company, Alexander Film, Electrical Research Products, Monogram Pictures, National Screen Service, American Seating, National Carbon, General Register, Wenzel Company, Ideal Seating, Acousticon Theatrephone, International Projector and Theatre Trailer Corporation.

Mr. Wood's committee is working on a schedule of subjects for discussion and the assignment of speakers thereto. Already determined are talks on "Television and its probable effect upon motion picture theatres"; "Additional profit to be obtained through proper air conditioning in theatres," and "What the distributor can do to help the exhibitor sell his merchandise."

A meeting of the board of directors of national Allied will be held on Wednesday morning, May 26th, at the Hotel Pfister, and the convention will be called at two o'clock that afternoon, resuming at one o'clock on the following afternoon. The annual Allied banquet will be held Thursday evening, and at 10 o'clock Friday morning business sessions will be resumed, with the gavel sounding adjournment at noon.

Zanuck Broadcasts On Banking Program

Last Friday's guest of the National Broadcasting radio program sponsored weekly by American banking institutions was Darryl Zanuck, vice-president in charge of production for Twentieth Century-Fox Film.

"Hollywood today," said Mr. Zanuck, "is a living force for bringing the world closer together in friendly understanding and good will. That is Hollywood's newest responsibility. And, as one of Hollywood's producers, I know I speak for them all when I pledge that we will continue to strive with all our resources in carrying out this great responsibility."

Legion of Decency Classifies 16 Films

Of 16 pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency during the current week 11 were approved for general patronage, three for adult patronage and two were cited as objectionable in part. The pictures and their classification follow.

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage: "Cafe Metropole," "The Case of the Stuttering Bishop," "Der Dschungel Ruft" (German), "The Frame Up," "The Gold Racket," "The Great Hospital Mystery," "Make Way for Tomorrow," "Oh, Doctor," "The Three Comrades" (Russian), "Two Gun Law," "The Wildcatter." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "As Good as Married," "Night Must Fall," "San Quentin." Class B, Objectionable in Part: "Talk of the Devil," "The Tenth Man."

Schaefer Named Export Manager For Universal

Gus J. Schaefer of the Paramount Pictures foreign sales department this week was appointed export manager of Universal Pictures by R. H. Cochrane, president. Mr. Schaefer succeeds Nate L. Manheim, who resigned after 18 years with Universal.

Mr. Schaefer takes over his new duties on May 17, by which time he will have completed his work at Paramount. He has been in charge of the Paramount sales in central and eastern Europe for the past 12 years and prior to that he was manager of the Boston Paramount exchange. He has been in the motion picture industry since 1914, when he became associated with World Film Company.

John W. Hicks, head of the Paramount foreign department, is now in Europe and is expected to name Mr. Schaefer's successor either during his current European tour or immediately upon his return to New York.

Action on Divorce Bill Is Postponed

The Assembly Committee on Commerce and Manufacturers at Madison, Wis., this week voted indefinite postponement for the Hall "divorce" bill, which would prohibit producers from operating theatres, following a hearing on the measure.

Appearing against the bill was B. J. Miller, representing the Warner and Fox theatre circuits, while Mrs. J. E. Hansen, Madison, Wisconsin Council of the Parent Teachers association; Herbert L. Mount and Ray Tesch, both of Milwaukee, and representing the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin, spoke for the measure.

A similar bill in the senate has not yet been reported out of cimmittee.

The Balzer Bill, providing for three per cent amusement tax, has been killed by the assembly. The measure had been recommended for indefinite postponement by the committee on taxation.

Mayor LaGuardia Vows Burlesque Will Not Return

Goaded into a fighting mood by the "brazen and arrogant attitude of defiance" on the part of strip-tease burlesque impresarios, Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York this week announced that the "art" which had brought so much notoriety to Broadway in recent weeks is dead. And there will be no revival.

With the doors of every burlesque theatre in Greater New York shut tight and irate owners scheduled to appear for a trial by jury before Supreme Court Justice Samuel I. Rosenman next week in an effort to have their licenses renewed, Mayor LaGuardia further dampened the strip-tease spirits thus:

"There will be no let-up on the part of the city in this situation. It will be a bitter fight to the finish against incorporated filth!"

The Mayor's venom was evoked by the action of two burlesque operators, those of the Eltinge and Gaiety theatres, who went before Supreme Court Justice Edgar Lauer last Saturday and obtained a temporary order restraining authorities from closing their doors. Without licenses, the two theatres played to capacity crowds until midnight, when police, armed with a vacating decree signed by Presiding Justice Francis Martin of the supreme court's appellate division, forced them to close under threats of arrest. Sobbing strip-teasers and chorus girls, stage hands and ushers, as well as audiences, were herded unceremoniously into the streets.

In promising a speedy trial of the case, Justice Rosenman said that License Commissioner Paul Moss had the right to revoke or refuse licenses at his discretion. "The only question," he added, "is whether that discretion has been abused. I think that this matter ought to be submitted to a jury representing a cross section of the people of New York as it is unfair to keep the theatres closed if they are not violating the law."

Mayor LaGuardia's action was immediately preceded by the registration of emphatic protests on the part of religious and civic groups against the renewal of the burlesque licenses, and prominent among the protests was that of Patrick Cardinal Hayes, who, in a letter to Mr. Moss, said:

"I consequently heartily approve of the action of Catholic laymen of many of our organizations in bringing to your official attention this growing evil. I am hopeful the hearings will have a salutary effect."

Reverend Gideon Olson, representing 40 congregations of the Lutheran Church in Brooklyn, said that burlesque was "indecent and obscene" and the Reverend H. L. Bowlby of the Lord's Day Alliance and the Reverend Edward I. Sterns confirmed his views. Dr. Samuel H. Goldenson of Temple Emanu-El appeared before Commissioner Moss, also, last week, as a representative of 145 Jewish ministers to support the elimination of burlesque.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, leader of the Free Synagogue, also, sent a letter to the commissioner pointing out that there was no cure for burlesque except to close the theatres. "You cannot make those places decent," he wrote, "you might just as well try to freeze hell."

Rabbi Sydney E. Goldstein, speaking for the Board of Jewish Ministers, told Mr. Moss that he strongly opposed burlesque theatres.

Meanwhile, the fight against burlesque spread to Chicago, where Mayor Edward J. Kelly ordered an investigation of conditions there with regard to strip-tease dancing following an expose of the practice by the Daily Times. Detroit and Washington, D. C., also ordered action.

FIGHTING EXPANDED ON 'POLITICAL' FILMS

Second Rejected Feature Finally Is Passed; Germany and China Act Also

A new series of tilts developed this week over socalled "political propaganda" motion pictures, in Ohio, New York, Illinois, and extending even as far as China and Germany.

"A Greater Promise," depicting life in the Jewish colony in Biro-Bidjan, Russia, banned by the Ohio censors two months ago on the ground that it contained "harmful propaganda," finally was approved late Saturday after a severe battle, but with certain deletions. Roy Reichelderfer, head of the censor board at Columbus, said he could not describe the deleted scenes and dialogue because the cut sheets were "locked up."

Suit was filed recently in the Ohio Supreme Court by Icor, a Jewish organization, to compel release of this picture.

Simultaneously, another action was filed in the same court by the North American Committee to aid Spanish Democracy, seeking to force release of "Spain in Flames," also banned, and still held up.

The rescinding of the ban on "A Greater Promise" by the Ohio censors is the second instance in a month wherein state censors have reversed themselves on political films. The Kansas state censors previously rescinded a ban on a March of Time sequence showing Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana speaking against President Roosevelt's proposal to increase to 15 the number of justices of the United States supreme court.

In the Cincinnati Post Alfred Segal, columnist writing as "Cincinnatus," commented on the banning of the picture, as follows:

"Cincinnatus was one of several hundred Cincinnatians who attended a private screening of 'A Greater Promise,' which the state censorship has prohibited from public showing. . . .

"The only obnoxious character in the picture was greedy Pinya, who went away by himself to hunt gold in the river when all others were working together to build a good life for everybody. He even tried to kill a man for gold. He was a rugged individualist in the robust, old-fashioned American way.

"'A Greater Promise' has to do with a section of Russia which the Soviet government has set aside to be a republic for Jews. There, it appears, Jews are making a safe and happy life out of the soil."

Communistic Film Barred

In the same issue of the Post an editorial writer said:

"The workings of the Ohio censors' minds were demonstrated rather effectively to several score Cincinnatians the other day at a private showing of the banned Russian-made film, 'A Greater Promise.' It isn't a great picture by any means; in fact, some of the audience found it dull. The censors object because it "glorifies" the collective spirit (in the land where collective bargaining has just been 'glorified') and because it shows Jews and Gentiles living together in harmony (a terrible situation reportedly existing in Cincinnati)."

Public showings of the communistic film, "Spain in Flames," have been stopped in Syracuse, N. Y., according to William Randolph Hearst's New York American, as a result of action by Dr. William Pratt Graham, acting chancellor of Syracuse University. According to the newspaper, Dr. Graham heeded the many protests and canceled the sublease of the Civic University theatre to the North American Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy for the showings of the film. The theatre is leased by the university.

Another Film on Spain Stopped

Meanwhile, the Knights of Columbus carried its fight against communistic pictures to Chicago, where the socalled radical film, "Defense of Madrid," was rejected by Lieutenant Harry M. Costello, chief police censor, after a complaint by State Deputy Michael J. Howlett of the Knights of Columbus.

The union of German theatre owners in Berlin last Friday threatened to break off business relations with "an American film company which produced an anti-German atrocity film." It was stipulated that the film must be withdrawn by June 1st. It was said in Berlin to have been shown in some American churches.

In New York it was assumed that the allegedly "anti-German" film referred to by the theatre owners is "Modern Christian German Martyrs," shown recently at the Riverside Church in New York and sponsored by the American Committee for Christian German Refugees.

Chinese students last Saturday in Shanghai asked the Foreign Office to make representations immediately to Germany to halt production of the motion picture "Alarm in Peking," by the Tobis company. The picture is based on the Boxer uprising in China and it is reported the German company hired Chinese coolies for leading roles.

Associated Artists To Produce "Porgy and Bess"

The first picture of Associated Artists, formed recently by Leslie Howard, Dudley Murphy and Hugh Walpole, will be "Porgy and Bess," the Du Bose Heyward play which the Theatre Guild produced on Broadway last season. The deal for "Porgy and Bess" was arranged last week by Theresa Helburn, head of the Bureau of New Plays, Inc., and a director of the Theatre Guild, which, contrary to reports, will not itself enter film production.

Associated Artists was formed in London by Mr. Howard with British financing. A short time ago it was reported that the company was seeking American distribution and that United Artists would probably be the American outlet. Another production on the company's list of four per year will probably be "Bonnie Prince Charlie," with Mr. Howard in the title role.

MUSSOLINI OPENS NEW ITALIAN STUDIO

Premier Benito Mussolini of Italy last Wednesday formally opened the new motion picture production center which was constructed outside of Rome under his sponsorship. It is described as a modern plant, with the latest in equipment, and it is the hope of Il Duce that production in the new studios will prove serious competition for foreign product. He frequently has acknowledged his appreciation of the fact that the screen is an important propaganda medium.

Most of the equipment in the new plant was imported from the United States. One of the first productions planned was developed by Vittorio Mussolini, Il Duce's son.

Pickford Praises Italian Studios

Mary Pickford, vice-president and partner of United Artists and former member of Pickford-Lasky Productions, returned to New York Monday from a three-months automobile tour of Central Europe during which she visited Rome and the new Cinematograph City recently opened there by Premier Mussolini. Miss Pickford, according to Vittorio Malpassuti, MOTION PICTURE HERALD representative in the Italian capital, expressed amazement at the modern development of the studios and expressed the hope that she might be able to produce an historical picture at the plant, which she said was superior to any other she had seen, "incorporating the best of Hollywood and eliminating the faults in construction in Hollywood."

Miss Pickford will remain in New York for a short visit before returning to Hollywood where she will be wed to Charles ("Buddy") Rogers next month.

Open Color Laboratory

Keller-Dorian Color Company technicians this week established a laboratory in Hollywood near the Grand National studios to facilitate tests for "Grand Canyon," which Richard A. Rowland is producing. The daily rushes will be developed and printed in the new laboratory and will be taken by plane back to the Grand Canyon in Colorado where tests are being made under the supervision of Albert N. Chappereau, head of the color company.

Richard Watts, critic, George Jean Nathan, legitimate theatre critic, David Rose, United Artists, Pan Blumenthal, United Artists, Ricardo Cortez and Mrs. Jack Cohn all left New York last Friday for Hollywood on the American Mercury.

Warner Brothers was to adopt its sales accessory rental plan in all exchanges Tuesday. The policy closely follows that inaugurated by Paramount last year.

PROFIT INCREASES REPORTED BY RKO, PATHE, GTE, RCA & EASTMAN KODAK

Pathe's Consolidated Net for Quarter, $59,372; RKO Profit of $2,172,771 for Six Months Is Estimated

Evidence of continuing increases in motion picture earnings came this week from Pathe Film Corporation, Radio-Keith-Orpheum, General Theatres Equipment, Radio Corporation of America—controlling half interest in RKO and all of NBC; Eastman Kodak Company, Keith Memorial Theatres, Heywood-Wakefield and the Roxy Theatre Corporation.

Motion picture financial developments elsewhere included reports to the Securities and Exchange Commission by Twentieth Century-Fox, Paramount, Universal, Agfa-Ansco, General Theatres, Keith-Albee-Orpheum, and Consolidated Film Industries, and the issuance of a call by Fox Film Realty Corporation for the redemption of $2,000,000 in six per cent first mortgage bond issues.

Pathe's Quarterly Net

Pathe Film Corporation and its subsidiaries reported a consolidated net profit of $59,372.72 for the three months ending March 31, last, confirming the estimate of $59,000 made last week to stockholders by O. Henry Briggs, president.

Total income from developing and printing, film rental and from other operations amounted to $304,319.91, and the profit from operations was $12,920. Other income amounted to $48,851.89, for a total of $61,772.72. Interest expense amounted to $2,400. Provision for depreciation and amortization was $7,276.05.

RKO's Half Year

Profits of $2,172,771 for RKO were predicted by Oliver O. McMahon, assistant treasurer, for the first six months of 1937, at the hearing this week on the proposed plan of reorganization of RKO before Special Master George W. Alger in New York.

William H. Clark, treasurer of RKO Radio Pictures, said profits of that company should be $1,071,000 for the first half of 1937. Mr. Clark said that he had predicted the net profit for the quarter ended March 31 would be $290,000 and that the actual figures revealed a profit of $268,337. He expects $781,000 for the remaining three months. Mr. Clark showed that RKO lost $97,000 in 1936 through Radio Films S. A. E. of Spain.

Mr. McMahon's testimony indicated RKO had a profit of $1,168,676 for the first quarter as compared with his earlier prediction of $1,022,781. He said that his estimate for the second three months is a profit of $1,149,990.

General Theatres' Net

Net income of General Theatres Equipment for the quarter ended March 31, last, amounted to $291,464, after charges, depreciation and normal taxes but before the tax on undistributed profits, the annual stockholders' meeting in New York was told. This amount, according to President Earle Hines, is equal to 54 cents on each share of common stock.

The statement also was made that the company had designed and developed various equipment which is expected to substantially augment its revenue.

The consolidated income showed net sales of $2,212,066; cost of sales $1,532,829; selling and shipping expenses $298,189; general and administrative expenses $154,628; operating profit $226,420; other income $168,490; total income $394,910; other deductions $70,090; estimated normal federal income taxes, $33,356.

First Quarter at RCA

RCA and its subsidiaries on Monday reported a net profit for the first quarter of 1937, ending March 31, of $2,243,057.80, which compares with a net profit of $1,286,691.27, an increase of $956,366 over the similar quarter of 1936. The net for the 1937 period is after interest, depreciation, amortization of patents and federal taxes, but without taking into account provision for federal surtax on undistributed profits.

Total gross income for the quarter from all sources amounted to $25,109,349.42, which compares with a gross income in the 1936 period of $22,542,319.04. Net income for the 1937 quarter before depreciation was $3,503,766.72. Deducted from the net profit was $790,000 for the dividend on the convertible first preferred.

Gr. inc. from oper.	$24,931,110	$22,260,311

Eastman Sales Up

Domestic sales of Eastman Kodak are running more than 15 per cent above the 1936 period, according to Thomas J. Hargrave, vice-president. The company plans to spend in excess of $12,000,000 for modernization and expansion at Rochester, N. Y., and Kingsport, Tenn., where it is building a new plant.

Keith Memorial Reduces Loss

Keith Memorial Theatre Corporation and subsidiaries in Boston reported a net loss of $83,033. This compares with a loss of $108,101 in 1935.

Heywood-Wakefield Net Profit

A net profit for the first three months of the current year of $101,664 for Heywood-Wakefield Company of Gardner, manufacturers of theatre seats, as compared with a net profit of $57,675 for the same period, was announced in Boston by Richard Greenwood, president. Shipments billed were 47 per cent in excess of those for the same period last year, while orders ran 65 per cent ahead.

Roxy Theatre's Quarter

The Roxy Theatre Corporation in New York reported a profit of $94,485 for the first quarter ended April 1. The figure compares with a profit of $30,870 reported for the corresponding period last year.

Reports on Securities

Continuing its policy of gradually disposing of Twentieth Century-Fox securities which it holds under escrow agreement, the Chase National Bank, New York, during March sold 4,102 shares of common and 4,404 shares of $1.50 cumulative preferred, it was disclosed Monday by the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington. The report showed that at the close of March the bank still held 347,807 shares of common and 699,414 shares of the preferred stock.

General Theatres' Net Income for Quarter Is $291,464; RCA Profit Is Almost Doubled Over Year Ago

It also was disclosed that 140,000 shares of Agfa-Ansco Corporation, manufacturers of raw film stock, had been acquired by the American I. G. Chemical Corporation to bring its holdings up to 371,601.

A back report on Consolidated Film Industries was filed by the Setay Company, Inc., New York, showing the sale in November, 1936, of 1,500 shares of common stock, and of 2,000 shares of preferred in January and 98 in February, leaving none.

Hertz Disposes of Securities

Disposition by John D. Hertz, New York, through Lehman Brothers of 65,000 Paramount 3¼ per cent convertible debentures following the acquisition of 167,000 in exchange for an equal number of six per cent debentures, also was reported, leaving his holdings of these securities at 102,000 at the end of the month as well as 6,000 common shares and 8,000 convertible second preferred.

The sale of 100 shares of Universal Pictures common was reported by Universal Corporation, Wilmington, Del., which at the end of March held 228,927 shares of common and 20,000 shares of second preferred.

A corrected report from Earle G. Hines, New York, officer and director of General Theatre Equipment, disclosed that he held 1,000 shares of common stock when the company's registration became effective January 27, last.

Holdings in KAO

Leo Spitz, officer and director of Keith-Albee-Orpheum, was also reported as holding no shares in the corporation in April, 1936.

The Wall Street Journal said this week that M. J. Meehan and Company was reported by KAO as holder of 29,001 shares of seven per cent cumulative convertible preferred stock as of Dec. 31, 1936. It is indicated that 26,801 shares are beneficially owned by Michael J. Meehan or 41.68 per cent of the total outstanding.

Two six per cent first mortgage bond issues of Fox Film Realty Corporation, totaling approximately $2,000,000, have been called by the company for redemption on June 1, approximately four and one-half years in advance of their due date. Both issues are dated January 1, 1927, and are due January 1, 1942. One is a studio issue amounting to $1,316,300, and the other an issue on the home office building amounting to $646,900. The bonds are redeemable at face amount with a premium of one and one-half per cent, plus accrued interest. The estimated interest saving is $500,000.

Wells Luncheon Guest

Linton Wells, eastern director of publicity for Samuel Goldwyn and former foreign correspondent for the New York Herald-Tribune, was the guest of honor Tuesday in Washington at a luncheon tendered by his former newspaper colleagues. Mr. Wells was accompanied by his wife, Fay Gillis Wells, noted woman correspondent and aviatrix.

SMPE PROGRAM CONCENTRATED ON PRODUCTION FOR SPRING MEETING

Convention Opening at Roosevelt Hotel in Hollywood, May 24th, Will Carry Discussions Into the Studios

Concentrating to an unprecedented degree on the discussion of motion picture production, studio equipment and the development of new systems in filming, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers this week completed its program of papers and forums for the Spring Meeting, May 24th to 28th, at the Roosevelt hotel, Hollywood.

Some of the discussions will be brought directly into the studios, particularly at the studios of Universal, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Twentieth Century-Fox, where actual filming will be studied from technical viewpoints.

There will be special sessions on color, production instruments, transmission meters, acoustics, sound, laboratory practice, apparatus for sound and television. The complete program follows:

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

"SHOULD DO NO LESS"

As a genial gesture from one theatre to another, or to occasion "favorable comment" among patrons or for reasons, if any, beyond consideration of the local situation, the unusual quarter-page ad from Reading, Pa., reproduced on this page ostensibly speaks for itself. But the manner of its speaking is not so important. At this end of the table any such display furnishes food for deep thought, though it may be fare a bit difficult to digest.

While your Chairman has consistently advocated the furthering of cordial relations between theatre and theatre for the best interests of both, there appears to this bewildered observer no sound reason for one house to go overboard in so elaborate (and expensive) a manner for the benefit of the opposition. And especially since the ad admits readily—and oh, so cheerfully—that the other fellow has the best show in town.

If one wishes, one may argue that this kind of showbusiness may connote good sportsmanship—that a manager, feeling his opposition has by far the superior attraction that week, steps aside in the manner of what is laughingly called a "good loser" and aids the cause by giving his neighbor three rousing and loud cheers. But, gentlemen, business today has little room for the good loser. A clean loser, yes; but the theatreman most in demand is a hard-hitting, don't-know-when-he-is-licked kind of a guy who keeps on boring in when there is nothing left but instinct.

No one theatre ever had an attraction big enough to satisfy every last patron in town. Every picture booked in every town has an audience of some kind to be had. It is the manager's job to find that audience and to fight tooth and nail for his share of the gate.

If he cannot do any more, he certainly should be expected to do no less.

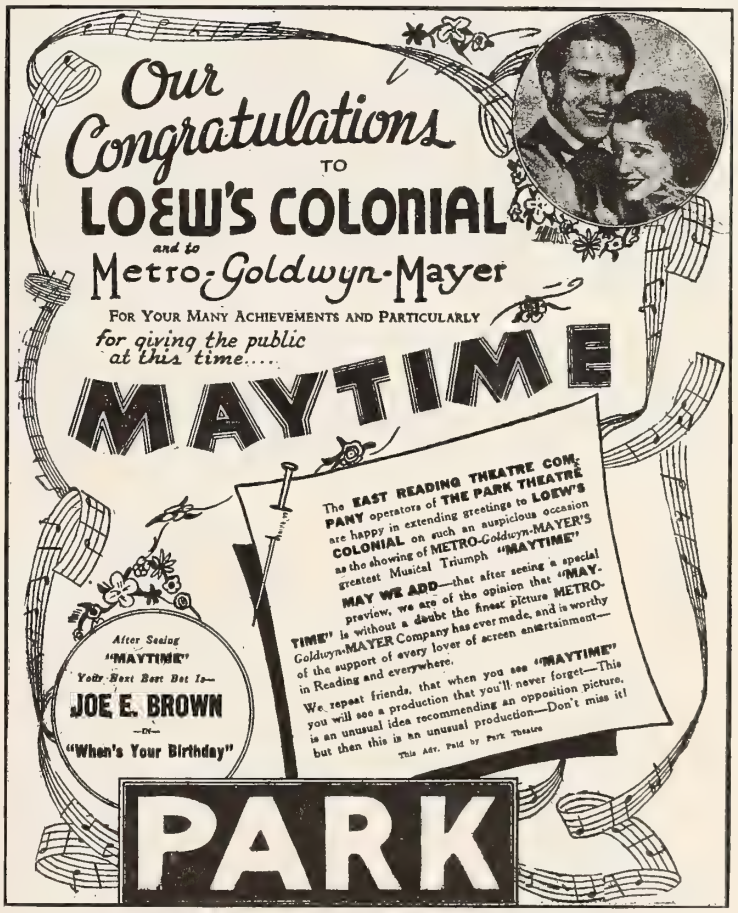
No matter how sincerely the acrobatics are performed, there is obvious danger in turning hand-springs in the highways and byways for the opposition. For, by telling the folks so directly to patronize the guy across the street and pass up his own attraction, the goodwill ambassador-manager is doing no less than kicking to pieces whatever favorable entertainment-reputation his house has won in the regard of his community.

If competition is the life of trade, then it certainly is the very guts and backbone of theatre business.



Our Congratulations TO LOEW'S COLONIAL and to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

For Your Many Achievements and Particularly for giving the public at this time....

MAYTIME

The EAST READING THEATRE COMPANY operators of THE PARK THEATRE are happy in extending greetings to LOEW'S COLONIAL on such an auspicious occasion as the showing of METRO-Goldwyn-MAYER'S greatest Musical Triumph "MAYTIME"

MAY WE ADD—that after seeing a special preview, we are of the opinion that "MAYTIME" is without a doubt the finest picture METRO-Goldwyn-MAYER Company has ever made, and is worthy of the support of every lover of screen entertainment—in Reading and everywhere.

We repeat friends, that when you see "MAYTIME" you will see a production that you'll never forget—This is an unusual idea recommending an opposition picture, but then this is an unusual production—Don't miss it!

SOMETHING ABOUT THE AWARDS

After three and more years of publicizing the Quigley Competitions, your Chairman thought that all interested managers had learned the simple rulings run frequently in the pages. And just now arrives a two-paragraph note plus one snapshot from a manager requesting his "campaign" be entered.

Well, maybe we're wrong.

Baker Stages Sportsmen Show On Tiein with Deputy Wardens

Above is illustrated one of the game displays in the Bergen County (N. J.) Deputy Wardens' Association Sportsmen Show held at the Fox Theatre, in Hackensack for the entire week of April 4th. Theatre was transformed by Manager John J. Baker into an outdoor setting with artificial trout streams, game habitats and trophies. In addition to cooperating on the Show, Wardens put on a benefit and sold tickets. Children attended exhibit during morning school hours and visitors from all over the state were reported. Papers were generous with publicity and grosses jumped appreciably during the exhibition. Baker suggests similar tieins with local Game Wardens, boosting the idea highly as an unusual boxoffice builder.

Howard Constructs Setpiece For "Waikiki Wedding"

Accompanying photo shows attractive lobby setpiece constructed by Hal Howard, Warner's Kentucky Theatre, Henderson, Ky., for "Waikiki Wedding." Hut was made of artificial palm leaves and was surrounded by bamboo and palm trees bearing the cast and title.

Figures of Crosby, Raye and Ross were made into a blowup from a 14 by 17 photograph and placed in the hut.

Newspapermen Hosted By Star of "Top of Town"

Manager Frank Smith and Publicist John Joseph, RKO Palace, Chicago, boosted the "Top of the Town" campaign by the presence of Gertrude Niesen in the city at time of opening. Star acted as hostess of an airplane luncheon tendered to newspapermen and also had her broadcast over their radio spot.

"Top of the Town" beret received promotion from department store, which ran large newspaper ads with plenty of space devoted to the picture.

Tie "Prince and Pauper" Date To Newspaper Stamp Column

One of the top tieins featured in the big advance on "Prince and the Pauper" that Irv Windisch worked out for Dinty Moore's campaign at the New York Strand, was a contest with the stamp editor of the New York American with 50 sets of Coronation Stamps or 50 pairs of guest tickets offered as prizes, supposedly presented by the Mauch Twins of the picture.

Entrants were asked to write no more than 100 words on why they liked the picture and the tiein was heavily exploited.

Ads on "50 Roads" In Dallas Stress Caricature Slant

In his keen sales analysis on the date for "Fifty Roads to Town," at the Palace, Dallas, Texas, Manager Fred Patterson stressed the romantic appeal of Don Ameche and decided that the local draw for the Twentieth Century-Fox star and the female lead, Ann Sothern, was strong enough to bill the pair over the title in his ad campaign. Patterson also went heavily for the caricatures in the pressbook and used them in special miniature gag heralds.

The postcards referred to were mailed to the regular mailing list and thousands of the small heralds with same copy distributed in office buildings, at sporting events, through laundries and house-to-house. Fred also planted window cards in local banks and was able to have the heralds given out by the bankers through a tieup to have 500 members of the local American Institute of Banking chapter arrange their bi-monthly theatre party at the Palace.

Special newspaper publicity a week ahead was planted widely and included multi-columned art, page-streamer heading top review on front page amusement section. Radio breaks were obtained on local stations WRR, KRLD, for announcements and tieins made on other programs. Besides the feature, Patterson also put in some strong plugs for the surrounding shorts program, Popeye in "Hospitality" and Clyde McCoy in "The Jam Session," selling these as perfect supplementary entertainment.

New Star Accessory

Reported by Elliott McManus, Twentieth Century-Fox New York exchange ad sales manager, is the new star portrait now being offered with attractive frame. Size is 14 inches by 17 and available are reproductions of stars such as Loretta Young, Tyrone Power, Shirley Temple, Sonja Henie Alice Faye, Simone Simon, etc. McManus recommends these especially for lobby decoration and reports portraits on hand at all the company's exchanges.

"Tell Us What You Did"

"MAYTIME" BOUQUET. Messenger brings cherry blossoms to Miss Amy Croughton, Times Union critic as a "Maytime" greeting from Les Pollock, Loew's Rochester. Two other critics in town were presented with similar bouquets.

"If the Shoe Fits" You're a Copper

For "The Great O'Malley" date at the Ritz Theatre, San Bernardino, Cal., Howard Ralston placed an extra size pair of shoes on table in front of theatre with card above reading "Can you fill these shoes? If so, you'd make a good cop. See," etc., etc. Howard reports the stunt an eye-attractor and laugh-getter.

Another gag used was street bally on "Ready, Willing and Able." Accompanying photo showing boys carrying teaser signs. Several days in advance of opening, the boys circulated about town in separate directions; on opening day, however, they got together, correctly spelling out title.

"Tell Us What You Did"

Various Gags Sell "Rangers" for Gold

Parking tickets laid out in same fashion as police summonses were placed under windshields by Melvin Gold, Calumet Theatre, Hammond, Inc., asking folks to "report at once to the theatre to see Texas Rangers." Teaser snipes were used in foyer, washrooms, doors, etc., three weeks prior to playdates and restaurant checks were imprinted.

Store windows were bannered with red, white and blue snipes with picture copy and boys distributing the snipes wore ten-gallon hats, as did attendants at local gas station. Heralds were distributed house to house and entire staff wore imprinted sashes during engagement.

Hipp's Amateur Critics

Out in Cleveland Manager Ed Miller at Warner's Hippodrome and Publicist Mort Goodman have completed a tieup with the Cleveland News whereby best marks at school elect youngsters to be chosen for the job of amateur critic. Theatre gives small prize for best review with paper playing the stunt up in advance of each attraction, thereby giving the theatre plenty of notice on coming dates.

Newspapers Cooperate On "History" for Granara

Jack Granara of Keith's Memorial Theatre, Boston, for "History Is Made at Night," obtained excellent space in all Boston papers, including a full-page picture of Jean Arthur in the Boston American the Saturday before the opening. Jack also secured a contest in the Boston American which started Tuesday before the opening to run for five days. This contest was a slight deviation from the Recipe Contest as listed in the press-book. The prizes consisted of $40 in cash and 25 pairs of theatre tickets.

Three-column pictures were planted in the American and Traveler and many two-column pictures in the other Boston papers. The Record got out a special ad section for Friday of the opening week. George Holland, who writes a column in the American called Boston After Dark, ran a column similar to that run by Ed. Sullivan in New York. Cooperative ads from Jordan Marsh on fashions; R. H. White and Co. on rugs. Measuring up the space we were able to obtain more than 50 per cent more space than any other attraction.

They Eats Their Spinach And Joins Tucker's Club

Young folks of Roselle Park, New Jersey, crowded the Park Theatre when John Tucker announced the inauguration of his "Pop Eye Club." Opening week the kids were explained the purpose of the club, election of officers, a Mr. Popeye, Wimpy, Pluto and Miss Olive Oyl was held, with each member signing his membership card and given a pipe, compliments of the house.

Accompanying photo shows part of the membership in front of house with large cutout of the comic hero. Other activities in connection with the meetings were a harmonica elimination contest, dog contest and promoted prizes were also awarded to those submitting best jingles. Lobby cutouts and standees were placed in conspicuous spots urging membership and John also promoted toys for giveaway. Contacting principals and presidents of PTA's for better children's programs, Tucker further elicited their support for the appointment of a committee to act as supervisors of the Club. Permission was also granted for the distribution of bookmarks throughout class rooms. In order to gain the moral support from the parents of the two boroughs, a Safety League controlled by the Police Department was organized. Each Saturday some member of the force addresses the children on safety.

"Tell Us What You Did"

Serialization Planted By Schlaifer for "Star"

A stunt which is reported new for San Francisco enabled Charlie Schlaifer of United Artists Theatre to gather 40,000 words of free publicity in the News on "A Star Is Born."

The paper agreed to use the entire shooting script in serial form for 20 days in addition to distributing 100,000 tabloids of the first six chapters to non-readers, 2,000 half-sheet cards were placed in public spots and display ads and news stories introduced the feature. Schlaifer also arranged for a whole co-op ad page in two colors and planted a coupe of smash art breaks in the Call Bulletin.

"Tell Us What You Did"

Ship Display Sells "Dodsworth" for Conner

Accompanying photo shows lobby display used by Marlowe Connor, Grove Theatre, Chicago, Ill., for the "Dodsworth" engagement. Connor promoted a six-foot model of the Queen Mary as well as a large cross section diagrammatic photo in color of the ship and an oil reproduction of it on the sea. These, together with proper stills and posters, tied up the picture.

For "Pennies from Heaven" the old guessing contest was used with passes going to those submitting correct answer. Card carried copy reading "There is no guessing about your enjoying," etc., etc.

Hamilton's Tracy Giveaway

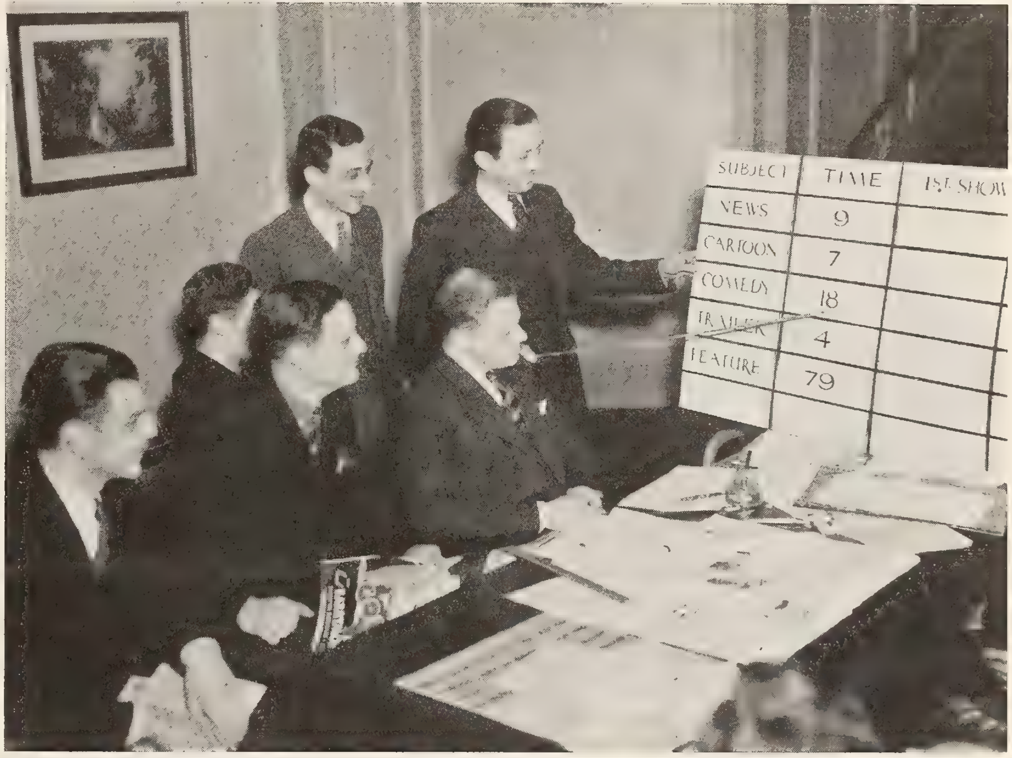
Student Managers Addressed On Programs and Schedules

Final Article on RKO Midwest School Analyses Arrangement and Timing of Shows

by E. H. MAYER
in Cincinnati



SHURE EXPLAINS THE MAKING OF SCHEDULES TO STUDENTS

"TODAY we shall devote our time to a discussion of program arrangement and schedules, that is, the various factors that go to make up a properly diversified theatre program and the sequence in which those factors should be presented to maintain the necessary program balance, both of which items are of the utmost importance," were the opening remarks of Manny Shure, manager RKO Albee, in addressing the assembly of chief of service staffs—future managers to you—in the School for Student Managers, conducted by Joe Goetz, assistant division manager and booker for RKO Midwest, in Cincinnati.

"Some of the things I am going to say may sound a bit academic or elementary to you, but I want to present the subject in as graphic a manner as possible," Shure continued. "By way of example, and for the sake of clarity, let's compare a picture program to a dinner to which you were invited. What would be your reaction to this meal if it consisted of a variety of well-balanced food, and the dessert were served first, with the appetizer brought in as the last course? It's all cockeyed, you would say, if I may be permitted to use slang to emphasize my point. You would be perfectly justified in that opinion. Now, let's carry the comparison a little further.

"Suppose the meal were served in exactly the right sequence or rotation of courses, but each course consisted of the same general kind of food. Wouldn't that be just as bad on account of the sameness and the lack of variety? You wouldn't enjoy it, because it lacked balance. Neither would I, nor anyone else, and certainly no one would want to continue their meals under either plan. Exactly the same thing applies to a theatre program, which is designed to thoroughly satisfy the patron's appetite. In the one case it's the appetite for food, and in the other, the appetite for entertainment. Now, let's analyze the factors of a picture program and see how they should be 'served' for the best results."

Explains Types of Pictures

Here, Shure explained the various types of pictures that go to make up the average program in which he included features, newsreels, cartoons, single and double reel comedies, travelogues, novelty reels, educational, revue, musical and dramatic shorts. In the last mentioned classification, he included such presentations as the March of Time, Voice of Experience, mystery and detective stories, etc. "We must be just as careful how we 'serve' these to our patrons as the perfect hostess must be in serving her meal." Shure then pointed out that feature pictures were of various types.

"Each general type of feature has a number of classifications," he explained. "For instance, the comedy feature might be a farce, a comedy romance or a comedy drama. By the same token," he said, "the dramatic feature might be a melodrama, a mystery drama or a comedy drama.

"As a usual thing, but by no means always, and this is not a hard and fast rule," he exlained, "the more the extreme the type of feature, the more oppositely extreme the balancing short subject should be. For example, an unusually heavy dramatic feature should have a very comic short for balance.

"It must always be remembered that most features are not made up of a single element, that is, they do not consist entirely of drama, or comedy or music, but usually contain elements of all of them. Therefore, each feature production must be carefully examined and studied in order to determine just what type of short subject is best suited to the program to produce the proper balance.

"Monotony should be avoided on any program. For this reason, when two or more subjects are needed to fill in the program, it usually is most advisable to book two subjects that differ widely in type.

"There are two very important types of short subjects which experience has proved can be adapted to almost any type of feature. They are the newsreel and cartoon. The newsreel especially is about as essential to a program as is bread to a meal. Theatre patrons have become accustomed to seeing a newsreel on our screens, and that now is a necessity. The cartoon we have also found is an important addition to the entertainment offered by any type of program. In this connection, let me make it perfectly clear that a short subject of any kind should never be considered as a show or program filler. It is, in reality, a definite and necessary part of the program.

"We now arrive at the sequence or order in which the component parts of the program should be arranged. This, however, also is a subject which is somewhat variable and on which there exists considerable difference of opinion.

"As is the case with anything pertaining to the operation of a theatre, the final proof of how the program shall be arranged lies in the actual running of the show. After looking over the first show on opening day, it sometimes is found that a change in the order of presenting the different subjects will materially improve the program. Occasionally it is necessary to remove or 'pull' a short subject, either because it did not add anything to the balance of the program, or because it lacked merit.

"My personal opinion, based on experience, is that the best order of presentation of the various program subjects is as follows: First, the newsreel. This is suggested as an 'opener' because it usually starts out with lively music, and, as I stated before, it is of interest to the vast majority of theatre patrons. Second, the cartoon. Third, the one-reel subject, that is, comedy, travel, mystery, etc. Fourth, the two-reel subject, if this is necessary on the program. Fifth, the trailer advertising the coming attractions, and last the feature.

"Having settled the manner in which our program is to be presented, we will now take up the matter of schedules. The length of the average show is from one hour and fifty minutes to two hours. This, however, will sometimes vary either way. Shows should, whenever possible, break at such times to take care of the people. On week days, the first run theatre will generally open at 9:40 A. M., and run until 10 P. M. On Saturdays, if there is a midnight show, the theatre should open at 9:30 A. M., but if there is no midnight show, then the hours on Saturday should be from 9:50 A. M. to 10 P. M. The Sunday hours should be from 9:50 A. M. to 10 P. M. This would likewise apply to holidays, except New Year's Eve, Armistice Day, Hallowe'en, etc., when the closing hour would be governed by the circumstances at the time."

The boys then were asked to immediately make up sample program arrangements, time schedules and work out other details, all of which was done to the complete satisfaction of "Professor" Shure. The title, incidentally, is used advisedly in this instance, as Shure, who has made an exhaustive study of programs in their various ramifications, has been unusually successful in keeping his shows running with the maximum smoothness.

Buehrig's "Romeo" Street Bally

Facade Street Bally Used For "Romeo" in Calcutta

Of no small proportions was the street bally, a simulated facade of his front, for "Romeo and Juliet" constructed by Al Buehrig, Metro Cinema, Calcutta, India (see photo) consisting of setpiece made of compo board, placed on rollers and pulled through main streets by three men.

Newspaper serialization was planted in papers with art work and six weeks ahead articles were run in regular house programs. Since picture played during theatre anniversary, baker donated cake which was used in lobby with guest tickets going to those guessing correct weight.

Gould's Tinted Photos

S. W. Gould, Regent Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., distributed five by six tinted photos of Miriam Hopkins, plugging his "Men Are Not Gods" engagement there. Merchant's ad on reverse side covered cost of printing and distribution.

Skouras Managers Stimulate Grosses

Recent activities of Skouras theatremen in the New York metropolitan area take many forms of effective exploitations, and among these may be included the success of Manager Ken Henry with his weekly Quiz-Quest put on from the stage of the Park Plaza, New York. Elaborating on the usual presentation, Henry tied it in with radio station WMCA which interested a leading department store as sponsor. Store underwrites all expenses and awards prizes for winners of the weekly Quiz.

Now called for radio purposes "Quiz-Dom Court," broadcast originates weekly from the stage as before and is handled in the nature of a courtroom question and answer session. In addition to the expected draw of the program, broadcast includes plenty of plug for the theatre and attractions over a larger territory.

Easter Events Found Popular

At the Crotona, in the Bronx section of New York, Manager Mort Greene for Easter Week featured a novel lobby display of a huge white compoboard egg, seven feet high and three deep. Interior of the egg could be viewed through glass window showing baby chicks kept warm and comfortable with a battery of electric bulbs.

In Hackensack, N. J., Manager John Baker at the Fox tied in with local daily and leading store for his successful Easter Hunt and at the Cove, Glen Cove, L. I., Max Cooper did a neat job of it with the cooperation of his local Lions Club and the newspaper. Pictures of the event shown the following week proved added grosses.

Layout constructed by Manager Fred Wieber, of the Brook, Bound Brook, N. J., took the form of a garden with the central unit a grotto surrounded by cedars, evergreens and assorted garden flowers. In the grotto was placed a statue of the Blessed Virgin mounted in a niche and directly facing the entrance doors from the lobby. Rest of the lobby was decorated with other assortments of Spring verdure and foliage. A "Bunnytown" display was added by Wieber for further seasonal atmosphere.

Fuchs Sponsors Model Contest

For his date on "Lloyds of London" at the Capitol, Portchester, N. Y., Harry Fuchs, Skouras Westchester County district manager, put on a contest to discover the most interesting ship's model in the possession of theatre's patrons. These were placed in a special lobby display, there being 41 models entered. Models were of various periods dating from the ships used in the time of Lief the Lucky to the modern battleship. Selections of winners was decided by balloting of patrons and added interest was given the contest by publicity and photos in local papers.

To build his Holy Week business, Lou Hart, at the Beacon, Port Washington, L. I., featured his usual bookings as a "star-studded seven unit show" by adding vaudeville acts and a number of strong-name shorts. Then tying in with the local popularity of his cashier, who was leaving for a vacation in South America, Hart announced a "bon voyage" party as another builder for the week.

JOSEPH M. RUBENFELD

manages Loew's Kameo in Brooklyn, N. Y., and was originally a musician in different units and then played in the pit for a short while. Joe then joined Loew's as assistant and his first house was the Plaza, the second the Triboro and then the Bedford, Premier and Metropolitan, all in Brooklyn. From the last spot he was promoted to manager of the Kameo.

acts as assistant manager of the Strand Theatre in New Britain, Conn., for Warner Bros. Victor started at Warner's Embassy Theatre there as usher, then doorman spending a year and a half there before he was transferred to the Strand. At the latter spot Morelli for two years as doorman and chief usher, then becoming assistant.

manages Joy's Theatre in Mansura, La., and we extend a hearty welcome into the club. We haven't as many lady members active as we should like, Mrs. Bergeron, so how about sending along some accounts of your recent activities for reproduction in our pages and maybe that will stimulate others of your fair sex to get in line and contribute.

manages the Tivoli Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., for the Randforce Amusement Company, and since we have this circuit tied up about 100 per cent solidly Round Table, we are expecting that this new member will be but another from the Brooklyn zone that shall be contributing to this department frequently.

manages the Strand Theatre in Minot, N. D., for the Minnesota Amusement Co., and Harvey's career started in Fargo, N. D., at the State Theatre, where, after working several months as usher, doorman and head usher he won his promotion to assistant manager there. This was soon followed by his transfer and still higher promotion as manager of the Strand. Since Swenson says he derives much enjoyment from reading each issue, we shall expect to have him do his share by contributing.

is at the Daly Theatre, Bronx, N. Y., working for Moe Rosenberg. Dave started handling programs, working as a ticket seller, ballyhoo, etc., on Barnum shows, carnivals, etc. Promoted expositions, auto shows, trade shows and was circulation manager of Exhibitors Trade Review for a year. Road showed pictures for Pop Rock, old Vitagraph company, and in addition sold subscriptions to MOTION PICTURE HERALD and Motion Picture Daily. Well, Harris, with your background, we'll miss our guess if you don't become an active member.

Not in dutch, but just a couple of overseas brother showmen in Dutch costume. Eugene Scharin, RKO Continental exploitation director is on the right and Ned Clarke, special representative of RKO International, Ltd.

CLARENCE F. WALL

is the assistant manager and house manager of the Bay Theatre, Green Bay, Wis., a Standard-Fox theatre, and from all the nice things Clarence says about our Round Table, we are counting on him to be an active member, even though, up to this point, we are still awaiting his first contribution to our pages. How about it? Remember your obligation just starts when you sign on the dotted line.

manages the Leonia Theatre in Leonia, N. J., for Broadwood Amusement Corporation. Warren started as a part time usher at the Fox Theatre, Hackensack, N. J., in 1931, was with Ringling Brothers' Circus for three summer seasons as usher and sideshow ticket seller. From that point Wood was barker for Minsky's Republic Theatre in New York City, thence to Brandt's Audubon Theatre, then to Adams Park Lane in Palisades Park, N. J., as assistant, and, in January of this year, was made manager of his present house.

manages the Bedford Theatre in Toronto, Ontario, and he and his assistant, JOHN R. POOLE, join the club at the same time. Well, now with the two of you signed on the dotted line, there's no reason why the Bedford shouldn't be well represented in our pages. How about getting out the old typewriter and jotting down some of the recent exploitations put over by you?

is the assistant manager of the Phoenix Theatre, Phoenix, Ariz., and his boss, Frank Mangham, proposes him for membership. Since Frank is no stranger to us, we are hopeful that between the two of them we will, at not too infrequent intervals, hear from these men regarding their exploitation stunts at the Phoenix.

is in East Tawes, Mich., managing the Family Theatre for Ashmun Brothers. Started as usher and then switched over to the projection booth and then became assistant manager. When Ashmuns took over the house he was sent over to manage the Family and has been there for some little time.

manages the Capitol Theatre in Coburg, Ont., Can., for Famous Players Canadian Corp. and started in showbusiness as an usher with the opening of the Uptown Theatre in Toronto, Ontario, in 1926, then promoted to scenic artist's assistant, then held the post of publicity agent and assistant treasurer of the Upton for four years. Craig was then promoted to assistant manager and from that spot was promoted to manager of his present house.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1936, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1936-37 season.

F. H. RICHARDSON

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 68

Bluebook School Question No. 68 was: (A) Name the reasons for fixing maximum capacity in electrical conductors. (B) In a wire of fixed diameter, what three things increase total resistance opposed to current flow? (C) How may resistance of a copper circuit be calculated? (D) If a strong current of air is passed over a wire, may its current capacity be increased with safety?

The following made acceptable answers: C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; H. Edwards; G. E. Doe; W. C. Brown; J. R. Prater; T. F. Bochert; C. Oldham; D. E. Birdsong; W. H. Edmonds; W. Limmroth; C. L. Loft; C. Lonie; A. L. Cooper; H. B. Smith; O. H. Schmidt; C. Champney; J. A. Zachritz; P. and L. Felt; F. E. Dorp and H. A. Ames; D. Morgan; T. Turk; L. B. Masters; L. E. Dodson and H. T. Todd; K. N. Alberts; D. B. Smith; R. S. Smalley; J. Morton; F. H. S. and P. Dalbey; H. L. Lilly; D. Shea and A. D. Lonby; D. H. Purcell; L. and F. L. Savlor; E. F. Wentworth; C. W. Goss; H. Lathrope, C. H. Lowrie and M. Dey; B. B. Hornstein and R. R. Jacobs; T. H. Morton; O. Hunt; J. G. and L. F. Brown; R. D. Hicks and P. F. Maxwell; D. and W. Porter; L. B. Jones; F. C. Dunn; W. C. Bant; B. L. Lasser; L. B. Knox, E. M. Brown and D. Davis; T. W. Redhouse; R. Tompkins and H. J. Abernathy; J. K. Robinson and R. E. Bullard; B. L. Sanderson; T. R. Jones; A. Leonard and G. T. Jones; L. A. Beachwood and R. R. Robinson; F. L. Birch; W. Winkle and R. R. Robins; M. and B. Walker; H. W. Matthews and J. R. Davidson; W. V. Henderson and T. B. Brown; E. L. Sanford; A. C. Greene; C. Caldwell; H. T. McClellan; M. L. Grahame; H. T. Plum; T. G. Middleton; L. and W. R. Matthews; W. A. Kindell; R. F. Morley. (L. F. Hayer has sent in acceptable answers to Questions 66, 67 and 68, accompanied with a request that he be therewith re-enrolled in the "school." So be it.)

(A) J. A. Zachritz replies, "The resistance of an overloaded conductor increases very rapidly. The power used to overcome this excessive resistance is transformed into heat. If the overload be too great, the heat thus engendered may (a) injure or destroy the insulation, (b) fuse the metal of the conductor, (c) cause a fire, establish permanent added resistance if the wire be seriously overheated. The power used in overcoming excessive resistance represents loss, which is registered on the meter and must be paid for. The reasons for fixing maximum capacity of wire is chiefly to avoid waste in electric power and danger from fire."

(B) W. C. Brown replies, "In a wire of fixed diameter the resistance to current flow may be increased by (a) lengthening the wire, (b) changing composition of wire so as to lower its conductivity, (c) increasing temperature of wire."

Rau and Evans answer, "In a wire of fixed diameter, the three things causing increase of resistance to current flow are (1) increase in length, (2) increase in current flow [Which is one way of saying increase in temperature.—F. H. R.], (3) increase in frequency, if an a.c. circuit, since that increases reactance."

Rau and Evans also call attention to the fact that on page 26, in answer to Question No. 94, it reads, "(b) As diameter of the wire of other conductor is decreased," which they say is evidently wrong. Correct. The word "wire of other, etc.," should read "wire or other, etc." Also four lines down from that "(a) Current flow is increased," should read "Current flow is decreased."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 73

(A) What attention does the driving motor transmission require?
(B) In general, describe what maintenance is required by speed control devices, and what is the greatest help in tracing their troubles.

To join the Bluebook School merely send in answers. Place name and question number upon first sheet. Address F. H. Richardson, No. 3 Tudor Lane, Scarsdale, N. Y.

(C) M. and J. Devoy say, "To ascertain resistance of a copper circuit, its temperature coefficient must be known and must be multiplied by the number of degrees it is away from normal (75 degrees F.), that product being added to, or subtracted from, the resistance at normal, according to whether it be above or below normal. But what this question relates to, I think, is resistance at normal, which may be calculated as follows: Multiply twice the length of the circuit by 10.79 (our Bluebook says 10.5, which is regarded as sufficiently accurate for such calculations as are ordinarily called for in projection circuits, and it simplifies "figgering," lowering the possibility of error therein), which is the mil-foot resistance of commercial copper at normal temperature. That result is then divided by the area of cross-section of the circuit wires, in circular mils. The final result is the resistance of the entire circuit in ohms. Note: This result represents merely the resistance of the conductors themselves, not including that of such power using devices as may be operated by current flowing through the circuit."

William C. Brown says, "To calculate the resistance of any copper circuit, its length must be known, and diameter and character of its wires. The formula $R = P \frac{L}{A}$ serves in general, R representing resistance, P the mil-foot resistance of the metal, L the length, and A the cross-section area of the wire. But since there are two wires in a circuit, the formula must read: $R = 10.5 \frac{L}{A} \times 2$, or $\frac{21\ L}{A}$."

(D) "Yes!" replies O. H. Schmidt. "Theoretically, if the current of air be of such temperature and volume as will keep the temperature of the wire at or below 75 degrees F., the current capacity may be increased in any amount. In considering this it must be remembered that increase or decrease in resistance of commercial copper is directly proportional to increase or decrease in the temperature of the metal. If this be true, then it also may be said: The increase or decrease in temperature of a wire (disregarding heat from outside sources) of commercial copper, is directly proportional to the increase or decrease of resistance. And as a wire's resistance increases as current volume increases, particularly when overload occurs, and this increase is made manifest in the form of increased temperature, if it be possible by aid of an air current to maintain temperature at or below 75 degrees F., current volume may be increased so long as that condition can be retained.

That is the theory, but in practice it would be difficult to overload a copper wire to any considerable extent without injury to the metal, because of the difficulty of keeping its temperature at or below 75 degrees. Moreover, once the temperature rises above that figure because of overload, the resistance and corresponding heat increases very rapidly."

All that Brother Schmidt says is perfectly true, but I think it does not quite fully state the case because (a) the effect of insulation is overlooked (though it is quite true it might be fairly assumed the question implied raw wire) and (b) the further fact that temperature rises very rapidly once the 75 degree mark is passed by reason of the fact that the metal itself cannot dissipate the heat with sufficient rapidity. Once the heat reaches contact with air at the conductor's outer surface it may be instantly blown away, but before that a high percentage of it must travel through the metal of the wire itself, and that takes time.

Cresson Smith Reports Southern Conditions Good

Business conditions for motion pictures and in general are "very, very good" in the southern states, Cresson E. Smith, sales manager for the southern and western division for Radio Pictures, said in New York as he arrived from a tour of Atlanta, Charlotte, New Orleans, Memphis, Oklahoma City, Dallas and St. Louis.

"The drought areas have benefited from early rains and snow," Mr. Smith said, "and crop prospects are excellent. Business in most lines is faring well and theatre box-offices reflect this generally satisfactory condition."

B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre to Cost $250,000

The B. S. Moss theatrical interests announced this week plans for construction of a theatre on Broadway, in New York, near 49th Street on the site occupied formerly by Churchill's famous restaurant. The new theatre, which will have 800 seats, will be primarily for two-a-day presentations and will cost "in excess of $250,000."

THE 14th YEAR of the World's Greatest Amusement Organization

The representatives of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have returned from their Annual Convention in California. They are bringing to exhibitors the exciting Production Facts of M-G-M's Season of 1937-38. M-G-M today is BIGGER than ever in personnel and resources, STRONGER than ever before in all its glorious history. It is the One and Only INSURANCE for great Entertainments consistently delivered. Many changes have taken place in many companies and exhibitors have suffered with those changes—but M-G-M with unchallenged aggressiveness and unswerving stability has marched steadily forward. Its only change has been GROWTH! You will be thrilled when you hear about M-G-M's Greatest Year, 1937-38!

A RUMOR IS BORN

PROCESSES for the creation of misunderstanding, the promulgation of prejudice and the formulation of error by our so very free and facile press was ably demonstrated the other day in the province of the motion picture by the attentions of the "Daily Washington Merry Go Round", a syndicated newspaper feature. That column reported, as published in the Daily Mirror of New York:

> "How badly the Roosevelt Administration misses having a friend in the Will Hays movie organization is illustrated by the recent attitude of that office toward a film opposing the President's court plan and glorifying the Supreme Court. Motion Picture Czar Hays, who was Harding's postmaster general, has gratuitously sent out a special letter urging movie distributors to play up this particular film.
> "Note—Roosevelt's son-in-law, John Boettiger, once was in the Hays organization, now is publisher of Hearst's Seattle Post-Intelligencer."

That sounds exciting and conveys that suggestion of penetrating revelation which the columnist school of journalism so abundantly enjoys.

If true, it would be in the nature of big news and "hot copy". If Mr. Hays were ever caught that far off first base in either a political or a motion picture situation, it would also be a new chapter in American history. Mr. Hays is a specialist in not writing that sort of letter about anything to anybody.

EXAMINATION of the facts indicates that what the authors of the "Merry Go Round" column, Mr. Drew Pearson and Mr. Robert S. Allen, were dealing with was some misinformation—gathered, who knows where?—about a short picture entitled "Servant of the People", produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation. The picture was conceived about two years ago, went into production about eighteen months ago and did not have, and could not have had, in contemplation the recent Supreme Court issues of the Administration. The picture is patriotic in character and if it could be said to have any bearing on today's issue it would be susceptible of interpretation on the President's side in that the film gives the spectator to understand that the Constitution was created with anticipation of amendments to meet changing conditions.

Mr. Hays' "letter" seems to be the "Merry Go Round's" label for the printed matter issued by "the Hays Office" in its frequent and customary endeavour to bring various pictures of merit to the attention of Better Films groups, educators, women's clubs, and the like, as in the instance of "A Midsummer Night's Dream", "Romeo and Juliet", etc.

As to relations between the motion picture's trade association and the Administration, Mr. Pearson and Mr. Allan are apparently not informed. The relevancy of their note about Mr. Boettiger's sojourn of employment in the Hays Office does not appear in their copy. The fact, however, does have some relevancy and is one of several manifestations of a better understanding in the White House of the motion picture than obtained in the days just prior to the invasion of the National Recovery Administration Code. Since then the President has had from several sources information, and possibly advice, about the merits of the status quo and its personnel.

THERE are two, and possibly three, men—not named on this page—with expert interior knowledge of the motion picture, from production to policy, who have frequent and confidential contact with the President.

The motion picture is not in politics. "The gentleman from Indiana" is so much an authority and expert in both politics and the motion picture that he will not be found putting them together.

If the motion picture screen becomes a political medium it will be by influences outside the amusement industry, which would prefer to go on selling entertainment.

MR. GABLE'S VINDICATION

WE are not naive enough to be surprised, but can none the less be annoyed by the fact that, when a woman from overseas invaded Hollywood with preposterous charges that Mr. Clark Gable was the father of her child, the newspapers found it a pretty nifty story tor detailed and conspicuous attention, but that when this week the woman was sentenced to jail for fraud it was much less of a story, brief and suitable for a back page.

Obviously enough the chance to discuss the sex life, real or alleged, of a world famous player, makes tasty reading from the point of view of today's journalism, which is largely vaudeville-on-paper.

That this same world famous player, with his millions of feminine admirers, was not involved as charged just spoils the story. Headlines are not made of virtue.

"Chain" Tax Looms

The Pennsylvania Senate amended the LaRue chain-store bill to include theatres and renamed it the "Store and Theatre Tax Act." The bill had been passed by the House without specific reference to theatres, and it has been expected that Governor George H. Earle will sign it if approved by the Legislature. Although 21 states have enacted anti-chain legislation, this is the first time theatres have been defined as falling in the chain-store category.

The LaRue bill provides for the licensing of all stores or theatres by the Department of Revenue. The tax is graduated from $1 upon one store or theatre as follows: $5 upon each additional store or theatre not to exceed 5; $10 each from 5 to 10; $20 from 10 to 15; $30 from 15 to 20; $50 from 20 to 30; $100 from 30 to 50; $200 from 50 to 75; $250 from 75 to 100; $350 from 100 to 200; $450 from 200 to 500; $500 each in excess of 500.

Pennsylvania's two-year-old emergency theatre tax of 1 cent on every 25 cents of admission price expires automatically May 31.

Since introduction of the bill in January the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea company, the American Stores company and other organizations have conducted a defensive campaign against the measure entailing the use of seven full page advertisements in practically every daily and weekly newspaper in the state. This campaign will be continued and it is understood that constitutionality of the measure will be challenged in the courts.

Minsky Blackout

Strip-tease sequel—Two of the Minsky brothers, Herbert K. and Morton, who have been among the leaders in the field of burlesque for twenty-five years, have announced at their offices in the Oriental Theatre, Broadway and Fifty-second Street, that they would no longer be connected with or produce burlesque performances.

Instead they made public their intention of staging a "high-classed variety revue" featuring Negro artists at the Oriental Theatre.

New Title Device

United Artists announced development of a method for eliminating superimposed translation titles from the picture frame of foreign language productions, long a pain in the eye for audience and industry.

The glad tidings are spread on page 72.

Circuits Expanding

Major theatre circuits signified awareness of improved business conditions by expanding their holdings to take in 100 houses by purchase, lease or construction. Thus is resumed the course abandoned when depression influences put an end to property acquisition and, in some cases, brought about relinquishments. Circuits principally represented in the present move are Loew's, RKO, Paramount and National Theatres, the Twentieth Century-Fox affiliate.

The news is set forth on page 13.

"Captains Courageous"

"Captains Courageous" followed "The Good Earth" into the Astor theatre, New York, Tuesday night, on a roadshow basis. So brilliant was the turnout, socially and professionally, that two pickets who sought to demonstrate their sympathy with Hollywood strikers were crowded off of the sidewalk in the arc-lighted rush. Jay C. Flippen, conducting the microphone ceremonies with assists by Radie Harris and Si Seadler, introduced Will H. Hays, Louis Sobol, Bennie Fields and others. Among those present were Nicholas M. Schenck, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Churchill, Colvin Brown, C. C. Moskowitz, Arthur Hornblow, Jr., Myrna Loy, Loretta Young and Sam Berger.

Covering the Coronation

American newsreel companies made history of their own while England was crowning her king on Wednesday. More than 40 camera crews exposed 100,000 feet of negative along the line of march.

A complete reporting of the coverage, called the greatest in newsreel annals, is published, with pictures, beginning on page 38.

MGM Accessories

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer took up at its coast convention and tabled for further study a proposed plan for the handling of advertising accessories similar to those adopted by Paramount and Warner Brothers some months ago. Al Lichtman, assistant to Nicholas M. Schenck, and William F. Rodgers were among those returning to New York from the coast meetings.

Sentenced for Fraud

Mrs. Violet Wells Norton, convicted of using the mails to defraud Clark Gable in sizeable amount on a charge disproved in court, was sentenced to serve a year in jail. The court directed federal immigration authorities to take charge of the case when she is released from prison.

The Convention Serial

Universal and Grand National, meeting simultaneously next week in the Ambassador hotel, Los Angeles, will be the fourth and fifth in this year's list of convention holders. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Monogram opened the parade of 1937-38 product last week and Warner Brothers executives and salesmen carried on this week in New York. Twentieth Century-Fox and Republic will open their conventions on May 30th, also at the Ambassador.

The general story of conventions starts on page 53*; the Warner details are on page* 59.

CBS Counts Radios

The Columbia Broadcasting System, hardly to be suspected of understatement in a matter of this kind, revealed totals arrived at in its 1937 radio census placing the number of American "radio families" (a trim phrase) at 24,500,000.

More box car figures on page 71.

Libel by Radio

Bearing indirectly but pointedly upon the matter of responsibility for libelous utterances via any and all media, a bill sponsored by the Iowa Association of Broadcasters and exempting Iowa broadcasters from liability for defamatory statements made during broadcasts by persons not directly connected with the stations was passed by the legislature and signed by the governor.

Nazis Take Over

With completion of steps involved in the taking over of screen control by the German government with Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels as master of the industry, resignations were accepted from business members of the boards of Ufa-Film and Tobis and control passed into the hands of actors and directors.

For more about this action and the government's plans for continuing the "ideological" film bloc against Hollywood, turn to page 52.

More Light for Less

J. E. Kewley, vice-president in charge of the General Electric Company's incandescent lamp department, informed utility engineers at a convention in Cleveland of a new electric bulb capable of giving 10 per cent more light without using more current. A shortened, extra-coiled tungsten filament is used, increasing lighting efficiency by reducing heat waste. Lighting efficiency has increased in the past 50 years from 3 per cent, achieved by Thomas A. Edison in his first electric lights, to 12 per cent.

Himber Timbre

Stowing his baton but not his press agent, Richard Himber, an orchestra leader, paused in Washington to lay before "the boys on the Hill" a plan for extracting an additional $6,000,000 annually from the motion picture industry. He, or his press agent, explained that stars distribute about 60,000,000 photographs a year and a dime tax on each would add up like that. His press agent, or he, didn't say who'd collect it or how. And one of them, or maybe both, said Chairman Pat Harrison of the Senate Finance Committee would take the matter under advisement. It was the press agent, though, who told everybody that his boss gets 400 requests for photographs every week, himself, in person, so help him.

British Quota Action

The new British Quota moved closer to a decision this week before the prodding of Dr. Leslie Burgin, Parliamentary secretary of the Board of Trade, who set May 26th as the deadline for the joint recommendations of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, the Kinematograph Renters Society and the Film Group of the Board of Trade, representing the producers.

The story is on page 78.

Kent Returns

Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, returned to New York Tuesday from Europe, where he conducted the company's foreign sales convention in Paris, and announced that at least 30 of the 69 pictures to be released by his organization this year will be "A" product. Mr. Kent said he has not had any further offers for his company's holdings in Gaumont British and did not spend more than 10 minutes discussing the situation while in England. "Things are very quiet in this regard," he said, mentioning meeting Isidore Ostrer and John Maxwell of GB, adding, in connection with his company's handling of GB films here, "There is also no change in the domestic GB situation for the present, but I'll know before July 1. By that time I'll know what GB intends to sell here."

Propaganda Pictures

The New York American, engaged in concert with other Hearst newspapers in what reporters refer to as a "war" against propaganda pictures, listed five organizations with a gross and possibly somewhat overlapping membership of 2,500,000 as participants in a campaign against "subversive films." They are the American Legion, the Elks, the Legion of Valor, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Knights of Columbus.

More about this on page 80.

Talent Strike Averted

After a series of meetings staged with appropriate ado and a plethora of publicity, the Screen Actors Guild arrived at a satisfactory meeting of the minds with producers' representatives and decided not to strike. This irked leaders of striking studio craft unions, who continued their picketing of the studios and talked of extending the parade, by means of recruited sympathizers, to take in the far flung approaches to the nation's box offices.

Details of the settlement with producers and subsequent activities and announcements of the craft unions are given on page 15.

Legislatively Speaking

The Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives authorized Representative Samuel Hobbs of Alabama to appear before the Rules Committee and urge that his resolution calling for a general investigation of the motion picture industry be brought to the floor for debate. Other measures pertaining to screen affairs engaged the attention of state legislators in California, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Maine, New Jersey, New York, Ohio and points west.

Legislative developments are dealt with on page 71.

SEC Recommends

The Securities and Exchange Commission recommended legislation providing for Congressional control of corporation reorganizations. The commission's suggestion was based on a 31-month study of the general procedure followed by bankers and stockholders' committees in reorganizations of record, the case of Paramount Pictures being cited as typical.

The matter is covered on page 65.

Production as Usual

Hollywood studios, picketed or not, were busy places as production spurted sharply upward from a level of 46 to 51 pictures in work. Thirteen were started and 8 finished while conferences continued on every side and an amusement hungry world patronized theatre box offices in habitual disregard of goings-on backstage.

The production story of the week is on page 41.

The Allied Program

A first draft of the program for the annual convention of the Allied States Association, May 26-28, informed that sessions will be devoted to a full discussion of trade problems and practices and recommendations for action on the organization's product-buying survey now in preparation.

Air Regulations

Walter Vincent, chairman of the radio committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, said his organization will work out its own set of regulations for control of radio broadcasts offering screen personalities or material and submit it to motion picture executives at a meeting May 18th. If agreement is reached at that time, a second meeting will be arranged with radio representatives invited to sit in.

Developments are noted on page 42.

LARGE CIRCUITS ADD 100 HOUSES IN NEW EXPANSION

Producer Affiliates' Expansion, as Earnings Rise, Is Chiefly in New York, New England, and in the District of Columbia

Independents Protest While the MPTOA Contends That Independent Circuits, Instead of Producers, Are Leading Move

Expansion moves undertaken by circuits this year, noticeable throughout the country but concentrated chiefly in the New York, New England and District of Columbia territories, has resulted in construction or acquisition through leases or other arrangements of approximately 100 theatres by the producer-distributor affiliated circuits alone.

The expanison follows a long period during which decreased net earnings, reorganizations of some companies and retrenchments in all fields held at a standstill new theatre construction and acquisitions by the large circuits. From 1930 to 1936 reorganization of either the parent companies or theatre affiliates in the cases of Paramount, RKO and Twentieth Century-Fox precluded normal activity in the extension of theatre holdings. Now, however, favorable earnings reports and increased theatre admission receipts have caused executives to turn their attention to consolidation and expansion in the field of exhibition.

In the New York area Loew's and RKO are extending their holdings with the announced intention of consolidating their first-run positions, and independent circuits are in a race for houses in suburban towns. Loew's is building one theatre, is planning to build two others, has purchased one house and leased another. RKO is building four and has acquired six others through purchase or lease.

Warner's Building Program

An extensive building program laid down by Warner Brothers provides for eight new theatres in Washington, D. C., four of which have been opened. Others are planned for Chicago, Philadelphia, Cleveland and Fulton, Ky.

National Theatres, Twentieth Century-Fox affiliate, through its subsidiaries has acquired 11 houses in various sections of the country and plans to build two others.

Among the Paramount theatre partners the Interstate circuit has announced plans for construction of eight houses in Texas, Mullins & Pinanski has bought six theatres in New England and other acquisitions have been made by Balaban & Katz, Famous Players Canadian, Central States, Tri-States, Saenger, Intermountain and M. E. Comerford.

Antagonism on the part of independent exhibitors to the plans of Loew's and RKO, on the ground that they will result in a monopoly of both first-run and subsequent situations, placing the present subsequent-run houses still further down the line, was voiced in a recent issue of the Independent, official publication of the Independent Theatre Owners Association. It was hinted that an appeal would be made to the Federal Trade Commission to halt further expansion.

IATSE CONTINUES UNIONIZATION DRIVE

The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees is pressing its drive to organize all "front of the house" employees in theatres and all exchange workers in key cities throughout the country.

Organization of ushers, doormen, cashiers, night cleaners and candy girls in theatres in Providence, R. I., Boston, Mass., and Madison, Wis., was reported this week in addition to centers previously organized.

Exchange unions were reported progressing toward 100 per cent membership in Cincinnati, Kansas City and Seattle. The new unions, in all cases, are chartered as affiliates of the IATSE.

"Regardless of statements to the contrary," the ITOA said, "the theatre expansion moves of Loew's and RKO in New York are regarded by independent exhibitors as aimed directly at them and they foresee drastic inroads into their business if the expansion goes ahead."

The ITOA charged that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's sales policies and the Loew expansion moves were made "purposely with the express view of having an exclusive Loew run on all MGM product in New York." Independent operators were quoted as saying that the length of the protection period in New York is the worst of its kind in the country and will be aggravated by the acquisition of additional subsequent-run theatres by Loew's and RKO.

"Local exhibitors are not sure what moves they will make to combat the circuits' plans," the ITOA added, "but are assured that the Federal Trade Commission will interest itself in the matter."

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, on the other hand, contended that independent circuits, rather than the producer-owned theatre groups, are leading the expansion move. Compared with 2,397 affiliated circuit houses on January 1, 1937, there were 3,910 theatres operated by independent circuits, Edward Kuykendall, president, said. Affiliated circuit operations are approximately as follows: Loew's, 130; Paramount, 1,300; RKO, 110; Fox, 144; Warners, 460.

The MPTOA's figures were quoted in connection with a statement that legislation divorcing production and distribution from theatre interests can not be of any benefit to the independent exhibitor.

"There were 2,435 affiliated circuit theatres in 1931, and this year there were 2,397 such theatres in the whole United States," the bulletin said. "There were five affiliated circuits then, five now. During this interval in every territory there has been an amazing growth in number and in size of the independent circuits, until today 3,910 theatres are under such operation. It is just possible that the wrong circuits are being blamed for crowding out the individual theatre operator, as it appears that there has been little or no actual expansion of the affiliated circuits during the past six or seven years."

New York is the most active sector in expansion, with both affiliated and independent circuits increasing their holdings substantially. RKO has acquired the Parkway, a 600-seat house, in Mt. Vernon, N. Y., has purchased two sites in the east Bronx on which theatres will be erected soon, has arranged to take over two Randforce theatres in Brooklyn on Labor Day, and has pooling deals in progress for houses in Manhattan and Jamaica. This week the circuit was to close a deal with Sam D. Cocalis for the Park Hill and Broadway theatres, Yonkers, N. Y., and was reported to have reached an agreement with Herman Sussman for the Central, a new house also in Yonkers.

The two sites for new theatres are at Allerton and White Plains avenues and at Sound View and Westchester avenues, the Bronx. Both locations are considered excellent for neighborhood theatres. The new houses will each seat 1,800 and building contracts are ready for signatures. The circuit also plans to build a 4,000 seat house at 23rd street and Eighth avenue, New York, which is expected to be ready for September opening.

In addition RKO has contracted with Walter Reade to operate jointly a theatre which will be built at South Broad street and Maddock avenue, Trenton, N. J. With completion of negotiations the circuit will have 50 units in Greater New York.

Loew's Plans to Build Three

Loew's, Inc., is building a 1,100 seat house at Fenton avenue and Boston road, the Bronx, which is expected to be ready for opening in August. The circuit has purchased a site on Roosevelt avenue, Jackson Heights, L. I., and is reported to have an option on another site at Woodside, L. I.

The Dyckman theatre in upper Manhattan will be taken over by Loew's on a 15-year lease, from Sol Silver, which goes into effect September 1st. The circuit in addition has acquired the Cameo, New Rochelle.

Independents in Race

Sam D. Cocalis, whose circuit has a house in Hudson, N. Y., followed an announcement that the American Community Theatres, headed by Walter Reade, would build a 600-seat house in that city, with the statement that the Cocalis circuit would construct a number of theatres along the Jersey coast in situations now covered by Reade houses. Mr. Cocalis said he planned to invade Asbury Park, Long Branch and Red Bank.

Mr. Reade recently announced building plans for Toms River, Morristown and Trenton, N. J., and Saratoga Springs, N. Y. Mr. Cocalis within the last month has taken over the Casino, 1,200 seat house at Keansburg N. J., and on June 12 will open the Farley, a new 700 seat theatre, in the same town.

The Brandt circuit, operated by Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York, has taken over the Polk, at Second avenue and Twelfth street, New York, the 79th Street, at 79th street and second avenue, and the Rogers in Brooklyn and has started construction of a new house at 231st street and Broadway, New York.

The Bronxville and Scarsdale theatres in the suburban towns of like name were taken over this spring by George Skouras of Skouras Theatres.

New construction in New York City includes a 1,700 seat house at Graham avenue and Meserole street, Brooklyn, to be operated by Randforce Amusement Corporation.

Warner Brothers to Build Eight

Warner Brothers plans to build four new theatres in the Washington, D. C., territory at a cost of $2,000,000, according to John J. Payette, zone manager for the circuit. Neighborhood houses, seating between 1,000 and 1,500, will be built in Tenleytown, Bethesda, Silver Springs and northeast Washington.

The program is an extension of plans announced in December, 1935. Since that time four new houses have been added, the Penn, Uptown, Sheridan, and the Calvert, which was opened on May 6th. With the new additions the circuit will include 20 houses in the territory.

The Warner circuit also plans an 1,800 seat theatre in the exclusive Shaker Square section of Cleveland, on a site selected when the Van Sweringen brothers laid out the shopping center in the suburban residential section. A smaller, 500 seat house, was built this spring on Market street in Philadelphia, and plans have been announced for two 900 seat theatres, one in Chicago, the Road, and the second, a $75,000 project, at Fulton, Ky.

Paramount Partners Expand

Mullins & Pinanski, Paramount theatre partners in the New England field, has begun an active expansion move, the most important development in which has been acquisition of the Eggleston Square, Roxbury, Mass., and the Fairmount, Hyde Park, Mass., from Walter B. Littlefield, vice-president of the Independent Exhibitors of New England.

M & P recently closed with Edward Rosen for the State at East Milton, and has agreed upon terms for taking over the Waltham at Waltham from Joe Druker. The Bayside in Hull was reopened in April, having been acquired from Daniel Murphy, operator of the house for the last 25 years. The circuit is reported planning to construct a new house in Hyannis, summer community on Cape Cod.

New expansion moves, in addition, are reported to be under way following court approval recently of the purchase by New England Theatres, M & P subsidiary, of Olympia Theatres' assets for $4,000,000. The purchase added 30 houses to the circuit's operations.

Interstate Plans Eight

The Interstate circuit, now a permanent partnership between Paramount and the Karl Hoblitzelle-R. J. O'Donnell interests, is planning the construction of eight houses in the Texas territory.

The strength of the circuit has been increased in the last two years by construction of 12 new theatres and acquisition of others from independent operators.

B & K Adding Holdings

Balaban & Katz is extending its holdings in the Chicago area through long term leases with independent operators. The circuit recently completed an agreement with Peter M. Kalleres, president of the State Amusement Company, for operation of the State, now under construction, and the Grand in Gary, Ind. The State, a 1,300 seat house, will be ready for opening in August.

The circuit also has leased the Valencia, Evanston, from William F. and Dorothy H. Krahl for 25 years and last winter was successful in bidding for a lease of the McVickers, de luxe Chicago Loop theatre, for 30 years from the Chicago Board of Education.

Agreement with A. H. Blank

A tentative agreement which would bring A. H. Blank's Central State circuit into an operating combine with the Tri-States circuit, owned jointly by Paramount and Mr. Blank, was reached at the convention of Paramount partners in Miami last March. The combination would include more than 70 theatres in Iowa, Nebraska and southern Illinois.

Central States recently acquired the Park and the Lake theatres in Clear Lake, Ia., and bought the 400 seat Cass theatre at Plattsmouth, Neb., and Tri-States is seeking a site for a first run theatre in Omaha, Neb.

Intermountain Acquires Four

Acquisition of the Orpheum and Studio theatres in Salt Lake City and the Crest and Strand in Provo, Utah, by Intermountain Theatres, was announced recently by Harry David, general manager of the circuit. The houses were purchased from Fox Utah Theatres company. Intermountain now operates the Capitol, Paramount and Victory in Salt Lake City and 22 other houses in Utah, Idaho and Montana.

Famous Players Canadian, Paramount partner in Canada, is constructing new theatres in Woodstock, Ontario; Sarnia, Ontario and Hull, Quebec.

Dixie Corporation, an affiliate of the Saenger Theatres, recently bought the Jewel in Morgan City, La., from Dave Boudreau. Saenger also this spring opened a new theatre, the Delta, in Greenville, Miss.

M. E. Comerford, circuit operator and Paramount partner in Pennsylvania and New York, plans two new houses in the Scranton, Pa., territory.

J. H. Cooper Enterprises several months ago acquired the Federal and Rex theatres in Denver.

20th-Fox Affiliates Active

With acquisition of the seven Harry Huffman houses in Denver on long term leases, Fox Intermountain Theatres invaded the downtown first-run situation for the first time. Previously the circuit had only second-run houses. Four of the Huffman theares, the Paramount, Denver, Aladdin and Broadway, are first-runs. The circuit now operates about 60 theatres out of Denver.

Fox Midwest plans one new theatre and improvements on two others in the St. Louis area. The new house, at Mt. Vernon, Ill., will seat 1,200 and will cost $150,000. The circuit's theatres in Jacksonville, Ill., and Moberly, Mo., will be remodeled. Midwest recently acquired full ownership of Tower and Downtown, first-run theatres in Kansas City, Mo., from William Reinke.

Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises, Fox subsidiary, controls 50 houses in the Milwaukee territory compared with 43 last year. The circuit, in addition, is building a 999 seat house in Milwaukee to be ready this summer.

Evergreen State has acquired the D. and R., 1,000 seat house in Aberdeen, Wash., and the Weir at Hoquiam.

Independents Acquire Houses

The Ike Libson and Maury White interests last week were reported negotiating for from 40 to 50 theatres in Kentucky. Leases have been signed for the Ross, at Cynthiana; the Sam Lee theatres at Winchester; Grover Scott's theatres at Harlan and Pikesville; and the Otto Brown theatre at Middlesboro.

John Elio and Annabelle Ward of the Phoenix Amusement Company also were reported negotiating for additional Kentucky theatres after obtaining options on several. They recently built theatres at Hazard, Middlesboro and Corbin, Ky.

A. J. Balaban and Sam Meyers, operators of Balaban Theatres, Inc., are planning to add seven houses, most of them in suburban districts. Headquarters of the new circuit are in the State Lake Building, Chicago.

Four theatres are being built in the Denver territory, three in New Mexico and one in Colorado Springs. Westland Theatres is constructing a $50,000 house to seat 450, in Colorado Springs. Bason & Wheeler is building another in Mesilla Park, N. M., to be called the Mission. Bartlett & Sons is putting up a third at Artesia, N. M., and H. S. Farley has opened his new La Sendia in Barelas, N. M.

THEATRE PICKETS ANSWER GUILD REBUFF TO STRIKERS

Federated Crafts Try Boycott When Actors Guilds' Demands for Preferential Shop and Higher Pay Are Met

Striking Hollywood studio workers, united in the Federated Motion Picture Crafts, turned momentarily from their picketing this week to hurl bitter epithets at the Screen Actors' Guild, on whose aid they had counted, and turned to plans for a nationwide theatre boycott for which they claimed the support of powerful labor unions not connected with the motion picture industry and including units of John L. Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization.

In New York, one of the first cities to feel the drive, pickets marched in front of Broadway motion picture houses, starting Tuesday night. The marchers carried signs reading, "Please do not patronize this theatre. Help us win the Hollywood strike." Most of them were members of District Council 9, Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators.

The executive board of the United Automobile Workers in Detroit, a CIO union, debated whether to call 300,000 automobile workers to boycott theatres in the motor capital.

For the first nine days of the strike the actors, appropriately, held the center of the screen as the deciding factor in the dispute. At a mass meeting in its first stages they voted to conduct separate negotiations with producers but threatened to join the makeup men, hairdressers, scene painters, plumbers, machinists and cooks unless the conferences resulted in a prompt acceptance of their demands, including a preferential shop. As negotiations progressed, they kept Hollywood's nerves taut with the conduct of a secret poll which, it was made known, showed that 99 per cent of their $250-a-week (and up) membership favored an immediate walkout if the producers temporized. The producers did not.

A second mass meeting last Sunday night in the Legion Stadium, at which extras and bit players jostled and were jostled by stars in ermine and silver fox, all gravely conscious of the attention focussed on them by employers and labor, was transformed into a wildly jubilant Hollywood party when Robert Montgomery, president of the Guild, announced that every request had been met by the producers at a conference which had concluded only an hour before.

Announcement Cheered

Cheers, described even by the Associated Press as "thunderous," rose from the 4,000 Guild members who jammed the stadium as Mr. Montgomery shouted the news that most of the major studios had agreed to their demands.

"It was a sellout," were Charles Lessing's first words on hearing the announcement of the Guild settlement. "The heat is on now. I'll break every star who passes through a picket line."

CARTOON STUDIO WORKERS STRIKE

The Max Fleischer studios, 1600 Broadway, New York, producers of the animated cartoons, "Popeye" and "Betty Boop", remained open this week in spite of a walkout by 100 employees. The strike was voted by members of the Commercial Artists and Designers Union, officials of which said studio operation had been halted. Mr. Fleischer said this was not the case.

Theatre Boycott Planned

Later in the week and more calmly Mr. Lessing announced plans for the picketing of theatres in New York, Detroit, Chicago, Boston, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Minneapolis and St. Paul. He said 340,000 men and women would be organized for picket lines and predicted that within a week an army of 2,000,000 would be carrying on the campaign against theatres showing pictures produced at any of the ten major Hollywood studios.

The strike leader said the support would come from the CIO and the International Painters' Union, whose Hollywood organization is one of the crafts on strike.

In a letter to Mr. Lessing, Pat Casey, labor representative for the producers, offered a wage increase to the striking painters and volunteered to open negotiations with the other crafts if they would return to work. No mention was made, however, of the issue on which the unions struck, recognition. The strike committee refused to negotiate unless the producers first granted their demand for a closed shop.

Although Mr. Casey denied the IATSE had conspired with producers to break the strike Federated Crafts announced that proof of such collusion would be filed with Towne Nylander, regional director of the National Labor Relations Board. William Cullen, president of Federated Crafts, also will appeal to the executive boards of the Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators and the American Federation of Labor, claiming that the IATSE encroached on the striking crafts' jurisdiction.

Hollywood police placed more than 250 extra guards around the studios and ordered reserves to be prepared for an emergency call on Monday, but the picket lines were quiet and stars and extras alike passed without hindrance. The patrolling strikers were in strange contrast to the usual labor representatives with a grievance. Instead of the workingman's overalls the pickets were garbed in sport shoes, slacks and gay sweaters, and in many cases were indistinguishable from autograph hunters or star-struck youths.

Four minor disturbances in which a truck was overturned, one studio workman was beaten and two others attacked, were reported by strike leaders, who emphatically disclaimed responsibility for them.

"The picket lines have strict orders to molest no one," Mr. Lessing said two days after he had threatened Guild members who passed through the picket lines. "We will continue to picket the studios, but the concentration now will be on the theatres.

Leader of Eight Striking Unions Says Guild "Sold Out" as Producers Sign on Actors' Terms

Holds No Animosity

"We hope, unless our demands upon the producers for a union shop are met, to spread the theatre boycott to other sections of the country and to have more than 2,000,000 pickets on duty within the next ten days."

The strike leader added that he would have liked to have had the actors' support but held no animosity toward them.

Federated Crafts was reported as looking upon the Guild-produced agreement as advantageous to the strikers. It was pointed out that if the actors had walked out the producers would have been forced to call a 12-week contract suspension under the "Act of God" clause. Now the producers must keep production under way with what labor they can get or violate their contracts with stars, it was claimed.

The Guild during the week encountered little opposition in signing up the individual studios for a Guild shop as had been agreed with the producers' committee. The statement of agreement released by the committee included six producers, Columbia, RKO-Radio, Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Universal and Twentieth Century-Fox. Immediately after the statement was published Samuel Goldwyn announced that he was "shocked" that his name had not been included.

Warner Brothers, David O. Selznick, Walter Wanger and Hal Roach signed at once. Jack Warner, vice-president in charge of production at Warner Brothers-First National, landed in New York on Monday and announced his "full sympathy and accord with developments."

Leaders of the Guild announced that their membership had jumped from 5,600 to 7,000 since they had made a verbal peace agreement providing for a Guild preferential shop. Among the top flight stars reported to have signed up since the mass meeting on Sunday night were Jean Harlow, Lionel Barrymore, Marlene Dietrich and Greta Garbo.

Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone, Frank Morgan and Jean Hersholt are among those who have been active in the Guild since its inception and they were prominent on the speakers' stand when Mr. Montgomery announced the settlement.

In addition to the preferential shop the agreement included a minimum of $5.50 a day for extras doing mob scenes, instead of the previous $3.20. Extras receiving $7.50 to $15 a day will receive a 10 per cent increase and records of the Central Casting Bureau will be open to the Guild to insure against the employment of non-Guild actors.

Preferential Shop Explained

Explaining the terms of the preferential shop agreement, Kenneth Thomson, executive secretary of the Guild said:

"Guild shop does not mean closed shop, as so many people believe. Guild shop merely means that no one may work before the camera who is not a Guild member in good standing.

"The Guild agrees with the producer that new talent, new faces are necessary, and we

Standing on the headlands of anticipation the world's showmen again, for the twenty-second season of 1937-38, scan the horizon of the new product pages of Motion Picture Herald for the argosies of announcement from the producers and distributors.

As the galleons of old sailed with their burthens of pearls and silks and spice, "ivory, apes and peacocks," so do each year the pages of Motion Picture Herald come bearing the inventories of that filmy dream stuff of which box office gold is made. This is the time of the buying, the time when the wares of tomorrow are to be held to the light in the market place, weighed, estimated.

Each year, as surely, seasonally as the coming of the May-wine, as the blossom-time, the fifteen thousand six hundred and seventy-two showmen readers of these pages turn here by their annual custom and habit to see what the show year ahead holds in prospect.*

EVERY great picture, and substantially every picture that ever played, has been first revealed in these pages to the showmen of the world. This is where they look for the product, this is where they find it. These are their pages. Their attention has made them so.

Picketing Follows Guild Settlement

do not intend to restrict those seeking opportunity on the screen. We merely insist that they join the Guild and be governed by the same rules that apply to other players.

"The Guild will contract to accept as a member without examination any one a producer may desire to engage and will further contract never to impose a prohibitive initiation fee."

The announcement of the settlement by Mr. Montgomery at the meeting was the signal for a scene for which Hollywood reporters in attendance used some of the descriptions they usually reserve for outstanding Hollywood fetes. William Randolph Hearst's Los Angeles Examiner devoted pages one and two to detailed description of the scene, and said:

"Jumping to their feet, stars throwing their arms around the shoulders of unknown players shouted and applauded to the rafters.

"As the crowd surged from the stadium many of the stars, their emotions elevated to a high pitch, stopped to kiss the hundreds of youngsters, autograph books in their hands, who awaited the adjournment. . . .

"As they left the stadium many of the stars hurried to cafes and homes of their fellow players, where impromptu but jubilant 'victory' parties lasted until the early morning hours."

Mayer Diplomat

The suspense created by actors' threats to strike kept nerves on edge in Hollywood and throughout the industry and grew during the week which preceded the meeting. As the producers' committee, including Joseph Schenck, E. J. Mannix, Hal Wallis and Samuel J. Briskin, held nightly meetings with the Guild representatives, reports were rife that a strike was inevitable. Only at the last minute was an accord reached.

During the tense moments of the week Louis B. Mayer, MGM vice-president in charge of production, earned laurels as a diplomat. At the company luncheon to convention delegates on Monday it was his duty to introduce the stars to the guests. His introduction for Mr. Montgomery, the Guild president, was, "My friends, here's my friend Bob Montgomery. A great actor, a great boy. His career has always been with this company. I hope and pray it always will be. He's just made a great hit in 'Night Must Fall.' He's going to be great in many other pictures we have lined up for him."

He came to Franchot Tone, "A young fellow who has turned from the opportunities of a great business family to cast his lot with us. MGM is the only studio to which he has been under contract. We here think a lot of him. You've seen him in some great performances, 'Mutiny on the Bounty' and others. Tonight you'll see a great Franchot Tone in 'They Gave Him a Gun.' "

For top billing Mr. Mayer saved Joan Crawford, who was seated at his left. "A little girl who has been with us a long time. She's gone on to great fame. Let's give her a big hand."

Painters Picket In Times Square

The threat of striking Hollywood studio workers to throw picket lines in front of the nation's theatres was made good in New York for an hour on Tuesday night. At eight o'clock pickets carrying placards urging support of the strikers by a theatre boycott appeared in front of first-run theatres in the Times Square area.

In one instance the marchers were lost in the usual shuffle of theatre-goers. At the Kleig-lighted opening of "Captains Courageous" at the Astor, police, occupied with keeping autograph hunters in line, allowed one picket to patrol in front of the theatre but little attention was paid to him.

Between 200 and 300 members of the Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators, affiliate of one of the first Hollywood crafts to walk out, participated in a parade through Times Square before they assumed their picket stations.

By nine o'clock the marchers had disappeared from in front of the theatres.

Al Friedlander Dies Suddenly

Al Friedlander, 46, independent distribution executive, died unexpectedly Wednesday noon in New York, from heart trouble. Few knew that Mr. Friedlander had been ailing. The end came while he was presumably resting on a lounge in the office of his attorney, Arthur S. Friend, in the RKO Building at Rockefeller Center.

Mr. Friedlander was born July 7, 1891, in Chicago, where he attended Thomas Hoyhe Manual Training School. He entered theatricals with a stock repertory company, leaving the operation of a projection machine in a small Chicago neighborhood theatre. His work in stock brought him to Continental Vaudeville Exchange, where he served until 1913 as talent manager.

In 1913 Mr. Friedlander became a film salesman for the old Pathe company in Chicago, working later with Celebrated Film Players' exchange, also in Chicago, until the World War. Returning from France in 1919, he was appointed general manager of the American-French Aero Exposition, returning to films a year later as New Jersey manager for Merit Film Exchanges.

Harry Thomas, independent distributor, formed a partnership with Mr. Friedlander in 1927 and organized First Division Exchanges, states right distributor. First Division was the forerunner of the present Grand National Pictures, through participation, financially, in First Division of Pathe Exchange, Inc., March of Time, and others who had been interested in establishing a new national distribution system principally for the release of March of Time. Mr. Friedlander in that period originated the basic sales plans for the Time newsreel, and served First Division as vice-president, in charge of sales promotion, advertising and publicity.

When the present Grand National absorbed First Division, last year, Mr. Friedlander went along with the new company, remaining, however, for only a few months, when his contract was purchased. Immediately he organized Fortune Film, a combination film distributing system and sales promotional company for the handling of independent product. One of his first acquisitions was "Robber Symphony," British-made.

Mr. Friedlander first gained recognition some five years ago through the campaign he put on in behalf of "Goona-Goona," a South Sea Island picture.

Mrs. V. J. Guthrie has been reelected president of the Charlotte, N. C., Motion Picture Council.

RCA Opens Annual Sales Convention

RCA Photophone sales executives, district managers, sales representatives and service supervisors from all parts of the country converged on Indianapolis Wednesday night for a three-day sales convention at the Lincoln Hotel.

In addition to RCA Photophone's own executives, there will be talks by theatre and equipment company heads during the sessions and at two banquets which are to be held at the hotel. These include Lester Isaac, sound projection supervisor, Loew's, Inc.; Sid Samuelson, former president of Allied States; E. C. Zrenner, chief engineer, Interstate Circuit; Harry Brandt, president, I. T. O. A.; Frank Cahill, sound projection supervisor, Warner Brothers; Dan D. Halpin, vice-president, Dictograph Products, and Herbert Griffin, vice-president, International Projector.

The Photophone men will inspect RCA's new manufacturing plant. Edwin M. Hartley, RCA Photophone head, opened the sessions Thursday and will officiate as chairman. Edward Auger, Photophone sales executive, will act as vice-chairman. The program includes a discussion of technical field service matters; an address on hard-of-hearing devices by Mr. Halpin; an address on projection equipment by Mr. Griffin, and another on theatre acoustics. Mr. Zrenner, Mr. Isaac and Mr. Samuelson will speak at the banquet Thursday night. The party will be taken by bus to the Sanders theatre to hear the new RCA High Fidelity sound equipment recently installed there.

Friday will be spent at the RCA Indianapolis plant. After an opening address by Vance C. Woodcox, RCA sales executive, Dave J. Finn, Photophone advertising manager, will outline the company's advertising and sales promotion plans for the year. Max C. Batsel and C. N. Reifsteck, Photophone engineers, will explain the technical features of High Fidelity systems.

The principal speakers at the banquet Friday evening are Mr. Brandt and Mr. Cahill. This will be followed by a visit to the local Loew's theatre to listen to a demonstration of the latest in High Fidelity sound recording utilizing RCA's push-pull and ultra-violet light methods. Included will be some of the music recently recorded by Leopold Stokoski, orchestra director, at the Philadelphia Academy of Music for use in Universal's forthcoming picture, "One Hundred Men and a Girl."

Omaha Bans "Tobacco"

E. R. Cummings, district manager of Tri-States theatres, which has rented the Paramount theatre at Omaha for a showing of "Tobacco Road," stage play, has been advised by Mayor Dan Butler that the play will not be allowed in Omaha. A precedent for the action was the upholding of a similar ban in Chicago by the Illinois supreme court.

Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., and subsidiaries Tuesday reported in New York for the quarter ending March 31 a net profit of $229,704 after depreciation and tax deductions. This is equivalent to five cents a share on 524,973 shares of common stock.

TIME MAGAZINE PRAISES:

“‘Turn Off the Moon,’ first effort of cinema’s only woman producer, Mrs. Fanchon Simon, was not planned in the grand manner. By all the gauges Hollywood uses to measure a picture’s importance, such as cast names, expensive sets, and the fame of writers and directors, it should have remained merely a modest little musical for double bills. By a rare cinematic accident, it successfully refutes its sales bracket. Its gags and tunes are good, its patter fast. Above all it has the unprefigured value which is generated in a musical when most of the participants are young enough to enjoy their opportunities with relish, and the proceedings are not grave enough to numb them with anxiety concerning the results.”

DAILY VARIETY RAVES:

“With an excellent farce comedy basis in the story idea, a cast which is on its toes every moment, capital direction and smart exploitation of its production resources, ‘Turn Off the Moon’ has been fashioned into top-notch entertainment of widespread

THE CUTTING ROOM

You Can't Have Everything

(20th Century - Fox)

Romance, Comedy, Music

The recipe which Twentieth Century-Fox uses for its musical comedies—names, novel story, music, dancing, spectacle, comedy and romance—has proved itself. There's plenty of reason to expect it will prove itself again in this case.

First for names. "You Can't Have Everything" will offer Alice Faye, whose work in "Wake Up and Live" enhanced her prestige considerably; Don Ameche, who rapidly is gaining favor; the already very well publicized Gypsy Rose Lee, Charles Winninger, Rubinoff and his violin, and the Ritz Brothers. It adds the values of Anthony Martin, Joan Davis, Frances Drake and Arthur Treacher. In specialty numbers it will present Samuel Green, Red Fraser and Ray Winfield (Tip, Tap and Toe). Less important roles will be occupied by George Humbert, George Davis, Frank Puglia, Frank Yaconelli, Nick Moro, Wally Vernon and Inez Polonge.

The story is by Gregory Ratoff. Harry Tugend, Jack Yellen and Karl Tunberg devised the screen play. Music and lyrics are by Jack Gordon and Harry Revel. Norman Taurog, whose specialty is comedy, is the director.

The motivating story is comedy romance. A girl who was doing all right for herself as music counter clerk in a hill billy town comes out of the west to New York with ambitions to become a famous playwright. She meets Broadway's ace musical comedy producer, falls in love with him, and runs away when she believes he is married. As the situations develop, the girl who wanted to be an author becomes what she never dreamed she would be, a great actress, queen of comedy.

Release date: Between August 15 and September 15.

Mountain Music

(Paramount)

Comedy-Melodrama

From a strict showmanship standpoint, the intelligence displayed in selecting the leads for this picture sets it radically apart from the routine production. No two players in the business, certainly no two on the Paramount lot, have advanced so far in public favor as Bob Burns and Martha Raye. Virtually unknown a year ago, they have, today, what is the hope of every player, great followings in big city deluxe houses and rural theatres.

The material for their first co-starring production also was shrewdly chosen. In theme the story is hill-billy comedy melodrama, in which the comedy ingredients predominate. It has Burns, as an occasional amnesia victim, running out of marriage with Terry Walker and thereby precipitating a mountain feud. He falls in love with Martha Raye, to him "the most beautiful girl in the world." But his disappearance has caused pecks of trouble for his brother, John Howard, and Miss Walker.

While most of the action centers about these players, the supporting cast also has name value. Included in important parts are George Hayes, a fixture in the "Hopalong Cassidy" series, Jan Duggan, Fuzzy Knight, Spencer Charters, Arthur Hohl, Charles Judels and a host of lesser lights.

Production detail in the feature carries from rural Arkansas mountain locales to the luxury spots in big cities. Sam Coslow accounts for most of the music and lyrics used, but Al Siegel is credited with the music of one tune.

The story is an original by MacKinley Cantor, into which Bob Burns managed to weave much of his own particular brand of humor, and four writers collaborated on the screen play. The director, Robert Florey, recently made "Outcast" and "Hollywood Boulevard."

Release date: June 4.

Rustlers Valley

(Paramount-Sherman)

Action Melodrama

Although the production of Clarence Mulford's "Hopalong Cassidy" stories no longer includes James Ellison in the cast, the combination of William Boyd, George Hayes and the newcomer, Russell Hayden, who made his screen debut in the last number of the series, seems to be carrying on effectively. As was its predecessors, "Rustlers Valley" is being planned to include those elements of melodrama, comedy, thrill, action, semi-mystery, skullduggery and suspense that have proved so acceptable to so many theatre goers. Well produced as were the others, with finely photographed outdoor backgrounds, accentuating the motivation, this also will be an outdoor picture.

This time, circumstantial evidence forces the pair whose roles are taken by Boyd and Hayes to believe that the third character, played by Hayden, is implicated in a bank robbery. His disappearance complicates the case. But Boyd goes to work. Contact with an unscrupulous lawyer, played by Lee Cobb, arouses his suspicions. To prove these, Boyd frustrates a brazen bit of cattle rustling, discovers Hayden in hiding until he can clear himself and in the ensuing chase finale forces Cobb to show his hand. As Hayden is exonerated and the girl's ranch saved, Cobb and his henchmen are jailed.

Based on a Mulford story, the screen play is by Harry O. Hoyt. Nate Watt, who has directed several of the Hopalongs, is again at the helm. In addition to the principal group, Muriel Evans is the girl and other players who will be seen are Oscar Apfel, Stephen Morris, Ted Adams, Al Ferguson and John Beach.

Release date: July 2.

It Could Happen to You

(Republic)

Melodrama

Out at Republic, where the desire to gain recognition as a major producing studio is rampant, director Phil Rosen is convinced that in "It Could Happen to You" he has the combination of story value and player strength that will hasten that recognition. In character, the story is crime melodrama, through which is woven a thread of conflicting love interest, with both angles hinging on a new topical idea in story construction.

A boy, anxious to get into the business of making American citizenship easy for aliens (really a racket), kills his best friend. With the money gained by his crime, he buys the school. But one of the bills that was stolen has been torn and pasted together. The newspapers make much of this bit of circumstantial evidence, and when the seller discovers it in his roll, he forces the boy into the alien intimidation racket. Romantic complications lead to his arrest for the crime. Defended by his pal, the murder victim's son, he is cleared. Bound to kill the man who turned him in, he fails, but when the mob is about to wreak its vengeance on the man who defended a killer, he saves the situation, confesses his guilt and sacrifices his own life.

The leading players, while not magnetic names, are either on the way up or are favorably known in many theatres. Alan Baxter is the boy and Al Shean the man he murdered. Owen Davis, Jr., is Baxter's chum and Shean's son. The girls in the story are Andrea Leeds and Astrid Allwyn. Walter Kingsford is the heavy. The support includes Christian Rub, Elsa Janssen, Edward Colebrook, Stanley King, Nina Campana, Frank Yaconelli, John Hamilton and Paul Stanton.

The story is an original by Nathaniel West, who collaborated with Samuel Ornitz on the screen play.

You Can't Beat Love

(RKO Radio)

Comedy

Light comedy unfolded in the heat of a small town political battle and to the accompaniment of romantic fireworks is the story told in this forthcoming production. The central character is a wealthy play boy who never backs down on a dare, no matter how hilarious or dangerous. The action carries him from one ludicrous situation to another, and as this action involves all the complications common to a small town election, comedy and romance are the essentials that should vie for audience attention. The story seems to be full of potentialities for unique showmanship, and there will be a roster of players that should prove attractive.

Ordinarily presented in serious roles, "The Plough And The Stars" and "Sea Devils" of late, Preston Foster will be seen in the leading role. His flair for comedy was demonstrated in "Love Before Breakfast." Of much importance when the question of names is being considered is Joan Fontaine. First noticed in "Quality Street," her feature debut in "The Man Who Found Himself" was impressive, and she should not be overlooked in any publicity campaign on this production. In support of the leads, producer Robert Sisk has rounded up quite a number of favorably known names. Important parts are in the hands of Herbert Mundin, Paul Hurst, Berton Churchill, Bradley Page, Ethel Wales and Paul Guilfoyle, and three comparative newcomers, William Brisbane, now in "Shall We Dance," Alan Bruce and Richard Lane. Others are William Burress, Barbara Pepper, Frank M. Thomas, Milburn Stone and William Corson.

The picture is being directed by Christy Cabanne. The story appeared recently in Liberty Magazine under the title "Quintuplets to You." The screen play is by David Silverstein, who was associated with "Don't Tell The Wife" and "Criminal Lawyer."

Columbia Shows $1,189,354 Gain For Nine Months

Columbia Pictures, and its subsidiaries, this week reported a net profit for the nine months ended March 27, 1937, of $1,189,354.86, after all charges. This compares with a net profit of $958,578.63 for the same period ended March 28, 1936.

The company reported a net profit for the quarter ended March 27, last, after all charges and provisions for federal income taxes and other taxes of $559,582.93.

The profit for the three months to March 27, this year, was equal to $1.61 per share of common stock on the 316,358 shares outstanding at the closing date of the quarter. The nine months' profit was equal to $3.27 per share, which compares with $2.54 per share for the nine months ended March 28, 1936. The common share equivalent has been determined after allowing for deductions equal to the dividend requirements on the outstanding preferred stock. No provision has been made for the tax on undistributed profits.

The balance sheet of the company shows current assets of $11,037,957 and current liabilities of $1,511,408.88. Working capital was estimated at approximately $9,500,000.

Railroad Station Features Theatre

The Grand Central Theatre, featuring newsreels, short subjects and cartoons, and situated opposite Track 17 on the Upper Level of New York Grand Central Railroad Station, opened Tuesday to an invited audience. The 242-seat house was built by John Sloan of the architect firm of Sloan and Robertson in New York, in association with Donald Bayne, W. Wallace Lyon and Harold A. Ley.

The house cost approximately $125,000 to construct. The architects pointed out that elevators have been built to serve customers from the lower level of the station, that air-conditioning is installed, Acousticon equipment available and that the decorations were done by well-known artists.

The walls of the auditorium are of simple knotted pine, splayed out every third board or so in order to eliminate echoes. They are backed by acoustical plaster. Audiences enter from the side and in the rear, under the projection booth, is an inglenook, with an unpretentious fire place and room for a couple of easy chairs or 70 standees.

The theatre will be open daily from nine in the morning until midnight and hopes to draw most of its patronage from commuters, among others, who missed trains and have time to kill before their next one.

South Station in the heart of Boston, Mass., is the only other railroad station to have a theatre installed and that particular house has now been in operation for several years.

WARNER PROFIT SET AT $3,900,000

Net profits for Warner Brothers and its subsidiaries are expected to total about $3,900,000 for the six months ended February 27, 1937. The second quarter which ended on that date is expected to show a profit of more than $1,750,000. For the same six months of last year the net was slightly less than $2,000,000. Because of the absence of Harry M. Warner, now in Hollywood, it is unlikely that a directors' meeting will be held next week at the home office.

KAO, B. F. Keith Profits Increase

Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, and its affiliate, the B. F. Keith Corporation this week reported increased net profits for the first 13-week period of this year as compared to the corresponding period of 1936.

KAO reported a net profit of $512,803 after all charges except surtax on undistributed profits for the 13 weeks ended April 3 as compared with a profit of $274,049 for the corresponding period a year ago, and is equivalent to $7.97 per share on the 64,304 shares of seven per cent cumulative convertible preferred stock outstanding, or 33 cents a share on the 1,206,381 shares of common outstanding.

For the 53 weeks ended April 3, KAO and its subsidiaries showed a net profit of $1,539,495 after all charges except surtax on undistributed earnings. This is equal to $23.94 per share on the preferred.

	13 Weeks ended April 3, 1937	13 Weeks ended March 28 1936
Profit before provision for Depreciation and Income Taxes	$803,259.30	$521,103.59

The 13 weeks this year showed $145,536 increase in net profit over the similar period.

Burlesque Again Hit by Courts; Trial Cancelled

Burlesque throughout New York City this week received two severe legal setbacks in its fight to reopen its fourteen theatres, all of which were closed by police when License Commissioner Paul Moss refused to renew expired licenses. Justice Samuel I. Rosenman of the supreme court denied the application of three of the theatres for a mandamus to direct Commissioner Moss to renew the licenses. When the petition for the mandamus was argued the court expressed the opinion that a jury trial would be necessary to determine the case. Later, however, it was announced that a subsequent reading of the record of the recent proceedings of the hearings before Mr. Moss had disclosed that there was "no necessity" for a trial.

Meanwhile, two officials of the Oxford theatre in Brooklyn and five young women performers who were arrested in a raid on the house April 29 pleaded not guilty Monday when arraigned before County Judge John J. Fitzgerald in Brooklyn, on an indictment charging presentation of indecent exposure and "willfully and wrongfully committing an act which openly outraged public decency." No trial date was set set.

As the Dunnigan Bill awaited Governor Herbert Lehman's signature in Albany to make it a law permitting the revocation of licenses, or refusal by licensing authorities in the state to issue theatre permits for one year to theatres conducting immoral shows or exhibitions, various theatrical organizations in New York assailed the measure.

Representatives of the League of New York Theatres, the Critics' Circle, Actors' Equity, the American Federation of Musicians, the Theatrical Press Representatives, the Theatrical Press Unit of the Newspaper Guild and various theatre unions met Tuesday morning at the League offices to form a unified front against the Dunnigan Bill. The meeting was to consider also enlisting audiences in the first and Governor Lehman was asked to hold a public hearing on the bill. Support by the public was requested.

The stage groups contend that the failure of the measure to set forth what proof of an indecent performance is necessary gives the license commissioner an arbitrary censorship power over the stage. They also contend the bill was "railroaded" through the legislature without a hearing as a result of the recent public indignation against burlesque.

Paramount News Merged With Paramount Pictures

Under a general program of simplification of its corporate structure, Paramount Pictures this week merged Paramount News, Inc., and the Paramount Forty-Third Street Corporation, owning exchanges in New York and Buffalo and the newsreel laboratory, with the parent company.

Norman Westwood, manager for Universal Pictures in China for the past 15 years and now visiting in New York, said this week that his plans had been changed and that he would return to the Orient.

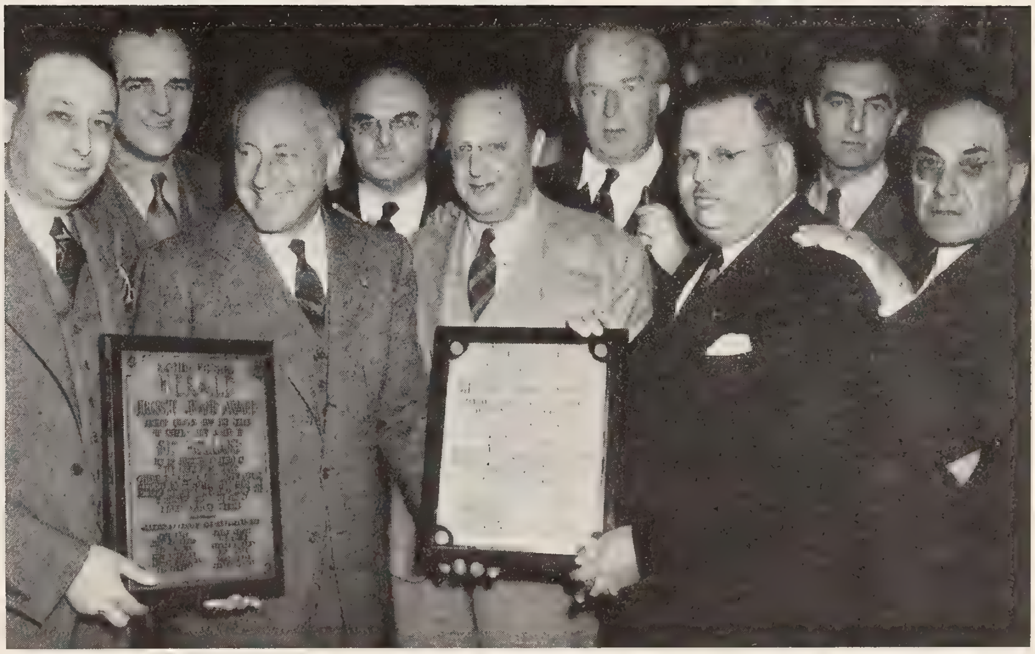
Quigley Award Winners See Hollywood

QUIGLEY Grand Award winners of 1936, L. A. Chatham of the Sooner theatre, Norman, Okla., and Sid Holland, Elco theatre, Elkhart, Ind., saw Hollywood last week as guests of Quigley Publications and received their Silver and Bronze Plaques, respectively, presented by Cecil B. DeMille after a ceremonial dinner at the Hotel Roosevelt. Jesse L. Lasky acted as toastmaster, introducing Dr. A. H. Giannini, Ned E. Depinet, Sol Lesser, E. A. Alperson, Harry Sherman and others. A-Mike Vogel, secretary of the Managers' Round Table Club, and Red Kann, editor of Motion Picture Daily, represented Quigley Publications in the speech making.



Among those present at the dinner were Sid Holland, Bronze Plaque winner; Ned E. Depinet, vice-president of RKO Radio; Cecil B. DeMille, Paramount producer; A-Mike Vogel, MOTION PICTURE HERALD; Jesse Lasky, RKO Radio producer; Harry Sherman, Paramount producer; L. A. Chatham, Silver Plaque winner; Edward Peskay, Grand National sales manager; and Dr. A. H. Giannini, president of United Artists.

Messrs. Holland and Chatham were welcomed by Darryl F. Zanuck (and that's the left to right of it) on their visit to the Twentieth Century - Fox studios.

'REELS COVER CROWNING IN COLOR AND TELEVISION

Cameramen in Silk Toppers Record Event from Atop Tomb of Ancient Kings; Americans Set Precedents

by TOM CUMMINS

General Manager, British Paramount News

AT THE CORONATION, LONDON

American motion picture cameramen in high silk hats and formal morning attire, working from atop the tomb of an ancient king—where they had slept the night.

Two hundred floodlights, suspended from the roof and walls and dazzlingly reflected in the million-dollar jewels of the crowns of royalty and the nobles.

Camouflaged pillars with hidden cameras in them, with only their long lenses protruding like periscopes.

These and many other strange sights not on the official rehearsed program greeted the proud and privileged few who thronged Westminster Abbey in London on Wednesday to witness the pomp and pageantry and heraldry of the crowning of a British King and his Queen—a privileged few who included American motion picture cameramen, newsreelers in top hats and tails, cameramen from Broadway and America's byways, who are more familiar with the less formal filming of a Mississippi flood or an airplane crashing.

No story in the history of the newsreels of the world has undergone such extensive preparations and actual activities as that attendant the crowning of George the Sixth and Queen Elizabeth of the British Empire.

For the first time in history, the newsreels were permitted locations within the historic Abbey itself for actual scenes of the crowning. Official precautions were many, for there must be no mishap.

Hidden in camouflaged locations throughout Westminster were six picked camera crews, four for newspapers and two for the newsreels, recording from every angle.

The key location was the one atop the tomb of long buried kings, over which a booth had been constructed and appropriately decorated for concealing the camera and sound equipment. This location was less than six yards from the throne where the Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by the Archbishop of York, placed the crown on the head of George. By pre-agreement, Paramount News shot from this strategic location, giving prints later to the other American and British newsreels: Fox Movietone, Universal, Hearst News of the Day and Pathe.

Within the Abbey and all along the Coronation route, from Buckingham Palace to the Abbey and return, there were some 43 newsreel camera locations, covering every inch of the procession.

Each of the crews of the various newsreels stationed at these locations were required to

Newsreels Film Crashing Death In Hindenburg's Funeral Pyre

Cameramen from each of the five newsreels had their filming and sound equipment set up and focused three hours in advance of the arrival last Thursday of the ill-fated Zeppelin Hindenburg over Lakehurst Naval Air Station, and so were on hand to photograph the greatest catastrophe in commercial aviation history from start to finish. Tommy Craven, of Paramount News, filmed the crashing airship above, as the ground crew of 200 raced from under the burning bag. The shot is a "blow-up" from Paramount's regular newsreel release to theatres.

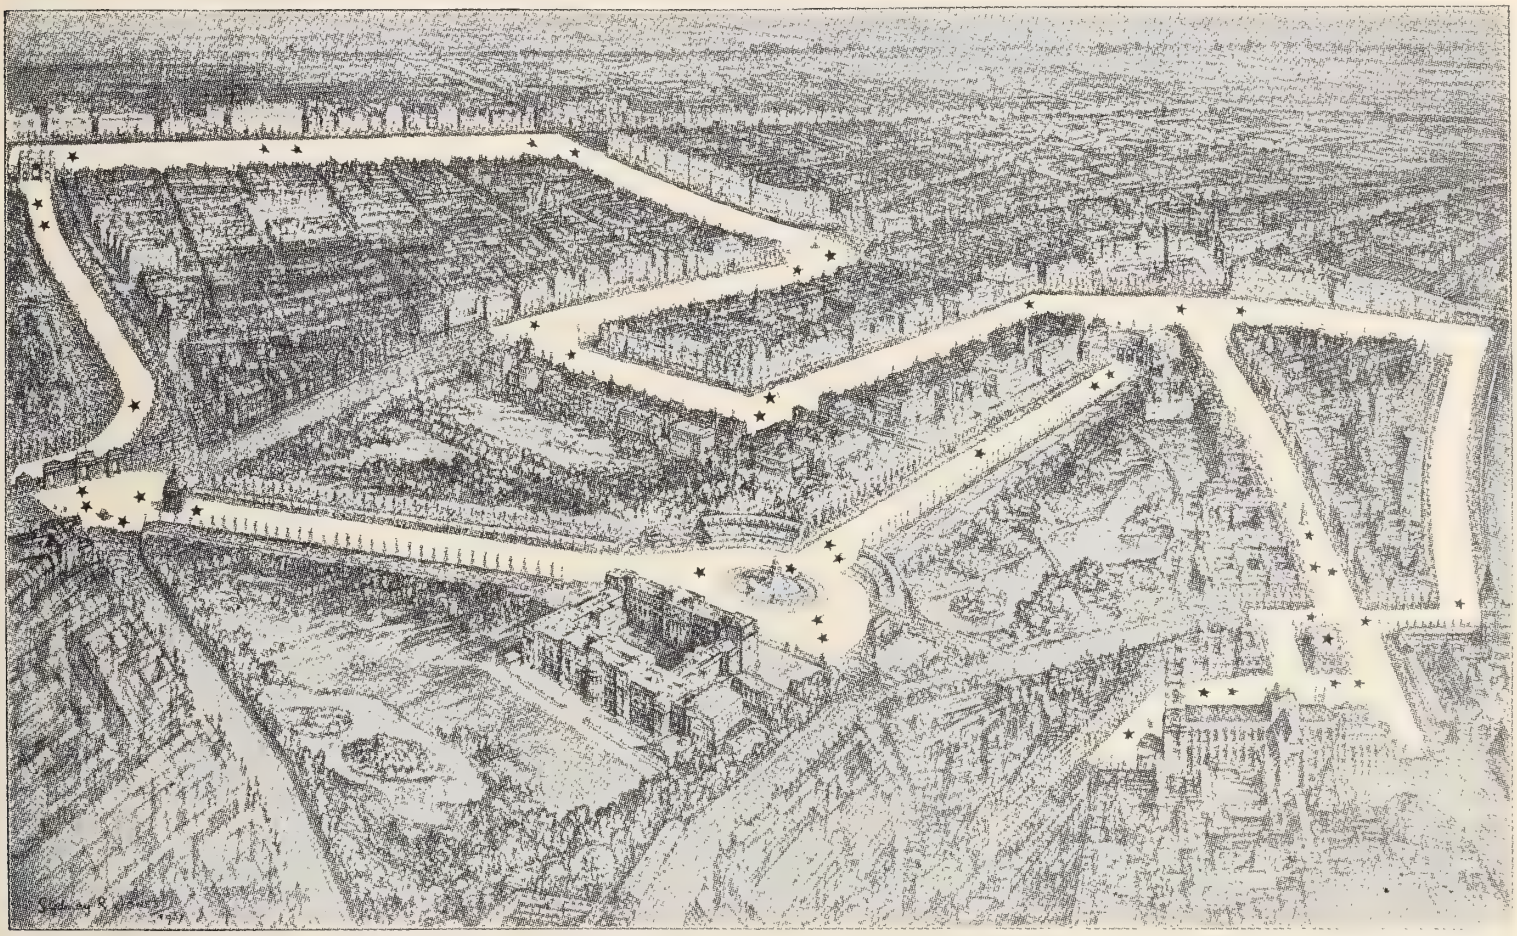
The disaster destroyed pre-Coronation newsreel pictures and pre-Coronation still photographs showing American newsreel photographers at their posts in London. The stills were taken by Paramount News over there one day before the airship sailed and were intended for exclusive publication in this issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Another development was the overturning of the newsreels' plans to fly back to New York their Coronation pictures on the Hindenburg's trip leaving Europe the day of the crowning. All transportation plans for Coronation newsreels had to be completely revised.

Had the Hindenburg not been on her maiden voyage of the year there probably would not have been either a newsreel or newspaper photographer at the scene. What with their presence, and cameras actually shooting as the ship came down the skyways, together with the Coronation coverage, the newsreels had what was probably the most active week in their history.

Credit for catching the realistic Hindenburg newsreel pictures goes to Tom Cravens, for Paramount; James Seeley, Rody Green and Irving Korenman, for News of the Day; Al Gold, Ad Tice, Dion DeTitta, Larry Kennedy and A. A. Brown, for Fox Movietone, and to William Deeke, Al Kalbfleich and Robert Donahue, for Pathe.

Newsreels all dispatched Hindenburg "specials" to theatres by plane, with additional costs estimated as ranging from $8,000 to $15,000.

Newsreel Cameras at the Coronation



The greatest concentration of photographers in all newsreel history recorded for screens of the world the Coronation Wednesday of King George VI and his Consort, Queen Elizabeth. Typical of the coverage obtained by American newsreels and by their British colleagues was that of Fox Movietone, the stars in the sketch above marking the locations of Movietonews and Technicolor cameras in the Coronation line of march. There are 43 newsreel locations, sketched from the air by a London Times artist, with Fox alone using some 175 camera and sound men and technicians photographing the historic event.

EARL MARSHAL AND ARCHBISHOP CENSOR THE FILMS

take up their positions at midnight on Tuesday, ten hours before the pageant started.

The early placement of the crews Tuesday night was necessary because all vehicle traffic in central London was stopped due to the immense crowds, estimated at 5,000,000, which thronged the line of march.

Each crew had two messengers with police escorts for rushing the films back to their own offices for editing and developing and distribution by chartered planes throughout the Empire, Europe, and, eventually to the United States.

The British Government allotted about a dozen official camera locations to the newsreels as community locations. Restrictions existed against any filming out on the road, all shooting being done from the sides, nor were any cameramen allowed to move ahead of or behind the procession. The other newsreel locations were purchased, camera locations along the route costing as much as $1,500 for a single room in a flat or hotel overlooking the route. As much as $300 was spent for seats in stands advantageous to the march.

The Duke of Norfolk, who was Earl Marshal of the Coronation, and the Archbishop of Canterbury, were on hand to censor the films Wednesday evening after they were printed, but before they were distributed. None dared break this restriction.

Hopes to get an early release were shattered when the Archbishop of Canterbury, Wednesday afternoon, after the crowning, decided that the inspection would not take place until 10 o'clock Wednesday night (5:00 A.M., E.S.T., Thursday). The new order jeopardized shipments of prints of the actual Coronation, earlier pictures of the procession having been cleared hours before.

Squadrons of fast planes were in readiness at London airports and the minute the censors approved the films, they were flown to all parts of England, France, Germany and the Continent.

The reels included special posed pictures of the new King and Queen, in their royal robes and crowns, which were made at Buckingham Palace after their return from the Coronation. These pictures were also made by Paramount News, which, again, by agreement, gave copies to the other reels.

The entire coverage of the Coronation ceremonies and procession was undertaken on a rota basis by the five American newsreels, each exchanging prints with the other. This was necessary because the Earl Marshal would permit only one camera in any official location.

It is estimated that with 40-odd newsreel cameras on the story and each cameraman shooting approximately 2,500 feet of film, a total of 100,000 feet was made of the Coronation by the American newsreels alone.

There was little sleeping by the various newsreel crews through Tuesday night, most of them studying editors' orders, as shooting was done to script, with all instructed to film only items requested, unless an unusual and unexpected incident occurred, in order not to choke the laboratories.

One serious interference to the actual crowning coverage was avoided when the newsreelers induced the Archbishop of

400 DO CORONATION PICTORIAL JOB

Canterbury to allow more leeway with camera movement from under the booth atop the tomb in the Abbey. The five other Abbey positions were well elevated for general views that were shot from tier upon tier of royal blue plush.

Every camera on the assignment had new Panchro lenses, including new 15-inch tested lenses. Just before the Coronation, the Paramount crew took delivery on a 42-inch lens, the largest cine lens in the world.

Three separate reels were made up and released on Coronation Day, as special service to British and European exhibitors.

The first reel showed the procession from Buckingham Palace to the Abbey, as the King and Queen proceeded to the Coronation exercises.

The next reel rushed out of the laboratories at London showed the spectacle within the Abbey, the actual crowning.

The third reel showed the procession back to Buckingham and the posed pictures of the King and Queen.

In most of the Empire theatres the three reels were eventually combined into a complete picture of the Coronation.

And over all of the filming the Earl Marshal and Archbishop of Canterbury exercised the strictest control, another manifestation of the intense determination of all England's officialdom that the Coronation should not lose dignity.

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The crowning of the King and Queen of England in London on Wednesday established a number of motion picture precedents. It marked the first formidable demonstration of television in the coverage of outdoor news events. It was the greatest mobilization ever made of the motion picture newsreel camera, on its first assignment covering the actual crowning of a monarch. And to all of this was added the application of color for the first time to the newsreel filming of a news event in the making.

The manner and method of transporting these newsreel scenes from Buckingham Palace and Westminster Abbey to the United States is another story forthcoming.

Supplementing the Movietone News camera crew from Twentieth Century-Fox at the scene of the crowning was a crew of Technicolor experts brought to London from America. Plans for this color coverage had been in work for months, Fox Movietone acquiring exclusive Technicolor rights to the procession and ceremonies. The color coverage "involves a staggering investment", according to Fox, and was approved by Sidney R. Kent, its president, when he was in London recently.

British Movietonews producers and technicians, directed by Truman H. Talley, Movietone head, in London from New York for the occasion, supervised the color photography, in conjunction with the Technicolor staff. Mrs. Natalie M. Kalmus, color director of Technicolor, traveled from Hollywood to the scene to assist.

Both Movietone and the color company had assembled some 28 units, manned by 175 workers, to cover the Coronation. They were mobilized from the British news organization, from New York, Hollywood and the Continent.

TELEVISION COVERS ENTIRE PROCESSION

by BRUCE ALLAN

in London

The whole of the Coronation procession was transmitted by the British Broadcasting Corporation—government controlled—in a television program lasting a full hour, showing the colorful parade from one fixed point, in long shots, mid-shots and closeups. Direct transmission by means of Emitron cameras connected to Alexandra Palace — home of British television — was made through a special mobile unit which enabled viewers to see the pageant at the moment of its occurrence—or, more precisely, 1/160th of a second later. And the eyes of millions of Britons were turned on the scenes from public television reception booths set up throughout the London area, where many saw the golden royal coach and the royalty on parade more clearly than the crowds in the streets because the television cameras got closeups.

Technical preparation for the televising cost the BBC some $100,000. This excluded, of course, the tremendous expenses incurred by its radio divisions in broadcasting the event. The television arrangements included the installation of a co-axial cable between the Alexandra Palace and the mobile unit on the spot. This, placed behind a park-keeper's lodge, consisted of three vans, containing the controls, power plant and a short wave radio.

At the office of the Duke of Norfolk—the Earl Marshal—those in charge of Coronation arrangements reported that 400 newsreel and newspaper photographers had participated in the filming, with only two newsreelers admitted to Westminster Abbey for the three-hour crowning ceremonies. Those not stationed in the Abbey camera booth atop the old tomb of kings were concealed in false pillars, painted to resemble the old stone work, while still others worked from hidden niches carefully blended with the Abbey architecture.

Unnamed British labor interests attempted to jeopardize, if not eliminate the Coronation filming positions of the American newsreels, calling on Ernest Brown, of the British Ministry of Labor, in the House of Commons on the eve of the Coronation to refuse permits for American newsreel technicians. It was asserted that 200 "competent British technicians" were out of work, inferring that they should be employed in place of the American staffs, but Sir Percy Harris replied that Hollywood would in all probability shut out British technicians in future if England shut out American crews.

The crowning of George the Sixth in a storybook setting with trappings and ceremonies traditional for centuries is the third opportunity of this character in commercial motion picture history. When Edward the Eighth acceded to the throne in 1901, films were still in their infancy. Motion pictures of the Coronation of the monarch in 1902 were presented by Charles Urban. The exterior scenes of the procession were genuine, but the actual ceremony in the Abbey was from a reconstruction of the event staged in Paris by George Melies.

George the Fifth's succession in 1911 found the motion picture better prepared technically. Newsreel pictures of the procession to and from Westminster Abbey are still in existence in film and newsreel libraries, but cameras were barred from the Abbey, however, and no pictorial record of the actual crowning is in existence.

The five newsreel companies have said they spent about $75,000 to cover the story. They were represented in their conferences with the Earl Marshal by Thomas Cummins, Paramount; W. J. Gell, Pathe; J. J. Jeapes, Universal; Sir Gordon Craig, Fox Movietone, and Jeffrey Bernerd, Gaumont British. Truman Talley of Fox and Jack Connolly of Pathe were the only two American executives to attend the ceremonies to supervise filming. Fox sent over Vyvyan Doner, its fashion narrator, to study that aspect for narration, and also sent Lowell Thomas for a running narrative while actual filming was in progress.

Transportation the Big Problem

Newsreel managements in New York had rested comfortably with the assurance that the Zeppelin Hindenburg would fly prints immediately after the crowning, for arrival in New York on Friday, but the flameburst of that ship at Lakehurst last Thursday evening cancelled that arrangement.

Since then, James Mollison, Dick Merrill, Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Beryl Markham and other internationally known aviators have been mentioned variously as either approached, negotiated with or actually signed to fly the films to America for one or another of the reels, at prices ranging all the way from $25,000 to $100,000 for the trip. As a last resort there remains the fast steamship Normandie, of the French line, leaving Europe the day after the Coronation, and arriving in New York Harbor on Monday, weather permitting.

Several Plans for Planes

Barred by unbending rules to eliminate competition for advantageous positions or exclusive shots, the newsreels were compelled to confine their rivalry to a race to reach the screen with the first prints.

Sir Gordon Craig, general manager of British Movietone News, reportedly had arranged with Colonel Lindbergh, Captain Mollison or Beryl Markham to fly the Fox prints from London to New York, with Sir Gordon himself riding as a passenger to personally escort the films.

The British Royal Air Force was mentioned as contributing a likely trans-Atlantic pilot for the newsreels; or, at least contributing pilots to ride prints throughout the Empire for the British distributors.

Captain Mollison and Mrs. Markham were reputedly approached by other reels besides Fox Movietone, but their price of $35,000 was said to be considered too high.

Dick Merrill's flight to London this week was reported in the press to be in the interests of Coronation still and newsreel pictures for the Hearst newspaper and News of the Day interests. Other reels approached Mr. Merrill before his takeoff, however, and refused to even consider his asking price of $30,000 for bringing back their prints.

Screen emphasis on pre-Coronation activities was, of course, stressed for weeks on American

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Cummings on Color

Says Irving Cummings, who directed "Vogues of 1938" for Walter Wanger, "If and when color supplants black and white, it's going to work just as much a revolution in picture production technique as did sound. Old faces are going to disappear from the screen. New ones are coming onto it."

There seems to be a lot of support for what Mr. Cummings has to say. When sound came and pictures began to talk, a number of outstanding players discovered that their voices did not register. John Gilbert was one. If color photography becomes general, it is not beyond the realm of expectancy that a lot of players who presently are in the top star brackets may discover that their faces and features don't register. Then the drive will be on for those who can photograph, in color, just as it was a decade ago for those who could talk.

Makeup manufacturers and proponents of color photography have been combining their scientific and research facilities to discover makeup applications which would be generally applicable to all players who have been invited to appear in color pictures. In many cases remarkable strides have been made. In others the results have been so disappointing as to be tragic. Famous players have been tested for roles in color pictures. They have been tested wearing all sorts of makeup applications, only to discover that the features which photographed so attractively in black and white were little more than indistinct blurs in color.

Since "Becky Sharp," remarkable progress has been made in color-photographing backgrounds and inanimate objects. The scenic artist has been having consistent innings. They have plotted and planned, and learned by experience, how to effect desirable contrasts. But theatregoers are becoming color conscious, learning to follow the action of the story without permitting an isolated background object to distract their attention, and the wave of amateur photography interest has also made them alert to the values of personal photography.

As the addiction to candid camera technique and still color photography gains momentum, it is affecting professional studio still photography almost as much as it is professional motion picture photography. Today amateur photographers are achieving effects that only a few years ago would have been considered as camera miracles if accomplished by experts.

In many ways the amateurs have caught up to the professional portrait photographers. Anxious to keep ahead, the professionals have advanced to the use of photo-electric cells and simultaneous flashlighting. Recently a "peeping-mike" has been invented. The device permits the still cameraman to remain at his camera and at the same time direct the arrangements of lighting so that the camera mounted on a traveling boom follows the movement of action. The device eliminates the necessity of posed shots. Thus the still photographs customarily used for lobby display purposes coincide with the direct action as it appears in the motion picture.

Many of the stills which MGM provided for "The Good Earth" were made by this candid camera method. Practically all that were distributed for "Woman Chases Man" were made in the same way. This still photographer did not have to bother the director or players or hold up production in order to get his shots.

RADIO HAS OWN PICKET TROUBLE

Just to make it unanimous, or because they don't like the attitude of William Simpson, construction chief, toward union labor, pickets patroled the rising Columbia Broadcasting System studio here May 10th and put a stop to the work by calling out the truck drivers and shovel operators. The picket parade numbered 200.

Production as Usual

Despite the rumors, alarms and actualities of an exciting week, the turmoil of labor strife apparently made little difference in picture production. Pickets continued their parading. Statements issued by picture executives on one hand and union leaders on the other fell like leaves in the Fall. Nevertheless thirteen new productions went into work.

Proving that he means to live up to his promise to deliver more pictures for next season, Samuel Goldwyn started two films during the week. "Hurricane," on which much background work has already been done in Samoa, started its Hollywood career. With John Ford directing, the film will present Dorothy Lamour, Raymond Massey, Barbara O'Neill, C. Aubrey Smith, Jon Hall Thomas Mitchell, Jerome Cowan, Mamo Clarke and Momita. "Dead End," will feature Sylvia Sydney, Joel McCrea, Humphrey Bogart, Wendy Barrie, Allen Jenkins and Claire Trevor. William Weiler is the director.

20th-Fox Starts Two

Two pictures also started at 20th Century-Fox. "Thin Ice" stars Sonja Heine with Tyrone Power supported by Arthur Treacher, Leah Ray, Allen Hale, Sig Rumann, Melville Cooper, Joseph Shildkraut, Elisha Cooke, Jr., Raymond Walburn, George Givot and Joan Davis. Sidney Lanfield is directing. In "Armored Taxi" Rochelle Hudson, Brian Donleavy, Barton MacLane, Robert Kent, Pauline Moore and Chick Chandler will be seen. Malcolm St. Clair is directing.

Darmour Productions started "Black Torrent." Jack Holt and Mae Clark are starred with Ray Walker, James Bush, Harold Huber and Grace Lem. E. B. Schoedsack is directing.

At Grand National "Riders of the Rockies" started. The cast includes Tex Ritter, Louise Stanley, Charles King, Snub Pollard, Harold Murphy and Heeber Snow. R. N. Bradbury is directing.

For Paramount release, B. P. Schulberg started "Let's Talk of Love." It will present Ann Dvorak, John Trent, Harry Beresford, Guinn Williams and Ralph Peters. Charles Vidor is directing.

"First Lady" started at Warners. Kay Francis and Preston Foster are the leads, with Veree Teasdale, Walter Connolly, Anita Louise, Victory Jory, Marjorie Gateson, Louize Fazenda, Marjorie Rambeau, Eric Stanley, Henry O'Neill, Sara Haden and Harry Davenport also in the cast. Stanley Logan is the director.

Columbia's new picture is "Flashing Skates." The cast lists Charles Quigley, Rita Hayworth. J. Farrell MacDonald, John Gallaudet, Max Hoffman, Jr., Paul Fix, Arthur Loft, Ward Bond, Harry Strange and Dick Curtis. D. Ross Lederman is directing.

Principal Pictures started "The Californian," a Sol Lesser production. Names in the cast are Ricardo Cortez, Marjorie Weaver, Katherine DeMille, Morgan Wallace, Nigel de Brulier and Helen Holmes. John Cromwell is directing.

"Drums of Destiny," seventh in the series of Crescent Pictures starring Tom Keane, also went into work. With Ray Taylor directing, Edna Lawrence, Bud Buster, Robert Fiske, Fafael Bennett and Carlos de Valdez are the principals supporting Keane.

RKO-Radio's "Take the Heir," will feature Guy Kibbee, Cora Witherspoon, Dorothy Moore, Gordon Jones, Russell Hicks, Frank M. Thomas, Paul Guilfoyle and Dudley Clements. Edward Killy is directing.

Eight Films Finished

Eight productions came off the active line, two of which, "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "The Life of Emile Zola," undoubtedly are already in the big picture classification. Whether Columbia was more afraid than any other studio of the possibilities of a strike is difficult to determine. Still the company finished three features. "Roaring Timber," a Larry Darmour production, will present Jack Holt, Grace Bradley, Ruth Donnelly, Raymond Hatton, Willart Robertson, Charles Wilson and Philip Ahn. Phil Rosen directed the second picture, "With Kind Regards," features Ralph Bellamy and Betty Furness with Robert Armstrong, Raymond Walburn, Thurston Hall and Marc Lawrence. Hamilton MacFadden directed. In "Taxi War" Don Terry, Rosalind Keith, George McKay, Ward Bond and Lucille Lund will be seen. C. C. Coleman, Jr., directed.

Two pictures finished at Republic. Seen in "Rhythm in the Clouds" are Patricia Ellis, Warren Hull, David Carlyle, Joyce Compton, Richard Carle, Zeffie Tilbury, William Newell, Esther Howard and Charles Judels. John Auer directed. "The Yodelin' Kid from Pine Ridge" teams Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette and Betty Bronson in the leads with LeRoy Mason, Charles Middleton, Russell Simpson, Tennessee Ramblers, Jack Dougherty, Guy Wilkerson, Frankie Marvin, Henry Hall and Snowflake. Joe Kane directed.

"The Prisoner of Zenda," Selznick-International, features Ronald Colman and Madeleine Carroll with C. Aubrey Smith, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Mary Astor, Raymond Massey, David Niven, Margaret Tallichet, Florence Roberts and Ian McLaren. John Cromwell directed.

Last of the completed films, Warner's "The Life of Emile Zola," offers Paul Muni, Gale Sondergaard, Bonita Granville, Joseph Shildkraut, Ralph Morgan, Donald Crisp, Gloria Holden, Robert Barrat, Paul Everton, Gilbert Emery, Harry Davenport and Erville Alderson as principals. William Dieterle directed.

MPTOA Plans Own Regulations Of Air Programs

The radio committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Inc., will seek to develop a definite program for regulation of all radio broadcasts using motion picture players or material at its preliminary meeting with producer and distributor representatives, and, if successful in this, will arrange a second meeting to include radio representatives to whom such a program will be submitted, Walter Vincent, chairman of the committee, said in New York last Saturday.

Mr. Vincent conferred late last week at the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., headquarters in New York, he said, and as a result of these conferences May 18 has been set as the tentative date for the preliminary hearing of the committee with motion picture executives only. The meeting is scheduled for early afternoon at the Hotel Astor on Broadway, but may be advanced to a luncheon session. Mr. Vincent said.

Invitations have been issued to heads of all the large production and distribution companies to designate representatives to send to the preliminary meeting. Although all replies are not in yet, only acceptances have been received.

Mr. Vincent declined to give the names of either companies or individuals whose acceptances have been received. He said it was possible that a small committee might be named to represent the production and distribution companies at the preliminary meeting in preference to sending representatives from all the large companies. Mr. Vincent's committee has a membership of four.

Paramount Holders To Meet on June 15

The annual meeting of stockholders of Paramount Pictures, Inc., is scheduled for June 15 at the home office in New York. At that time stockholders will elect six directors to fill the vacancies of those whose terms expire at that time.

Directors serving two-year terms expiring next month are Neil F. Agnew, Stephen Callaghan, Duncan G. Harris, John D. Hertz, Harry O. King and Charles A. McCulloch. Indications are that several of these will be proposed for reelection, although no official comment on candidates is available at this time.

To Motion Picture Herald:

Two persons, Mr. John Lester and a partner, have presented themselves operating a merchant ticket tieup to exhibitors in this section. The plan includes newspaper display copy, a trailer and other devices. Any theatre manager knowing of the whereabouts of Mr. Lester will confer a favor upon me by wiring me collect at once.

Condor Will Delay Pending SEC Action

Pending the acceptance by the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington of an amendment to the first prospectus issued by Condor Pictures no securities will be offered by Condor. A new prospectus has been filed and it is expected that it will be effective shortly, according to Don Hancock of Condor.

In a release issued by the SEC Tuesday the commission said that the original prospectus was incomplete in its failure to set forth a requirement under a studio leasing arrangement to the effect that the premises be used at least 100 days per year. The amended registration statement and prospectus disclosed that the minimum requirements had been stricken from the lease. In the commission's release it is said that the original arrangement was not definite.

Korda May Quit American Market

Alexander Korda, head of London Films, releasing through United Artists, arrived in New York Tuesday from England and admitted to reporters at the ship that he may quit making pictures for the American market because of the dissatisfaction with the returns from his pictures in this country. "I am not complaining about United Artists," he said, "but only about the big circuits. I fear and feel that the large first-class theatres in this country are not open to my pictures, which is not fair.

"I am not complaining about pictures like 'Rembrandt.' That's probably my fault," he added. "What I am talking about are the pictures which get the peak business in England and get nowhere here."

Mr. Korda went on to explain that, "I find a certain prejudice by the circuits here against feature pictures like 'Henry VIII,' 'The Scarlet Pimpernel' and 'The Ghost Goes West.' The results of these pictures in America are not nearly what good American films gross in England."

Mr. Korda denied that he was in America to secure finances and added that Prudential Life Assurance Company was still backing him. He said he planned to spend $8,500,000 for the 17 pictures this year and believed about 12 would be released on the American market. London Films is financially interested in the 17, but will release about eight with the company's name on them.

Three of the pictures will be in color, Mr. Korda also said. One of these is now in work, a second will be started in June with Merle Oberon and the third in October.

Mr. Korda will leave Manhattan for Hollywood immediately, where he will attend the annual United Artists board meeting which will probably be held Monday. He plans to sail for England May 26.

Marcus On Vacation

Morey Marcus, general manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in China, is now on his way to New York for a leave of absence which is expected to run for five or six months. Sydney Schwartz, company auditor in the Far East, will supervise distribution there during the absence of Mr. Marcus.

screens. But aside from that there was considerable additional attention paid to the crowning in regular screen channels.

United Artists is releasing "Preparing for the Coronation," a one-reel subject produced in England by Henry Matson. A running commentary accompanies the camera through London streets, hotels, and to the Tower of London where pictures were made of the crown jewels.

United Artists reported that popular interest in the Coronation was reflected by more bookings of British pictures by American theatres, simultaneously, than ever before.

A prelude picture to the Coronation was shown Tuesday at the British Empire Building, Rockefeller Center, New York, to both British and American state personalities. The pictures were compiled by Stone Film Library.

Warner Brothers' motion picture Coronation activities were probably the most widespread on this side, this company giving the largest national billboard campaign in its history, using 24-sheets in 1,400 towns, for its "Prince and the Pauper," which deals with a 16th Century struggle for the Crown of England. The release was timed for Coronation Week.

A print of "The Prince and the Pauper" was carried from the Warner home office to London for the Coronation aboard the U. S. S. New York.

Besides its newsreel coverage, the American motion picture business effected direct contact with the Coronation through the only broadcast of its kind attending the historical event, with leading British members of Hollywood saluting Britain's new monarch over an international radio hookup on the eve of the Coronation.

The program was broadcast through this country by National Broadcasting Company, and then short-waved to British Broadcasting in London. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., American actor, was master of ceremonies, having returned recently from producing in London.

With Mr. Fairbanks was Ronald Colman, Madeleine Carroll, C. Aubrey Smith, Raymond Massey and David Niven. Intentionally or otherwise, all of these players, including Fairbanks, are presently appearing in "The Prisoner of Zenda," for Selznick International Pictures, in Hollywood, from where the broadcast was directed. David O. Selznick greeted London on behalf of Hollywood and the industry.

American Films Lead In Chilean Imports

According to the Department of Commerce, out of 533 features imported into Chile during the 13 months from January, 1936, to February, 1937, 412 came from American studios and of the 703 newsreels brought into the country 613 of them were American. Germany was next on the list with 33 features sent to the Chilean market with England following with 25.

According to these figures, the United States supplied 83.1 per cent of the total importations of motion pictures for 1936 as compared to estimates of 85 per cent for 1935 and 97 per cent for 1934.

Jack Cohn to Coast

Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures, left New York for Hollywood Tuesday for a short stay to be devoted to pre-convention conferences at the studios.

FULL POWER OF ITS GREAT PERSONALITIES!

Again 20th demonstrates its show shrewdness by putting Robert Taylor in a strong virile, he-man role of a young naval officer brave enough to defy disgrace... and by giving Barbara Stanwyck a part that offers full scope to her emotional fire. These real-life sweethearts respond with their most brilliant performances... in this drama of the turn of the century... with all the turbulence, color, glitter and violence of those unruly days ... and of a love proud and courageous!

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 69

Bluebook School Question No. 69 was: (A) What is the voltage drop across a three-ohm resistor carrying ten amperes? Carrying two amperes? (B) What are "woofers?" "Tweeters?" (C) What is a "directional baffle" and why is it used? (D) Why are flat baffles used?

The following made acceptable replies: S. Evans and C. Rau; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; W. C. Brown; T. F. Bochert; C. Oldham; O. H. Schmidt; J. R. Prater; W. H. Edmonds; L. Cimikoski; H. Edwards; C. Lonie; A. Cook; M. and J. Devoy; W. Limmroth; J. A. Zachritz; H. B. Smith; T. W. Redhouse; C. L. Loft; D. Morgan; J. A. Eilers; A. L. Cooper; D. E. Birdsong; I. A. Eilers; L. F. Hayes; H. A. Ames, F. E. Dorp and R. Dennis; H. L. Lilly; B. B. Hornstein and R. R. Jacobs; B. and M. Walker; A. C. Greene; W. T. Singer; H. T. Plum and D. Shea; M. L. Grahame; P. and L. Felt; L. B. Knox, B. L. Lasser, E. M. Brown and D. Davis; J. H. Morton; O. Hunt; E. L. Sanford; F. L. and L. Savlor; R. S. Welch; L. E. Dodson and H. T. Todd; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; H. T. McClellan; C. L. Mosier and F. L. Birch; E. Exline; J. K. Robinson and R. E. Bullard; C. H. Lowrie; D. and W. Porter; R. N. Davis and W. R. Baxter; S. H. Billings; T. Turk; J. R. Davidson and W. R. Matthews; E. F. and M. Wentworth; T. T. Golley; A. Leonard and G. T. Jones; A. D. Lonby; W. Winkler and R. R. Robins; L. M. Roberts and W. C. Bant; L. B. Masters; L. and W. R. Matthews; W. A. Kendal; R. D. Hicks and P. F. Maxwell; L. B. Jones; S. R. Hewitt; G. Caldwell; M. Dey and H. Lathrope; R. Tomkins and H. J. Abernathy; L. F. and G. Brown; H. T. Randolph; D. B. Smith; W. V. Henderson and T. B. Brown; D. Smith; T. H. Morton; B. L. Sanderson; L. A. Beachwood and M. F. Robinson; K. N. Alberts and O. L. Goldstein; R. H. Carter; T. N. Kent and B. L. Cooper.

(A) The number of correct answers to this one runs into the hundreds. I could hardly select any one as better than another. The answers are: E (voltage drop) = 10 × 3 = 30 volts; E = 2 × 3 = 6 volts, since the voltage drop across a resistor is equal to number of amperes times ohms resistance.

(B) T. F. Bochert says, "Woofers are what might be termed base note speakers. They usually are placed at the bottom of the baffle board and are capable of reproducing sound falling within the range of approximately 50 to 300 cycles. They are termed low-frequency speakers.

"Tweeters are high-frequency speakers. They have a range of reproduction from 3,000 cycles up. They are small dynamic speakers equipped with short exponential horns. There is something less than a foot of baffle above them, which is not nearly enough for the woofers."

A. L. Lonby says, "Woofers are the elements in a speaker system that are employed to reproduce the low frequencies. Their range may be from as low as 40 cycles up to 300, or even up to 400 cycles, the higher frequencies being passed by intermediates and tweeters. Tweeters are those elements in a speaker system that are employed to reproduce frequencies higher than those the woofers and/or intermediates are able to handle—say, from 300 to the top of the range of frequencies audible to the human ear."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 75

(A) Explain, in a general way, what a motor control cabinet is, and how those having tubes, and those having none, function.

(B) Explain centrifugal speed control as used with d.c. motors; also its method of operation.

To join the Bluebook School merely send in answers. Place name and question number upon first sheet. Address F. H. Richardson, No. 3 Tudor Lane, Scarsdale, N. Y.

O. H. Schmidt puts it, "Woofers are low-frequency, cone type speakers, usually located in back of the screen, near its lower edge and in conjunction with a very large baffle, the bottom of which is the stage floor itself. These speakers reproduce sounds ranging from about 50 to around 300 cycles.

"Tweeters are small speakers that may be of the magnetic, dynamic or crystal type. They are placed close to the top of the woofer baffle and reproduce sound frequencies upward from the range of the woofers to as high as can be made audible to audiences. In general, there is less than a foot of baffle installed above them, the required baffle area decreasing as frequencies rise."

(C) C. Oldham replies, "The directional baffle is funnel-shaped and is usually constructed of soft wood. It is a few feet in length, its top side practically straight, which helps to keep the sound waves from contacting the ceiling. The sides flare outward and the bottom downwards.

"In operation, the sound frequencies such baffles can handle is limited, said limitation being governed by the acoustics of the auditorium in which it is used. In determining the proper point to be used as a compromise for determination of the best distribution and frequency response possible to obtain, and within the limits of frequency response imposed by its nature, the directional baffle is invaluable in securing good sound distribution. It also has high value in dealing with acoustical faults of auditoriums. It may be used to reproduce the middle band of frequencies, with lows and highs handled by woofer and tweeters."

D. Danielson says, "Directional baffles are horn-shaped arrangements designed to place a load upon a diaphragm to intensify its sound waves. Their chief purpose is to secure increased evenness of sound distribution in auditoriums, and to overcome the effect of acoustical defects therein."

G. E. Doe says, "A directional baffle is in effect one form of 'horn,' but a form having an enlarged neck. They are intended for use with speakers having a large diaphragm, since they have ability to impose greater diaphragm load than have the ordinary baffles. Properly designed and constructed directional baffles assist greatly in evenly distributing sound over the entire seating area, especially in wide theatres."

(D) J. R. Prater replies thus, "Flat baffles are used with large speakers in order to provide proper reproduction of the lower frequencies. As the speaker diaphragm moves forward the air in front of it is compressed, while that in back of it is rarefied. When the sound current is of low frequency, sufficient time elapses before the diaphragm reverses its direction of travel to permit the compressed air to slip around the edge of the speaker into the rarefied air space, thus reducing the sound volume of the speaker.

"At higher frequencies, because of the increased rapidity of action of the diaphragm, this effect is reduced, or almost wholly eliminated. The greater the area of baffle used, the lower the frequencies a given speaker can reproduce because the baffle prevents the slippage described."

P. T. Sheridan Is Named Erpi Operating Manager

Phineas (Pete) Timothy Sheridan this week was promoted to the post of operating manager for Electrical Research Products, Inc., reporting to L. W. Conrow, general operating manager. He will continue to supervise over equipment commercialization. As operating manager, Mr. Sheridan will have charge of all domestic theatre operations and servicing. He has been associated with Erpi in various posts since 1927.

G. L. Carrington, who held the post of operating manager, has been named commercial relations manager, in which post he will have charge of Erpi relations with the producers.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

They Gave Him a Gun

(MGM)

Melodrama

For possibly the first time in history, a sales convention sat down with studio executives to watch a press preview. The convention was MGM's. The Carthay Circle theatre was the place and "They Gave Him a Gun" the picture. The visitors to Hollywood did not see "just another picture," nor something they could whoop and holler about and rush to telegraph offices to inform favored customers that here was a positive knockout that anyone would be crazy to pass up. They did see a picture crowded with the potentialities of popularity and commercial success.

At the same time thoughts must have crept into the selling mind that it would not be easy for managers to sell the picture. They must have realized that showmen would have to go out and pick and choose their audiences. Whether the film makes a lot of money or falls flatter than a pan of sour dough appears to depend upon the manner in which exhibitors accept it and the methods they pursue to convince patrons that it is worthy of their time and attention.

Featuring Spencer Tracy, Gladys George and Franchot Tone in fine performances, likewise vividly proving that much time, money, energy and sincere thought went into preparation and production, "They Gave Him a Gun" is primarily an absorbing character drama. As it develops, it entails three separate and distinct stories, all of which are blended into an understandable whole. The first is a grimly realistic and frankly grisly war story. The second is stark gangster. And wrapped up in both, yet separate and apart, the third is a human love story.

The United States gave weakling clerk "Jimmy" a rifle and bayonet. It told him how to use them to kill his enemy. The U. S. also gave ex-carnival barker, philosophically fatalistic "Fred" a gun. The men became friends and went to France. "Jimmy" used his gun with ferocity. He was wounded by another boy who had been given a gun. He was decorated by France. "Fred" fell in love with nurse "Rose." "Jimmy" told her he could not live without her. She promised to marry "Fred," but when he was reported killed she agreed to marry "Jimmy." A returning "Fred" is heartbroken, but takes his medicine like a man.

A decade passes and the texture of the story changes. Circus-man "Fred" meets businessman "Jimmy." A gangster killing arouses strange thoughts in "Fred's" mind. He knows that "Jimmy" is a gangster trigger-man. Loving "Rose," now "Jimmy's" wife, he tries to make her know what her husband's business is. She finds out in time to prevent "Jimmy" participating in another massacre, but causes his arrest. An embittered husband goes to jail knowing his wife "squealed" on him. "Rose" joins "Fred's" circus. A fellow convict plants the thought in "Jimmy's" mind that his wife is unfaithful. He breaks jail.

Newspapers scream the sensational headlines. "Jimmy," eluding pursuit, comes upon his wife and "Fred." He's going to use his gun in the way he had been taught to use it, but he becomes a cringing coward as "Fred" tells him off for what he is. A weakling again, he attempts to evade the advancing police. He dies from bullets from the gun of Sergeant Meadowlark, the man who taught him how to use a gun in training camp and war.

"They Gave Him a Gun" is realistic drama. There is ample reason to anticipate that in this phase it will have audiences sitting on chair edges, with chills and thrills running up and down their spine and their pulses pounding. It is also to be expected that those segments devoted to the war and gangster episodes will impress a lot of people. They are straight from the shoulder without softening touches. Its love drama is equally realistic, but somehow it doesn't seem to provide that humanizing contrast that is depended upon, ordinarily, to serve as a tension easing balance.

Thus the necessity for finding the audience that will understand and appreciate the picture. As it calls for showmanship knowledge that is not demanded very often in routine presentation, exhibitors should be prepared to dig in and do their part.

Wings Over Honolulu

(Universal)

Aviation Melodrama

A romantic story fashioned to please women and an action story intended to appeal to men are the main ingredients of this picture. Both elements are intelligently joined and acting and direction are supported by production effects. Lack of name value may temper its draw in first run houses.

The production is a naval aviation service story treated from the personal side. It's love at first sight when flier "'Stony' Gilchrist" and "Lauralee Curtis" meet and they are married immediately. Aboard a transport bound for Honolulu, "Lauralee" finds it hard to adjust herself in the tight little circle of naval life. Her lot is not made happier by the jealousy of "Rosalind Furness," who is disappointed that 'Stony' chose "Lauralee" instead of her.

In Honolulu, though "Stoney" strives mightily to make things pleasant, "Lauralee" is worried about his safety as he participates in routine flying maneuvers. Arrival of her ex-suitor, "Gregory Chandler," turns the story off on another track. A party she attends with him winds up in a fight and newspaper headlines point the finger of scandal at her. The affair preventing a promotion for her husband, she believes the best way to clean up the mess would be in an elopement with "Gregory." When "Stony" learns "Lauralee" is leaving, he steals a plane, but crashes. His wife orders the yacht to be turned back to rescue him. When "Stony" is up for courtmartial for stealing the plane, "Lauralee" takes the stand to tell the inside story that led up to the case. Though found guilty, clemency is extended.

Killers of the Sea

(Grand National)

Marine Adventure

Herein is demonstrated the skill of Captain Robert Caswell in hand-to-fin, knife-to-tooth battle with sharks, devil fish and other marine monsters in the Gulf of Mexico. Clipped down to this essential ingredient, the film would be a major length short. Accordingly, it is introduced and interspersed with scenes of Lowell Thomas pointing out the locations on a map and addressing himself directly to the audience. He keeps up a running narrative throughout the picture.

Although an incident wherein a diver is represented as held fast by an octupus until rescued by Captain Caswell is treated in story manner, the film is otherwise a direct photographic record of undersea combat. As such it is unquestionably remarkable.. Exploitation on this tack appears to be indicated.

Glamorous Night

(A. B. P., London)

Musical Romance

Recognized entertainment values are offered in the adaptation of an Ivor Novello play which was an attraction at Drury Lane theatre in London. It is one of those Ruritanian romances in which uniforms, songs, dance and spectacle are at least as important as story. With this type of material it all depends on how well it is done. In this case the answer is: not nearly so well as Hollywood would have done it, but better than in the case of many other British musicals. Some individual scenes are pictorially effective, there is good tenor singing from Trefor Jones, and fair incidental comedy, and more variety of background than is common in this type of stage adaptation.

The names are Otto Kruger, Mary Ellis, Victor Jory and Barry Mackay, and the other obvious selling factor is the theatrical source of the material. It must be offered as a tuneful, colorful picture of monarchy up against dictatorship, of a gypsy who saved a king.

Melitza, beautiful opera singer and queen of the gypsies, is the favorite of King Stefan of Krasnia, who is threatened by the ambitions of the prime minister, Baron Lyadeff. The baron has sold an oil concession to a foreign power in return for arms, which he proposes to use to depose the king and establish a dictatorship. The oil lies under the gypsy lands, outside Krasnian territory, and is discovered by an English engineer, Anthony Allan, who out of love for Melitza keeps the knowledge secret. It is, however, betrayed by a peasant to Lyadeff.

Allan foils an attempt, instigated by Lyadeff, at assassination of Melitza. He is deported for his pains, and on board ship finds that Melitza also is leaving the country under compulsion. He plans their escape and together they raise a force of gypsies who, reinforced by loyal citizens, rescue the king.

There is sufficient variety of incident to make possible a variety of appeal in exploitation activities, which should be addressed to the public which likes light entertainment.

Trade shown in London, the production had a friendly though not enthusiastic reception.—Bruce Allan.

'Ora Ponciano

(Come on You, Ponciano)

(Producciones Soria, A. en P.)

Mexican Melodrama

Those many Americans who are looking for something much different in motion pictures of old Mexico should find in this production a quietly strong melodrama based upon the life of Mexico's first ace bull fighter, Ponciano Diaz, who excited the Spanish world in the late '80s. Chucho Solorano, one of the ranking Mexican matadors of today, plays the name role and does very well.

There is just sufficient arena stuff to impart more thrills and yet not run afoul of objections to the gory sport of Old Spain. Chucho does pretty foot and cape work in a real blood and sand pit and with a bull that is rarin' to rend him asunder. This is a short, punchy sequence, with nothing in it to make Americans white about the gills, and an excellent show.

The romance leads are played by Chucho, as of lowly peasant stock, and Consuelo Frank (an important young Mexican stage actress), as the only daughter of a widower father, a patrician who runs a fighting bull ranch. The plot's unraveling affords much deft opportunity for authentic melodrama, comedy and pathos. Camera work is especially good, and the director and soundman have turned in good jobs. There is happy, not sloppy, ending. The production is in Spanish, but it is being prepared for English speaking audiences.

Reviewed at the Cine-Alameda, Mexico City, where it played two weeks to not only record house business but high water box office for any made-in-Mexico film. The class audiences loudly applauded, something new for them in Mexico City.—James Lockhart.

Produced by Producciones Soria, A. en P. Gabriel Soria, director. Alex Phillips, camera. Jose Rodriguez, art director. Adapted by Gabriel Soria and Elvira de la Mora from an original story by Jose Ortiz. Running time, 105 minutes. General appeal.

The Cocktail Party

(Universal)

Vaudeville

Introducing a series of vaudeville acts against a background of a bar and cocktail lounge the subject presents Lew Parker as master of ceremonies. Lucille Page does a tumbling dance and contortions, Mary Iris Dooley sings, Ginger Snap a "swingtime" number and the "Six Balabanows" put on a dancing and accordion act. Some camera legerdemain has been employed causing the disappearance of a performer at the clap of the hands. A Mentone production. Running time, 10 minutes.

Trailer Thrills

(Universal)

Oswald Cartoon

Oswald, the lucky rabbit, runs into some hard luck this trip. Attaching a trailer to his car he sets out for a "garden spot" called Paradise Valley. Along the route trouble develops between the car and the trailer with Oswald, the pacifier, getting all the worst of the melee. Climbing almost impassable mountain roads the car, trailer and Oswald come to grief on a wooden bridge and are catapulted into Paradise Valley, which turns out to be an abandoned and desolate place. Running time, 7 minutes.

Steel Workers

(Universal)

Cartoon

Meany, Miny and Moe, the three playful monkies, apply for a job with a construction outfit on the promise of a free lunch. At lunch time the monkies in their haste get tangled up with a riveting machine which keeps them otherwise engaged for the duration of the lunch period. With a grappling hook they corral the lunch of the foreman. The foreman discovers the theft and in trying to catch the monkies wrecks the building. Meany, Miny and Moe leave in a hurry. Running time, 7 minutes.

Going Places No. 36

(Universal)

Nassau

Off the coast of Florida the camera has traveled to the Bahama Islands and photographed various items of interest in the Bahama's capital, Nassau. The Government House, built 136 years ago, wherein the representative of the British Empire resides; Fort Charlotte, once used for defense against the pirates, now a relic; the Queen's Staircase, a passageway cut from rock and leading up to the old fortress, also a relic, among others are the historic points of interest. Present occupation of the islanders in commerce is the making of straw hats and the gathering of sponges from the sea. Narration by Lowell Thomas. Running time, 10 minutes.

Going Places No. 37

(Universal)

Interesting

Three widely separated items make up the 37th issue in this interesting series. In New England the process for the gathering of maple sugar and syrup is shown step by step from the boring of a hole in the tree until the sugar is packed in boxes and the syrup is bottled. In the Florida Everglades a bird colony has been established by the United States Biological Survey which enforces a year around closed season to hunters with the result that this probably is the fastest growing "community" in the country. The third item has to do with Reginald Denny and his new found hobby, and also business. When not acting before the camera Denny makes model aeroplanes, which have turned out to be such a success that he can't produce them fast enough to keep up with orders. Running time, 9½ minutes.

Stranger Than Fiction, No. 38

(Universal)

Oddities

The list of oddities in the news are seven this time. In order of their appearance they are a 300 pound African lion who rides in the rear seat of an automobile while its mistress, Ruby Wood, drives; a gold mine bought for $10,000 now yields $1,000 a ton; a private in the Army whose height of six feet, ten inches requires specially tailored uniforms; a penny that has been on the desk of the city clerk of San Antonio for 15 years without having been stolen; a pet deer; a mausoleum that the 82 year old John M. Davis constructed in memory of his wife, and a man who cracks cocoanuts on his skull. Running time, 9 minutes.

Shoes With Rhythm

(Universal)

Mentone

Another of the Mentone subjects which introduces performers in the vaudeville manner and looks for a novel background in which to do it. This time it's a shoe store in the modern manner with all the appointments and a sales force composed of Billy Reed, Frances Williams and the Rhythm Boys. Customers also contribute to the entertainment. Others appearing are the Canadians, Elaine and Barry, and Ethel Shepard. Running time, 10 minutes.

Hays Addresses The Red Cross

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., was one of the guest speakers at the annual convention of the American Red Cross held in Washington last Sunday, which was presided over by Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, national chairman.

Mr. Hays said, in part: "There is an interesting aspect to what I believe is the worthwhile contribution by motion pictures to the Red Cross service. It is only natural that our sympathy with victims of misfortune should be in direct ratio to the distance we are from them. It is when we are brought into contact with them that our hearts are touched and our purse strings loosened. Newsreel men, working under pressure, and frequently at the risk of their lives, capture in actuality the emergency, the need, the work and the results. Then in the 48 states, 12 million Americans in a day in the motion picture theatres view the actual disaster, hear the awful thunder of the waters, as on crests of floods homes are hurtled to pieces; and then, with the immediate concern when our sympathy burns white, we respond as best we can."

GERMANY TRANSFERS FILM CONTROL FROM BUSINESS TO WORKING TALENT

Nazi Actors, Film Directors, Bankers and Cabinet Representative Supplant Score on Board of UFA Film Company

Complete government control over Germany's motion picture industry has finally been effected for Nazi cultural and propagandistic purposes, and the managements of the large companies have been placed in the hands of the working talent. Joseph Goebbels, minister of propaganda and public enlightenment, is now the official Nazi overlord on all matters cinematic.

The recently enacted German-Italian "cinema friendship" also is now in actual practice, as the result of a pact intended to build up an international film bloc, already composed of those two countries and Japan. These "ideological" allies aim to raise the money-making level of their film industries, against the motion picture influences and competition of Hollywood, and other non-"ideological" countries.

A score of members of the board of directors "resigned" last Thursday from UFA-Film, the largest German motion picture company, and at the same time Dr. Goebbels' official government news service announced a general reorganization of the industry in Germany.

Six Nazi bankers, five actors and film directors and one representative of the Propaganda Ministry's film chamber constitute the new board. All are in effect Dr. Goebbels' appointees.

Tobis in the future will work "in intimate cooperation" with Ufa. Tobis is the second largest German film concern, and last year produced more pictures than Ufa. Before the Adolf Hitler era of government propagandistic acquisition and control, the two companies were close competitors.

The smaller film companies in Germany also will be brought immediately into this new "cooperative undertaking."

In Hands of Committee

Reporting from Berlin via wireless, the New York Times said this week that under the new plan the production sections of both Ufa and Tobis will be entirely in the hands of a committee made up of those board members who are themselves actors and film directors. The others will be responsible only for solely financial questions and business details.

In Ufa's case, production will be under the actors Eugen Klopfer, Paul Hartmann and Mathias Wiemann, film director Karl Ritter and Professor Karl Froelich, plus Hanns Weidemann, spokesman for the government film chamber, Dr. Emil Georg von Strauss, third vice-president of the Reichsbank, will be largely responsible for financial affairs.

The actors, Emil Jannings, Willy Forst, Veit Harlan and the film director, Hans Zerlett, already control the production side of Tobis.

Dr. Goebbels always has proclaimed that films are too commercial and that what was needed was more art, said The Times wireless. The government news service now asserts that the German film has a special mission. It says:

"The German film has reached the point where it must fulfill its duty to the state, nation and culture. It must exercise international influence. It must become a spiritual world power. The German film particularly has a world mission."

REICH STILL BUYS AMERICAN PRODUCT

Nearly half of the motion pictures released in German theatres this year were of foreign origin, the New York Times reported Monday in a wireless from Berlin. The Censor's report for the first four months shows 50 features were released and that 28 of these were German and 22 foreign. The United States had 13, Austria 4 and France, Italy, Japan, Czechoslovakia and Hungary one each.

The Reich Film Chamber spokesmen complain that it is reported abroad that Germany is trying to shut out foreign films. The four months' statistics were offered as evidence to the contrary.

During April the Censor released three American pictures: "Maid of Salem", "Pigskin Parade" and "Bulldog Drummond Escapes".

Hugenberg "Out"

Control of the old Ufa company was in the hands of Chancellor Hitler's one-time minister of economics and political ally, Dr. Alfred Hugenberg. The final report of the former board of directors showed improved business. Nevertheless, the company again paid no dividends, General Manager Klitsch explaining that the reserves must be preserved for experimentation in color films and for the "export drive" during the coming season

The government news service suggests, without being very specific, according to The Times correspondent, that the time is approaching when there will be only one German distributing organization.

The report now universally heard in film circles in Berlin is that the real new owner of the Ufa and Tobis film corporations is Franz Eher Publishing Company. This company publishes the official Nazi Voelkischer Beobachter and is the National Socialist party's central publishing organization. Chancellor Hitler is reported to be a partner in the firm.

Others to be Absorbed

The Bavaria and Terra film companies, the two remaining semi-independent concerns, are expected to be absorbed soon by the Ufa-Tobis combine. Germany then, in effect, will have only one film-producing company, which will be operated by the National Socialist party through the Franz Eher Company, which then would become one of the world's largest publishing and film concerns, with the avowed determination "to transform what heretofore has been film industry into what can truly be called film art."

Dr. Hugenberg, former Nationalist party leader, is the foremost business man to disappear from the old directorate of UFA. The Karl Froelich who assumes a directorship on the board is familiar to the American public for his "Maedchen in Uniform."

Tobis Will Work "in Intimate Cooperation" with UFA and Smaller Companies Will Be Brought Into Line Immediately

While the Nazis assert that in bringing UFA and Tobis under Dr. Goebbels' domination, both will remain separate organizations, emphasis was placed on the government's determination to force them to be "united in common interest." Before the move Tobis had been "Nazified," but the Propaganda Ministry had had some difficulties in forcing UFA to follow closely the strict lines of Nazi policy adherence established for it.

Production Aims

Some idea of the aims for production artistry under the now government-controlled industry was advanced the other day in a press statement received in New York from the German film chamber, in which "State Actor" Mathias Wieman characterized the two new main types of German films.

"We have an obscure feeling that our life has taken on an entirely different form from that which we originally hoped for, and in the cinema we seek the reflection of what has been unfulfilled in our own lives, the dream picture of unfulfilled desires," Mr. Wieman said.

The dream picture, or idealistic film, Mr. Wieman contrasted with the realistic film, "which strives for nothing but truth."

"The times cry for their portrayal," he said, and "only through the new image of man can we make our way in the world."

"The evolution of the cinema undoubtedly proceeds from the idealistic to the realistic film."

Atlanta Film Council Meets

The Atlanta Better Films Council met last Thursday at a dinner honoring past presidents. Guests included Mrs. Alonza P. Richardson, former president, as well as Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Melnicker of Loew's Grand, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Reed of the Capitol, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Murray of the Rialto and J. W. Setz of Scottish Rite Hospital, operator of Sunday shows in Atlanta.

Has 53rd Anniversary

Nick Amos, Sr., salesman for Majestic Pictures in Omaha, and Mrs. Amos, this week are receiving congratulations upon the celebration of their 53rd wedding anniversary. Mr. Amos, who was one of Omaha's first exhibitors, opened the first theatres in Lincoln, Neb., and Topeka and Wichita, Kan. He has been a salesman since 1918.

Opening Hollywood Office

Crane Housamen of Cecil, Warwick and Cecil, advertisng agency, has left New York for Hollywood, where he will open an office for the handling of special copy for three United Artists producer accounts, Selznick International, Samuel Goldwyn and Walter Wanger.

Radio amateur contests are once again popular in New England motion picture theatres, Wesley Fraser, master-of-ceremonies, said this week in Boston as he pointed out that he is working seven nights a week in Greater Boston theatres.

UNIVERSAL AND GRAND NATIONAL NEXT ON CONVENTION PROGRAM

Sales Meetings Will Be Held Simultaneously Next Week at Ambassador in Los Angeles; 20th-Fox and Republic May 30

Rogers Continues as Executive Producer, Says Cowdin; Flexibility in Sales Policy Emphasized at MGM Gathering

The Universal and Grand National annual sales conventions to be held simultaneously next week at the Ambassador hotel, Los Angeles, will be the fourth and fifth of the thirteen to be held this season. The Warner Brothers sessions, which opened at the Waldorf Astoria hotel in New York on Monday, are reported on page 59.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer announced 44 to 52 features, and Monogram set a program of 42 at meetings last week which were reported on pages 24 and 25 of MOTION PICTURE HERALD of May 8th.

Following the two conventions next week, there will be a gap until May 30th when the Twentieth Century-Fox executives and sales forces meet at the Ambassador in Los Angeles. Republic franchise holders will convene simultaneously at the same hotel. Paramount will open its annual meeting there on June 10th.

Gaumont British will have three regional sessions, beginning on June 10th in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. United Artists will follow a similar plan, opening June 14th in New York and continuing with sessions in Chicago and San Francisco; RKO delegates will convene at Los Angeles' Ambassador hotel on June 16th, and Imperial will hold four meetings in July in New York, Chicago, New Orleans and San Francisco. Columbia has not announced a date for its convention.

The Universal home office contingent, headed by R. H. Cochrane, president, and including the salesmen of the Boston and New Haven exchanges, left New York on Wednesday afternoon. They were joined in Chicago by delegates from the midwest and south, and a special convention train of five sleeping cars, a club and observation car and a diner was to leave for the coast on Thursday night. An additional sleeping car will be put on at Kansas City.

J. R. Grainger, general manager of distribution; Joe Weil, director of exploitation; Edward Bonns, short product manager, and Sig Wittman, eastern district manager, have been in Los Angeles all week arranging details.

H. C. McIntyre, Universal's general manager in Australia, coming the longest distance, will arrive in Los Angeles on Sunday and following the meeting will have a number of conferences with Gustave J. Schaefer, foreign department head, and his assistant, Charles Kirby.

The home office delegation at the convention, in addition to those named, will include P. D. Cochrane, director of advertising and publicity; F. J. A. McCarthy, eastern sales manager; Sidney Singerman, program department manager; A. J. Sharick, sales accessories manager; W. B. Kraemer, head of contract playdate department, and O. C. Binder, manager branch operations department.

DISNEY NOT FIXING TOTALS OF RELEASES

No specific number of Mickey Mouse, Donald Duck or Silly Symphony cartoons will be made by Walt Disney, Roy Disney, business manager of Walt Disney Enterprises, said in New York this week as he left for Hollywood. The cartoonist will have 18 miscellaneous subjects, Mr. Disney said, the first of which is already in RKO hands for release.

Product plans to be detailed will include announcement of an annual musical to be known as "Merry-Go-Round." The first of the series will be handled by Buddy DeSylvia, and will include in its cast Bert Lahr, Billy House, Mischa Auer, Jimmy Savo and Alice Brady. Also to be announced is a series of eight westerns. Trem Carr will handle production of these in addition to the John Wayne action films.

8,300 Contracts Signed

Mr. Grainger conferred this week in Hollywood with representatives of National Theatres on a product deal for next season and a tentative agreement was expected before the convention opens. The sales department announced in New York that 8,300 contracts had been signed with theatres for the 1936-37 season.

At a dinner given by him to studio department heads in Hollywood on Monday night, J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board of Universal, denied that any consideration had been given to a change in the post of executive producer. His statement was a direct reply to recent reports that a change was contemplated.

"Contrary to reports," Mr. Cowdin said, "neither my associates nor I have had any conversations or negotiations with anyone, directly or indirectly, with that end in view. The fact is that we have the highest admiration for the manner in which our associate, Charles R. Rogers, has reorganized the studio and is carrying on its operations. We have the utmost confidence in his ability to maintain the high standards which he has established for the productions of the new Universal."

Grand National Meets Sunday

Sixty members of the Grand National sales organization and 20 studio executives will attend the first annual sales convention, which will open Sunday, also at the Ambassador hotel, Los Angeles. Delegates will include 50 district and exchange managers and 10 home office executives.

Edward L. Alperson, president; Edward Peskay, vice-president in charge of distribution, and Edward Finney, advertising director, were in Los Angeles this week preparing for the meeting.

In the home office contingent which left New York on Wednesday were W. J. Neary, comptroller; Ann Rosenthal, legal adviser; James Winn and Sol Edwards, division sales managers; Alfred Crown, Latin American sales representative; Stanley Hatch; Jack Barnstyn, vice-president and foreign managing director; Edward Ugast, assistant foreign manager, and Harry J. Allen, supervisor of Canadian distribution.

Grand National production and studio executives who will attend include Victor Schertzinger, Eugene Frenke, B. F. Zeidman, Zion Meyers, George A. Hirliman, M. H. Hoffman, Andrew L. Stone, Edward Finney, Richard Rowland, Max Alexander, producers; Philip H. Krasne, studio attorney; Sidney M. Biddell, story editor and production executive; Harold Lewis, studio manager; A. E. Kaye, technical supervisor; Sam R. Wallis, studio comptroller, and Robert Luplow, auditor.

One afternoon will be devoted to a tour of the Grand National lot, with a special program of entertainment by players, directors and writers. A banquet will follow the closing.

Promotion of several branch managers will be announced and the results of the sales drive which ends Saturday.

A total of 65 features will be announced for the 1937-38 season. Under contract for one or more pictures are James Cagney, Anna Sten, Stuart Erwin, Tex Ritter, Ken Maynard, Eric Linden, Cecilia Parker, Conrad Nagel, Eleanor Hunt, Rod La Rocque and Joyce Compton.

The company will not announce any short subjects on its product schedule.

MGM Delegates Home

With the return of the MGM home office contingent and field sales forces from the coast on Monday, negotiations were started immediately on a number of franchise deals which had been awaiting selling details.

William F. Rodgers, general sales manager, told the closing session last Thursday that flexibility would be the principal characteristic of next season's selling policy. Each manager, he said, will adjust policy to the individual exhibitor where such adjustments seem necessary to make the arrangement equitable. He pointed out that through this plan, which was met with skepticism when offered last year, both the theatre owner and MGM would profit.

The company next season will sell 32 features on percentages running from 25 to 40 per cent and with the decision as to how many features will fall into each group remaining with the company. The designation will be determined by test runs in Loew's theatres in widely scattered territories.

In the current season MGM sold 30 features on percentage, but while the pictures were not specified by name in the contracts, the number in each of the groups was designated. This season there were four at 40 per cent, six at 35 per cent, six at 30 per cent and 14 at 25 per cent.

Al Lichtman, executive assistant to Nicholas M. Schenck, told the delegates that 10 MGM pictures this year grossed 30 per cent more business than the 10 best of all other producing companies. He did not specify the titles.

Louis B. Mayer, vice-president, said the philosophy of picture making today "is not to plan for the year but for three, four, five or ten years in the future." He paid triubute to Mr. Schenck by ascribing the success of Loew's and MGM to his vision in solidly backing the plan of providing ample talent reserves. At another point Mr. Mayer emphasized the company's commitment to the policy of developing young producers. Harry Rapf, who with Mr. Mayer and Irving Thalberg comprised MGM's original three producers, spoke on the importance of talent development. Sam Katz, production executive, and Howard Dietz, in charge of advertising and publicity, were other speakers.

The company has increased its short subject lineup for next season to 201, it was announced at the convention. The two-reel subjects will include six in the "Crime Doesn't Pay" series, six musical novelties, and four Laurel and Hardy reissues, "Bohunks," "Blotto," "A Perfect Day," and "The County Hospital." One-reel releases will be 16 Pete Smith subjects, one dealing with three-dimensional photography; 10 human interest films, one by Adrian on how she selects gowns and fashions for film stars and one by Carey Wilson on mental telepathy; 10 unsolved historical mysteries, the first to be "Was Lincoln's Assassin Ever Caught?"; 8 Robert Benchley subjects including "How to Wake Up," "How to Pay Your Income Tax," "How to Make An Impression," and "How to Take Care of a Baby"; 12 FitzPatrick Traveltalks; 13 cartoons; 12 "Our Gang" comedies to be produced by Hal Roach, and 104 issues of News of the Day, newsreel produced by Hearst International.

Summer reissue of four features is planned. They are "Trader Horn," "Naughty Marietta," "Manhattan Melodrama" and "Hell Divers."

The convention concluded on Thursday night with a formal dinner-dance on Stage 15 of the MGM lot. Entertainment included ensembles of "Broadway Melody of 1937" girls, and individual entertainment by Eleanor Powell, Bill Robinson and Cliff Edwards. Louis B. Mayer presided, with Sophie Tucker and Frank Whitbeck alternating as masters of ceremonies.

Monogram Schedule Announced

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram, in his opening address at the company's convention last week at the Drake hotel in Chicago, told the 95 delegates that delivery on the first of the new Monogram releases had been set for July 1st, when eight features would be on hand in the exchanges. Among these will be "Boy of the Streets," "Paradise Isle," "Romance of the Limberlost," "The Outer Gate," "Legion of Missing Men," "The 13th Man," "The Hoosier Schoolmaster," and "Blazing Barriers."

Sol Rosenblatt, former NRA director, told the convention guests that various practices now current which make it difficult for independent exhibitors would soon be eliminated. He said that independent exhibitors would turn to independent producers for pictures and that Monogram would lead that list.

Scott Dunlap, production chief, said "The Hoosier Schoolmaster" would go into production May 15th. He announced that Frank Shields had been borrowed from Samuel Goldwyn for "Romance of the Limberlost," and introduced Jack Randall, new singing western star, and Jackie Cooper, juvenile star, now with Monogram.

Edward Golden sales manager, outlined the company's sales policies and announced a nine week sales drive with $1,000 in prizes for the winners. The quota for the period is set at $1,500,000.

Lou Lifton, advertising and publicity director, and O. Henry Briggs, president of Pathe, were other speakers.

Norton V. Ritchey, export general manager, opened the proceedings on the second day. He said the company's English distribution had been set with Pathe, Ltd., and outlined the difficulties in foreign operations. He announced that Monogram had planned to solve the problem in Czechoslovakia by making three or four pictures in that country.

A banquet concluded the convention on Friday night.

20th-Fox Sets Five Groups

With a total of 69 features planned, Twentieth Century-Fox will sell its 1937-38 product in five groups.

The first group, to be known as the K-5 list, will embrace 57 pictures. Included will be four films to be made by New World, the company's British production subsidiary.

"SCREEN SNAPSHOTS" CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY

Columbia Pictures during the month of June will celebrate the 17th anniversary of its novelty reel, "Screen Snapshots". It was this short subject which Harry and Jack Cohn started in 1920 as the first screen venture of the company that eventually became Columbia Pictures. In recent years, however, the reel has been under the personal supervision of Harriet Parsons.

The second group will be two Eddie Cantor productions. Two "Tarzan" specials, to be produced by Sol Lesser, comprise the third group, and the fourth list will include four outdoor action pictures with Richard Arlen. The fifth group will be four Will Rogers issues.

John D. Clark, general sales manager, will leave for the coast by plane on Saturday to confer with Joseph M. Schenck, Darryl F. Zanuck and William Goetz on final product details. He will return in time to join the company's eastern contingent, which will depart for Los Angeles May 26th for the convention which opens at the Ambassador hotel on May 30th and will continue to June 3d.

Paramount Plans in Work

Paramount's new season production plans at present indicate a schedule of 50 to 60 features, Robert M. Gillham, director of advertising and publicity, said this week on his return from the coast studios.

Production budgets have been increased materially and plans are being made for delivery of a $1,000,000 production every month, Mr. Gillham said. A reduction in the number of low budgeted pictures was indicated.

Lucien Hubbard and William Lewin have been added to Paramount's list of producers, and additional newcomers may be announced at the company's annual sales meeting in Los Angeles June 10th to 13th. Younger players who have been featured the last year or two are expected to augment the present list of stars.

Selznick Officials Confer

Executives of Selznick International Pictures, headed by David O. Selznick, were in New York this week conferring with United Artists officials on product for the new season. Others present were John Hay Whitney, chairman of the board; William A. Wellman, film director; Ben Hecht and Robert Carson, writers; L. F. Alstock, assistant treasurer; Barbara Keon, production secretary, and Russell Birdwell, advertising and publicity director.

On the way to New York from Hollywood Mr. Selznick, Mr. Wellman and Mr. Hecht worked on the script of "Nothing Sacred," which was announced just before the group left California, as a co-starring vehicle in Technicolor for Carole Lombard and Fredric March.

The annual meeting of the United Artists board of directors will be held in Hollywood Saturday and the first of three regional sales meetings planned by the company will open in New York on June 14th.

Four regional sales meetings will be held by Imperial Pictures, E. J. Smith, general sales manager, said this week. Dates and places are: Hotel Astor, New York, July 3d to 5th; Drake hotel, Chicago, July 10th to 12th; St. Charles hotel, New Orleans, July 17th to 19th, and the Palace hotel, San Francisco, July 24-28.

The company will produce 32 features in four groups for the 1937-'38 season, and release an additional five in another group. The titles on the schedule are as follows:

Showmen's Exploitation Specials: "My Wondering Daughter," "Beauty Racket," "Sophisticated Lady," "Back From Reno," "The Model Murder," "Negligee."

Blue Ribbon Productions: "Honor Among Women," "Sky Girl," "Penthouse Love," "Night of Crime," "Petticoat Lane," "Murder in the Supreme Court," "Love Takes a Walk," "No Longer His Woman," "Women at Play," "Bachelor Girl's Diary."

Frontier Action Melodramas: "South of Santa Fe," "Prairie Wagon," "We'll Fight for Texas," "Desert Scout," "Buckskin Border Fighter," "Fighting for Freedom," "Shooting for Glory," "Fighting Plainsman."

Musical Outdoor Attractions: "Cowboy Cavalier," "Six Gun Courage," "The Masked Rider," "Six Shooter Law," "Law Man from Montana," "Two Gun Terror," "Law Comes to the Badlands," "Wyoming Wildcat."

Crown Productions: "The Marriage of Corbal," from the story by Rafael Sabatini; "When Knights Were Bold," starring Fay Wray; "Ten Minute Alibi," starring Philip Holmes; "Southern Roses," starring Neil Hamilton; "Public Nuisance No. 1."

GN Starts National Exploitation Drive

Grand National Pictures this week started a national exploitation campaign to reach various fan clubs sponsored by magazine and radio stations and built around personalities the company plans to film.

One of the largest national organizations is the affiliated Shadow Clubs, inspired by the character first introduced in the Street and Smith magazines and later featured on the radio. Over 60,000 persons are expected to be reached through this medium alone and the same applies to another radio feature, "Renfrew of the Mounted," which the company will also bring to the screen. Another character which can boast of an already made audience is "Flash Casey," newspaper cameraman, who will be portrayed by Eric Linden.

Film Art Studios Open in New York

Film Art Studios, Inc., formerly operated as the Edison Rental Studios, in the Bronx, New York, had its formal opening Monday afternoon at a cocktail party to eastern producers, artists and the press. Among those present were William Rowland, Moe Goldman, Abraham Leff, Christopher Butte and George Burgess of Electrical Research Products, Inc., Ralph Austrian, RCA sound sales manager, Lee Davee and G. Danopli of Erpi, Bert Lahr, Allen Prescott, Monte Proser, Benjamin Kamsler, David Berger, Tommy Lyman and Frank Zucker of Camera Equipment, Inc.

John T. Doran, Film Art executive, left Monday night for Washington with a print of the first reel of "We, the People" series which will be shown to the National Committee of the Parent-Teachers Association.

"IT IS A COMPLIMENT TO NEARLY ANY PICTURE TO SAY THAT IT LOOKS LIKE A GOLDWYN PRODUCTION!"

KEY CITY BUSINESS SWINGS UPWARD AS The Goldwyn Touch BRINGS A ROARINGLY HILARIOUS COMEDY TO THE BOX-OFFICE . . . .

WOMAN CH

They hit a swift, sell-out stride at Loew's Capitol, Washington, where week-end business found patrons chasing box office, and critics said: "It would make your Republican Uncle Will, who hasn't laughed since Hoover, roar in sheer, very sheer glee! Now we know why they advertised this film as the second 'It Happened One Night' But don't let 'em fool you; it's better!"

These goofy sweethearts were greeted with rave reviews in Los Angeles at the Hollywood and Downtown Theatres.

ASES MAN

The race grew hotter at Loew's Theatre, Syracuse, where tickets sold thick and fast while critics chanted: "One of the merriest things I've seen in many a moon! . . . Yes, chase yourself to Loew's for a laugh this week, because one scene, if no more, is worth the price of admission!"

New York is getting out its ticker-tape for the big fun-fiesta, for they're scheduled to open soon at RADIO CITY MUSIC HALL!

And they're running after records this week in every important key center from coast to coast! Watch their dust. It's gold dust!

WARNER TO PICK 60 FOR NEW SEASON FROM $5,000,000 WORTH OF STORIES

Features Will Include 11 from Broadway Plays, 8 Musicals, 17 from Best Selling Books, 2 in Technicolor, 12 Others

The combined Warner Brothers-First National and Cosmopolitan production interests have $5,000,000 worth of books, plays and original stories from which to select the 60 features to which the companies are committed for 1937-38. This was the highlight announcement, made by Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production, at the annual Warner sales convention Monday through Thursday at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, New York.

"I am convinced that the coming year will be the greatest that the motion picture industry has ever known," Mr. Warner said, adding, "The screen has made astonishing progress in recent years, but we are only at the beginning of the great things that can be accomplished."

Mr. Warner told the delegates that the feature-length product for the new season will include 11 pictures based on Broadway plays, eight musicals, 17 from best-selling books, two in Technicolor and 12 others. He described to the sales forces details of the following 46 already selected:

Tovarich, from the play, to star Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer and Basil Rathbone.

First Lady, play by George S. Kaufman and Katherine Dayton, starring Kay Francis with Anita Louise, Preston Foster, Walter Connolly, Louise Fazenda.

Jezebel, play produced by Guthrie McClintock, starring Bette Davis.

A Slight Case of Murder, play by Damon Runyan and Howard Lindsay, to star Edward G. Robinson, with Pat O'Brien, Humphrey Bogart and Billy Mauch.

White Horse Inn, from the musical play of this year.

Desert Song, Sigmund Romberg operetta.

Boy Meets Girl, Broadway play and still running, to have an all-star cast.

Yes, My Darling Daughter, likewise continuing on Broadway.

Swing Your Lady, stage comedy, to feature Pat O'Brien, Humphrey Bogart and the "Hill-billy" Weaver Brothers and Elvira.

Chalked Out, play by Warden Lewis W. Lawes of New York's Sing Sing Prison.

On Your Toes, Rodgers and Hart stage musical, to star Ginger Rogers.

White Banners, book by Lloyd C. Douglas.

Story of San Michele, book by Axel Munthe.

Story of Emile Zola, book by Geza Herczeg, to star Paul Muni.

The Sisters, book by Myron Brinig, starring Kay Francis and Miriam Hopkins, with Jane Bryan.

A Prayer for My Son, book by Hugh Walpole, to be released as "A Prayer for My Sons," and starring Kay Francis and the Mauch twins.

The Gamblers, by Feodor Dostoievsky, starring Edward G. Robinson, Errol Flynn, Bette Davis and Basil Rathbone.

The Adventures of Robin Hood, starring Errol Flynn and Olivia de Havilland.

And It All Came True, by Louis Bromfield, starring Dick Powell and Gloria Dickson.

Angle Shooter, by Adela Rogers St. John, with Pat O'Brien, Joan Blondell, Margaret Lindsay, George E. Stone.

Comet Over Broadway, by Faith Baldwin, a Kay Francis starring vehicle.

You're All I Want, by Katherine Brush, also a Kay Francis picture.

Sister Act, by Fannie Hurst, starring Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland and Anita Louise with Margaret Lindsay.

Mr. Dodd Takes the Air, by Clarence Budington Kelland, a Mervyn LeRoy production now being filmed, featuring Kenny Baker with Frank McHugh, Jane Wyman, Alice Brady.

This Woman Is Dangerous, by Donn Byrne, co-starring Jean Arthur and George Brent.

The Valley of the Giants, by Peter B. Kyne, in Technicolor, to star Bette Davis and George Brent.

Gold Is Where You Find It, by Clements Ripley, in Technicolor, will have Mr. Brent and Olivia de Havilland.

The Great Garrick, to be produced by Merwyn LeRoy and directed by James Whale with a cast headed by Brian Ahearne, Olivia de Havilland and Edward Everett Horton.

Return Engagement, Fernand Gravet's second American vehicle, following "The King and the Chorus Girl." This will be a musical with a score by Rodgers and Hart. Ethel Merman will be co-starred.

Its Love I'm After, (now being filmed), starring Leslie Howard, Bette Davis and Olivia de Havilland.

Gold Diggers in London, of the "Gold Diggers" series.

Varsity Show, now before the cameras, with a cast headed by Dick Powell and Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, and Rosemary and Priscilla Lane, Lee Dixon, Ted Healy, Buck and Bubbles, Roy Atwell, Walter Catlett, and Sterling Holloway.

Panama Canal, Paul Muni will star.

Confession, starring Kay Francis with Basil Rathbone, Ian Hunter, Laura Hope Crews, Mary Maguire and Jane Bryan.

Casino, a musical, with Warner Baxter, Ruby Keeler, George Brent, Joan Blondell, Patric Knowles.

Submarine 262, written by the author of "Ceiling Zero," Commander Frank Wead. George Brent, Pat O'Brien, Ruby Keeler and Wayne Morris will star.

Manpower at Highest Peak, Says Jack L. Warner at Gathering of Entire Sales Force in New York

Warner players being groomed for stardom,

LEAVING FILMS TO BE OWN BOSS, SAYS MUNI

Paul Muni, winner of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences gold statue this year for his performance in "The Story of Louis Pasteur," told the Associated Press in Hollywood this week that he was leaving motion pictures because he was tired of his long "confinement" to sound stages.

"I do not know, now, what I shall do after I have had a long rest," he said. "But certainly there is no object in working for the mere sake of making money when I already have financial security. If I grow bored, perhaps there will be something for me to do again as an actor. But it shall be for a particular film or stage play, not under a long term contract. I want to try being my own boss."

DETAILS OF 46 OF WARNER'S NEW 60

Gradwell Sears, general sales executive told the convention on Monday, are:

Humphrey Bogart, Ian Hunter, Anita Louise, Pat O'Brien, the Mauch Twins, Boris Karloff and Dick Foran.

Mr. Sears was to conduct a poll of the delegates for their selection of younger players under contract to be developed for stardom. A similar plan, used last year, is said to have aided the studio in making decisions.

The convention opened at the Waldorf-Astoria on Monday with an address of welcome by Mr. Sears, who presided over all the business sessions.

Climaxing his anaylsis of the new product on Wednesday Jack L. Warner appealed to a number of Warner and "outside" film buyers and circuit operating heads invited to the convention for encouragement and support not alone for Warners "but for the industry as a whole."

"You must encourage producers to spend great sums of money," Mr. Warner added, "and give the producers a fair shake and do not try to see how you can bargain to buy the product. I am speaking on behalf of the entire motion picture industry."

Vitaphone will release 134 short subjects, marking the most varied program of short product ever to be released by the company, Norman H. Moray, Vitaphone executive in charge of shorts and trailer and Sam Sax, production head of the Brooklyn studio, told the convention delegates Thursday. Ninety-two of these will be made under Mr. Sax in the east, with six to be produced in Hollywood. There will also be 36 cartoons by Leon Schlesinger, also produced in California.

Eight series will make up the quota of Vitaphone releases for 1937-38. The Brooklyn studio will produce 24 of the scheduled 30 two-reel "Broadway Brevity" musicals; 18 one-reel "Melody Masters" band numbers; 12 Vitaphone Varities; 12 Vitaphone Pictorial Reviews, and 13 Floyd Gibbons "Headline Hunters." E. M. Newman will also produce a series of 13 "Colortour Adventures."

In Hollywood, Mr. Schlesinger will make 20 one-reel "Merrie Melody" cartoons in Technicolor and 13 one-reel black-and-white "Looney Tune" cartoons. The Burbank studios will also make six two-reel "Broadway Brevities" in Technicolor.

On Wednesday, Carl Leserman, assistant general sales manager, told the convention that the company's summer release policy, calling for the release of three features each month between now and September, would be started at once.

Executives in Attendance

Among the chief executives who attended the sessions this week were Jack L. Warner and Major Albert Warner, vice-presidents; Gradwell Sears, sales manager; Joseph G. Bernhard, general manager of Warner theatres; S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity; Carl Leserman, assistant general sales manager; Roy T. Haines, eastern and Canadian sales manager; Herbert J. Ochs, western and southern sales manager; Jacob Wilk, head of the story department; Sam Sax, and Edward Selzer, west coast publicity manager.

Headquarters executives representing the legal, financial, contract, musical and other phases of the Warner companies included Stanleigh P. Friedman, R. W. Perkins, Herman Starr, Samuel Carlisle, Harry M. Goldberg, J. S. Hummel, Arthur Sachson, Jules Girden, H. S. Bareford, M. Ebenstein, Clayton E. Bond, A. W. Schalberg, Albert S. Howson, E. E. Hinchy, N. D. Fellman, F. C. Cahill, M. Dolid, Mort Blumenstock, Herbert Crooker, B. F. Moore, Ralph W. Budd, H. M. Doherty, G. R. Keyser, Joseph S. Bloom and Harold Rodner.

On Monday afternoon the delegates attended a preview of the Cosmopolitan picture "The Go Getter." On Tuesday evening the delegates all attended the Broadway play, "Tovarich," and on Wednesday they saw "Brother Rat."

For the first time in five years all branches of the company, including 250 field representatives, were included in the roster of those attending the four-day sessions. The first meeting was held in the Sert Room, which had been decorated with a huge replica of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences statuette. Warners received nine of the awards last March.

The contingent of southern delegates took the convention by storm Monday morning when they marched into the Sert Room to the tune of "Dixie." Each manager and salesman was garbed as a colonel with 10-gallon hat and long, black sweeping mustache.

Accessories Plan Outlined

On Tuesday, Mr. Sears introduced A. W. Schwalberg, supervisor of the company's exchanges, who outlined to the men the details of the Warners' sales accessories' rental plan, which went into effect recently.

Arthur Sachson, head of the contract department, made the next address. Following his talk, H. M. Doherty, auditor of the exchanges, and Albert S. Howson, director of censorship, spoke, after which luncheon was served in the Empire Room.

Mr. Sears then announced the winners of the recently concluded sales drive. Those who won the district manager awards were: Leo Blank, Midwest district manager, Chicago; Robert Smeltzer, Mid-Atlantic district manager, Washington. The branch awards went to the following branch managers: Rud Lohrenz, Minneapolis; Harry Seed, Pittsburgh; A. Shmitken, Cincinnati; R. L. McCoy, Charlotte; Fred Greenberg, Indianapolis; T. R. Gilliam, Chicago; R. T. Smith, Milwaukee; William Warner, Kansas City; Nat Furst, Boston; C. K. Olson, Omaha; Norman Ayers, Albany; R. S. Smith, Buffalo; Robert Meltzer, Washington; W. G. Mansell, Philadelphia; L. McKenzie, St. John, N. B.; J. C. Vergesslich; M. A. Mooney, Cleveland; John Pavone, New Haven; Byron Adams, Memphis; A. W. Anderson, Des Moines, and Hall Walsh, St. Louis.

Mr. Sears announced promotions.

Ben Kalmenson, central district manager, was made eastern district manager with the following branches under his supervision: New York Metropolitan, Boston, New Haven, Albany and Buffalo.

Robert Smeltzer, Mid-Atlantic district manager, was promoted to the central district in addition to his own territory which includes the Philadephia and Washington branches. His added territories are Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Detroit.

S. Charles Einfeld opened Thursday morning's session. He was followed by Ed Selzer, studio publicity head: Herbert Crooker, Harry Goldberg and Joe Bloom.

The afternoon session was taken up by Mr. Sears, who made known details of the sales policy for 1937-38. Of the 60 features announced 37 will be A pictures, Mr. Sears said.

Jack Robbins, head of Robbins Music Company, in which Loew's, Inc., is financially interested, will divide his time between offices in Hollywood, New York and London in the future. He will spend five months of the year in Hollywood, five months in New York and two in England.

Add Giveaways in 17 Warner Houses

The Warner-Stanley theatre interests operating in the Philadelphia territory this week gave out the word that besides the 12 of the circuit houses now playing chance games, 13 more will start the practice and four out-of-town units will do the same. The move follows plans announced recently for Warner to compete with games in all spots where independents were using them.

Meanwhile, in Swainsboro, Ga., City Attorney G. L. Smith said that indictments are on file charging W. M. Karrh, operator of a circuit of Georgia theatres, and L. E. Dunn, manager of the Dixie, for the operation of a Sunday show along with the running of a lottery in connection with a chance game. The lottery indictment followed the ruling of Judge Clayton Jones of the city court at Albany in favor of the state in its action against Frank Barker charged with operating a lottery in connection with running Bank Night.

Steps to reopen the question of Bank Night legality were taken in the state supreme court at Chicago, Ill., Monday, when a rehearing was asked by Balaban and Katz attorneys as Municipal Judge Sonsteby continued until June 9 the motion for new trials in the cases of 46 theatres whose managers were fined for operating Bank Night.

The Bank Night case of Missouri versus R. W. McEwan in Kansas City was argued before the state supreme court this week and taken under advisement.

County Attorney John E. Sidner at Tekamah, Neb., has ordered all theatres in his county using Bank Night to discontinue the game in compliance with a new ruling of District Judge Fred W. Messmore at Beatrice, Neb., that Bank Night is a lottery. Judge Messmore did not stop the drawings, however, since both sides in the state's case against the Fox Beatrice Theatre Corporation had agreed in advance that Bank Night would not suspend operations until the state supreme court had made a ruling.

Advertising Club Head

Lowell Thomas, radio and newsreel commentator for Fox Movietone News, has been nominated for the presidency of the Advertising Club of New York to succeed H. B. LeQuatte. Other nominations are: vice-president, Lee J. Eastman, Packard Motor Car Company of New York; treasurer, Ralph Trier, president, New York Theatre Program Corporation; directors, Mr. LeQuatte and J. J. Clark, assistant to the president of Liggett Drug Company. The election will be held on May 10th.

Bradford Changes Post

Guy Bradford, formerly salesman and then branch manager for Gaumont British in Kansas City, has resigned and joined United Artists to cover southern Kansas. He succeeds Joseph Levy.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

To David Oliver Selznick, who has been worrying unceasingly in an unsuccessful search for a boy to play the title role of "Tom Sawyer," we recommend, without any reservations, the Kokomo, Indiana, lad who, in a rural school's dramatic production of the Mark Twain classic, startled the authorities by swinging an honest-to-goodness dead cat instead of a "prop." The part had called for a dead cat, so the boy went out and killed one.

So help us, Columbia Pictures' home office press department sent out a statement the other day explaining with joyful pride that they are testing monkeys at Frank Buck's Long Island zoo for sex appeal for their "Jungle Menace."

"The same careful attention that goes into the making of Columbia features will go into the making of the 'Jungle Menace' serial," says the announcement. And to prove it, they are sending Harry Foster, test director and Jack Clemens, cameraman, to the Buck zoo to make careful tests of the simians' sex-appeal.

Time was when the film business—then called "the film game"—signed up every freak, headliner and whatnot of oddity and rushed them to the screen with the same ballyhooing of the checked-suit side show spieler. Those days have long since passed and, save for the infrequent engagement of a Gypsy Rose Lee, the Hollywood producers adhere pretty much to the lines of the evolution.

But not such advancement can be claimed for some of our show business contemporaries. There's the Sam Schleisner interests in Baltimore, for instance, who have purchased Mrs. Wally (Duke of Windsor) Simpson's former home at 212 East Biddle Street, in Baltimore, and opened it to the public for a dollar a peek—at the bedroom and all.

Montague, the newsreel's assignment editor, and Tom Waller, home office publicist, had arranged to photograph, in advance of the event, the various newsreel photographers perched atop their Coronation filming positions, for publication in this issue of the* HERALD. The pictures had been taken on the day before the disaster and flown to Frankfort-on-Maine in Germany.

The editorial department of our contemporary, Film Daily, is responsible for the merry quip about the Hoboken, New Jersey, exhibitor whose opposition caused him worry, no end, by running a newspaper advertisement announcing that he was giving away a Shetland pony on a certain day. Gypsy Rose Bares All

PAUL HARRISON, NEA service staff correspondent in Hollywood, interviews a former burlesque queen—"America's No. 1 Strip Teaser"—turned movie star:

Q. Your name is Gypsy Rose Lee?

A. Well, yes. Originally it was Rose Louise Hovick, but my public began to confuse it with "Havoc," so I changed it to Lee.

Q. You were a strip-tease artiste in burlesque, were you not?

A. I was, but I'm not. I have discarded the habiliments of my earlier profession down to the last spangle and fragment of black lace. I am now a motion picture actress, and if you don't believe it you can ask the Hays office.

Q. How do you like the California climate?

A. It's pretty warm for these long-sleeved, high-necked dresses.

Q. How tall are you, Miss Lee?

A. Five feet, 10 inches. And I weigh 126 pounds in my step-outs and slippers. I always wear slippers.

Q. Who is your favorite movie star?

A. Well, Jean Harlow has certain qualities that I admire. But she doesn't work for Twentieth Century-Fox, does she? Maybe you'd better say Shirley Temple.

Q. What do you expect to accomplish in your cinema career, Miss Lee?

A. Well, I'll do anything that Darryl Zanuck wants me to do, but I modestly believe that I have varied talents.

Of special interest to our high-eatin' film folk is the movement started by the Reform Committee of Western Hotelkeepers to find the best alternative name for "hors d'oeuvres" which, they say, make strong men stutterers.

The best suggestion to date, they report, is "dingle-doos."

'Twas a sad, sad gathering that gathered around Louisville last Saturday night after the Kentucky Derby race classic. To last year's Derby and the usual banquet of Kentucky Colonels attendant thereto, Chief-Kentucky-Colonel Charlie Pettijohn, sitting atop a big, brown, bay brewery horse, led a whole army of motion picture Kentucky Colonels down to the race from Broadway, and to the festivities thereafter. There was some fun; and some bourbon fancying. But not so this year, for hardly a bare half-dozen Kentucky Colonels were on hand from the movie sectors, and even Charlie himself, riding alone, moved into the Churchill Downs track from a rear gate, by way of French Lick Springs, and not with banners from Broadway.

The reason for the lack of enthusiasm on the part of the Kentucky Colonels from the motion picture and other fields is the lack of enthusiasm on the part of Kentucky's present Governor, "Happy" Chandler, for Kentucky Colonels.

Seems that some of Governor Chandler's predecessors got to overdoing the Kentucky Colonel business. All one needed to obtain a Kentucky Colonelcy was a press agent, and with so many press agents in the film business, nearly everyone in it was a Kentucky Colonel, from Mae West to Shirley Temple, and clear through to the barbers and elevator operators in Broadway's film buildings.

The Colonels under Governor Chandler's predecessors became so numerous after a while that the Republicans in the state began to charge rank discrimination. Now the Democrats charge the same.

Digging into the archives on research for "The Marseillaise," one-reel drama of the birth of the French national anthem, Roy Rowland, directing for Metro, discovered that the origin of the bobbed hair was in reality a grim joke of the French Revolution, and that the guillotine set the fashion.

During the revolution, the guillotine worked overtime when aristocrats and royalists were being carted to their doom daily. The hangman bobbed the hair to make the job at least one shade easier, so the French grisettes, who used to join the jeering crowds, took to cutting their hair short, as a jibe to those being carried to the executioner's axe.

LEGITIMATE THEATRE FORMULATING PLANS FOR REHABILITATING STAGE

Film Options and Releasing Actors for Stage Season Among Subjects of Convention of Am. Theatre Council

The comparatively new American Theatre Council of the Broadway stage is aiming to win millions of new patrons for its box offices, in competition with motion picture theatres or otherwise. Plans for accomplishing this will be formulated at the first national convention of the legitimate theatre, which will be held at the Hotel Astor, New York, from May 24th to 27th, under the Council's auspices. Conventions will be held annually, and in 1939 an international meeting will be held in connection with the World's Fair.

Twenty-two cities will participate in the convention, with Paul N. Turner, counsel of Actors Equity Association, and Warren P. Munsell acting as executive directors. Fifty-seven leading stage players, producers, managers and critics have been named to an advisory board which will assist in formulating plans to "advance the interests of the legitimate theatre, increase play-going, provide for the future by encouraging youth in writing, acting and directing, cooperate with the public in serving the public more effectively and extend to the country at large the professional theatre now chiefly centered in New York, thus to raise the standards of the art of the theatre and the efficiency of its business organization."

The convention will be divided into a number of sessions, each designed for promoting a practical policy to be thereafter carried out by the various groups of the theatre either through individual organizations or through the American Theatre Council.

The members of the committee which will work in conjunction with the general convention committee, and the cities which those members will represent, are as follows:

New York—Alfred Lunt, Lynn Fontaine, Charles Coburn, Maurice Evans, Walter Huston, Helen Hayes, Brock Pemberton, Gilbert Miller, Gene Buck, Brooks Atkinson, Burns Mantle, John Mason Brown, Herman Shumlin, Theresa Helburn, Antoinette Perry, Norman Bel Geddes, Lee Simonson, William McBride, Daniel Frohman, Martin Beck, Adrienne Morrison, Lee Shubert, John Golden, Frank Case, Anne Morgan, Emanuel Celler and Jack Pulaski.
New Haven—William Lyon Phelps and Walter Prichard Eaton.
Philadelphia—Arthur Hobson Quinn and William K. Huff.
Washington—Andrew R. Kelley.
Chicago—Claudia Cassidy and Sam P. Gerson.
Denver—A. M. Oberfelder.
Madison, Wis.—Asher Levy.
Baltimore—Leonard B. McLaughlin, Warren Wilmer Brown, Louis Azrael.
Detroit—E. D. Stair and Alfred G. Wilson.
Cleveland—Carl Hanna.
Boston—L. A. Sloper, Elinor Hughes and Elliot Norton.
St. Louis — Colvin McPherson and Charles J. Cella.
Albany—C. R. Roseberry.
Buffalo—William E. J. Martin.
Memphis—Harry Martin.
Des Moines—Kenneth Clayton.
Louisville—Boyd Martin.
Newark—Edward S. Hipp.
Charlotte, N. C.—T. D. Kemp, Jr.
Dayton—A. S. Kany.
Providence—Garrett Byrnes.
Montreal—S. Morgan-Powell.

While this new move was going forward to "harmonize" all stage interests for its economic betterment, the Actors Equity Association, one of the Council's sponsors and mentors, was split within its own ranks by a block of insurgents using strong efforts to overthrow the Gillmore-Dullzell administration.

Taking as the convention keynote the formulation of tangible plans for increasing public support of the stage and reviving "the road," Broadway's leading stage personalities will sit in on the four-day sessions and at the three luncheons and the banquet which will mark adjournment. Helen Hayes will deliver the address of welcome.

Forty subjects already are listed for discussion, among them these: Cooperation for the stage from outside sources; Producers and the theatre; The stage and the public; Dramatists and the theatre; Actors and the theatre and, of more direct importance to the film business. he relationship of the legitimate theatre and motion pictures.

Arrangements will be sought for release of stars and playwrights from motion picture contracts in order that they may be available to the legitimate theatre. The stage, principally through Equity, for several months has been campaigning for motion picture companies' cooperation in a revival of the stage by placing stage plays in film houses either on combination film-stage policies or complete stage shows of the legitimate field.

The motion picture also will figure in other subjects listed for discussion at the convention. In line with the Council's objective, the opening of film houses to legitimate plays again will be attempted.

Options To Be Discussed

In connection with the conversations on facilitating the release of film talent for the regular theatrical seasons, the convention also is scheduled to take up the subject of the effect on the stage of continuing motion picture player options.

Admission scale levels will be discussed, and so will the subjects of types of plays suitable for the road, subsidization and education for aspiring dramatists, methods of increasing play production, play financing, new stage theatres and improved physical conditions for existing theatres:—the stage is suffering from the lack of new theatre construction and inadequate mechanical contrivances for comfort, such as cooling and ventilating systems and acoustical properties.

Governmental financial aid for the stage is another subject scheduled for attention of the convention delegates, also the subject of how the legitimate theatre may benefit most from the expenditure of WPA funds.

"With the general betterment of economic conditions, there is a striking increase in theatre-going in all the large cities where any attempt has been made to furnish playgoers with first rate attractions," says the American Theatre Council. "This is particularly evident in those cities where a legitimate play has been presented each week—avoiding dark houses—so that the playgoing habit has become firmly established again in these cities."

22 Cities Will Be Represented May 24 - 27; Actors Equity Split by Insurgents Seeking to Overthrow Gillmore

The Council believes that it is necessary to the future of the American stage that "every effort should be made to supply the demand for theatrical entertainment throughout the entire country." The convention, therefore, will effect studies and the cooperation of all groups in order to provide the best possible conditions for local resident acting companies and for touring companies, and stimulate the sending out of many additional touring companies without lowering the standards of acting and production.

"It is expected," continues the Council, "that the managers of the majority of out-of-town theatres will attend the convention, and will be in a position to learn, by the exchange of information, how to increase theatre attendance. At the same time, New York managers, actors and dramatists will be acquainted by the out-of-town managers with the problems which they in turn encounter in building up attendance in other cities."

There will be an examination made at the convention into the relations of the public with the theatre. Easier and better ticket distribution systems, the requirements of suburban audiences and the quality of productions will be discussed.

Formed by Several Groups

Formed a few months ago by the League of New York Theatres, Actors Equity Association, the Dramatists' Guild and labor organizations in the stage field, the American Theatre Council was described by Equity last week as representing "the most valuable tool the theatre has ever known" for the rehabilitation of the stage.

Equity has been striving for more than 10 years to bring into one organization representatives of the producing managers, dramatists, actors and other theatre unions, and believes this has been accomplished through the American Theatre Council, with all sides contributing "valuable and original ideas."

Equity, however, intends to dominate the Council.

Equity says that several other stage unions have under consideration affiliation with the Theatre Council. While the stagehands, the IATSE of the American Federation of Labor, have not formally approved, it is understood favorable action will be taken.

Musicians Reject Bid

Musicians, however, last week rejected a bid to join. The New York Herald-Tribune reported that Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians, while not actually admitting so, views the Council as "a company union," what with a majority of the producers already acting as Council members. Such an affiliation between the musicians union and the Council, it was said, might endanger the existing basic employment agreement between the musicians and producers.

Brooks Atkinson, drama critic of the New York Times and president of the New York Drama Critics Circle, likewise was reported in the Herald-Tribune to have officially declined Council membership for the group, on the grounds that the Council's program was outside the scope of the Circle, which confines its activities to awarding a prize for what it considers the year's best play.

PARAMOUNT AND OTHER CASES MAY BRING REORGANIZATION LAW

Securities Commission, After Study, Recommends Legislation for Expeditious and Economical Rehabilitation

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

Legislation restricting the control of corporation reorganizations to bona fide security holders and their direct representatives was recommended to Congress on Monday by the Securities and Exchange Commission on the basis of its findings of conditions surrounding the Paramount Pictures and several other reorganizations dedeveloped during the investigation it has been conducting since October, 1934.

The legislation also would prohibit practices which the SEC charges have been characterized as the general strategy and technique of reorganizations and would give to the Commission the power to require disclosure of all relevant facts concerning committees in reorganizations which are not within the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

Meanwhile, the House Judiciary Committee on Tuesday authorized a favorable report on the bill of Representative Sabath of Illinois authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to appoint conservators to take charge of corporation reorganizations.

The Commission's recommendations were incorporated in a 916-page volume printed by the United States Government Printing Office, comprising the fourth report on the investigation, the major conclusion of which is that the vast body of stockholders and bondholders receive inadequate protection and representation under existing reorganization procedures.

In substance, the Commission recommends legislation designed to supply assurance that the primary objectives of reorganization will be the expeditious, economical and honest reconstruction of the distressed enterprise into an efficient going concern.

"The most striking characteristic of many reorganizations," the SEC explained, "is the fight to retain or obtain control, which follows immediately upon financial collapse of a company." Banker-management groups affiliated with the company at the beginning of reorganization are generally the victors in these campaigns, it was said.

"This fight for control is motivated by the profits accruing to those who are able to dominate the nature and activities of the reorganization and the affairs of the reorganized company. Among the more direct of these emoluments are large reorganization and protective committee fees, counsel fees, depositary fees, brokerage commissions, underwriting discounts, and the salaries and possibilities of personal profit which flow to those who are able to gain control of the reorganized company."

See Investors' Interests Ignored

The report concludes that "in this struggle for control the interests of investors are too frequently subordinated or completely forgotten." It asserts, also, that the judicial machinery for reorganization has been so employed as to become an important aid to the retention of control by the "inside" group. Frequently, these inside groups are in full operation behind the scenes and are completely prepared for reorganization before the security holders are made aware of the existence of any conditions which would make a reorganization necessary or inevitable. The Commission reports, also, that the practices and objectives of outside groups setting up opposition to the banker-management group are, like the banker-management's practices and objectives, often devoid of any substantial benefit to the investor. The Commission, however, points out that the outside groups do, on occasion, act as a brake upon excessive practices of the inside groups.

DISTRIBUTORS START SALES TAX REFUNDS

United Artists in New York has authorized the refunding of money paid by the metropolitan area theatres, outside of New York City limits, under the city's 2 per cent sales tax law. It was considered likely that other distributors would soon follow suit.

Decision as to whether or not the distributors would appeal from the court of appeals decision, finding that the levy applies only to New York City exhibitors, has not been definitely reached, although it is indicated that the matter will be dropped.

These various practices were said to have been demonstrated in the Paramount's reorganization, from the hearings on which the report cites much testimony designed to bring out the points made by the Commission.

In the Paramount case, Congress was told, a group of actual security holders was organized, composed principally of large holders who were individuals and companies powerful in the financial world. "Its program was founded upon vigorous criticism of the management and the bankers—Kuhn, Loeb and Co. Its objectives were to oust the bankers and the old management from their dominant position and to substitute persons of their own choice. In this they largely succeeded.

"Though the struggle which took place was in the form of a security holders' fight, actually it was a battle between two groups of reorganizers for a position of dominance and supremacy over the new company."

Formed by Fortington

The independent group was formed at the instance of Harold A. Fortington, financial secretary of a group of insurance companies headed by Royal Insurance Co., Ltd., a British concern, it was explained. He became actively concerned with the reorganization plan for Paramount about October, 1934, at which time the reorganization seemed to be nearing its close. Two other committees had been formed by Kuhn, Loeb and Co., one headed by Frank A. Vanderlip, which represented the debenture holders, and the other a stockholders' committee of which Duncan A. Holmes was chairman; these committees had on deposit in the fall of 1934 about $12,870,000 of the $25,177,000 in outstanding debentures and 1,730,133 out of

Fourth Report of Investigation Concludes That Most Stock and Bond Holders Get Inadequate Protection

3,220,902 shares of stock. There was also a bank creditors' committee, of which Percy H. Johnston was chairman, representing claims of about $14,000,000.

"A program of sloughing off unprofitable activities coupled with a general revival in the amusement business had rendered opportune the consummation of the reorganization near the end of 1934," the report continued.

"In other words, at the time Mr. Fortington moved into action it seemed as if the bankers, the management and their committees were about to consummate a plan of reorganization of their own liking."

Various groups enlisted under the Fortington banner after it became apparent he was to play a part in the reorganization, and eventually that group embraced a variety of claims, including stock interests, debenture holdings and trade claims. "But," the commission found, "the group was composed for the most part of persons pecuniarily interested in Paramount rather than mere professional representatives of security holders.

Opposed Banker Domination

"The group relied heavily upon charges of mismanagement of the company's affairs by management and bankers. Its program was based essentially upon the claim that Kuhn, Loeb, Paramount's controlling bankers, and the Paramount management, were disqualified to control the reorganization or to continue to dominate the company's affairs. Indeed, it appears that throughout the period of its activity, the Fortington group was principally concerned with the provisions in the plan of reorganization for management of the company."

Mr. Fortington, the SEC hearings developed, was opposed to the principle of banker domination of the company, and the course of his negotiations with the other committees, which sought to come to an agreement with him, led him to the impression, he declared during the SEC hearings, that Mr. Vanderlip "was a little difficult" and finally demanded that the board of directors named by the Vanderlip committee step out and a board be chosen on merit in a "proper" way, in which he was eventually successful.

Under the reorganization plan, Atlas Corporation was the successful bidder for the underwriting of the second preferred and common stock to be issued and upon approval of the underwriting agreement by the court on April 25, 1935, gave a portion of the underwriting to others, retaining about 25 per cent for itself, those granted a participation including Lehman Brothers, a member of the Fortington group; Lehman Corporation, an investment company managed by Lehman Brothers; Hemhill, Noys and Company; Hallgarten and Company, a member of which, Maurice Newton, was a member of the common stock committees; Goldman, Sachs and Company; Wellington and Company; Cassatt and Company, Inc., a partner of which, Robert Cassatt, was a member of the Vanderlip committee; and White, Weld and Company, Kuhn, Loeb and Company, was also offered participation, but it refused.

Floyd B. Odlum, president of Atlas, and his associates, "felt that the Paramount underwriting was a good piece of business," the SEC report commented, pointing out that all members of the Fortington group were taken care of by Atlas through an offering to them of participation in the underwriting. The Commission also called attention to the fact that partners of certain of the participants in this underwriting, "admitted by the grace of Mr. Odlum and his associates," had been selected as members of the board of the reorganized company.

"In summary," the Commission asserts, "it is clear that Atlas believed that the underwriting would result in a fair profit to it. Furthermore, it is clear that Atlas in dividing its participation in this underwriting, was dispensing valuable business patronage among its friends and associates.

"A similar allotment of favors to its friends occurred when Atlas had other securities of the reorganized corporation at its disposal. In pursuance of the reorganization plan, the bank creditors were to receive preferred stock in part settlement of their claims. Apparently realizing that normal banking policy would require the banks to realize on these securities, Atlas had approached several of the banks with a proposal to buy their new securities on a when-issued basis, and one bank, Bankers Trust Company, had accepted. Atlas bought from it 5,000 shares of this preferred at 60, i. e., at about the then current market price. Atlas immediately informed the rest of the members of the Fortington group that participations in the commitment were available to them at the same price. . . . In June, 1935, at the time of the hearing before this Commission, after the court had confirmed the Paramount plan, the quotations on the stock had advanced about 20 points, representing an appreciation of 33⅓ per cent. Gratitude for the favor bestowed is shown by Mr. Hertz's testimony. . . .

Called "One of the Spoils"

"It is obviously in such manner that business patronage can be dispensed to widen zones of power and influence in the financial and business world," the Commission pointed out. "The underwriting contract involved in this case was realistically one of the spoils of reorganization. Kindred thereto was the opportunity afforded to acquire a participation in a substantial block of preferred stock. But these matters have significance beyond the terms of the reorganization. The underwriting itself is normally the entering wedge for future profitable business connections. Thus there are circumstances which indicate that Atlas and other banking houses, including Lehman Brothers, another member of the Fortington group, wished to establish lasting and profitable banking connections with the reorganized company. This is frequently one of the hopes of underwriting bankers. Once such banking connections were established, Atlas, together with its banking allies to whom it gave participations, might be expected to occupy a position of profit and control in the Paramount enterprise comparable to that enjoyed by Kuhn, Loeb prior to reorganization. This would be the usual and customary result. Banking connections of this kind are sought merely for the emoluments of control which go with them. And in this connection it is extremely significant that every general partner or executive of a banking house who was a member of the new board was given a participation in the underwriting."

The fact that Atlas procured the probably immediately profitable underwriting contract and the possibility of future profit and power cannot alone be taken as a condemnation of the results of the activities of the Fortington group, the SEC report continued, since the underwriting was cheaply done, "but it is interesting to examine the extent of the group's progress with respect to the attainment of its announced principles."

The Fortington platform contained the point that the expenses of reorganization must be held down to a minimum, "but the record shows no effort on the part of the group as such to minimize reorganization expenses, except in so far as the Atlas underwriting fee was below the usual rate," although, in all fairness, it is stated that no member of the group asked for or received an allowance for fees and expenses.

The group also demanded recovery of money illegally disbursed for the purchase of the company's own stock, but the record, the SEC said, shows that no investigations or suits were instituted by the Fortington group to that end.

Another point was that there should be no investment-banker domination of the company; later Fortington modified this to be applicable only to those which did not own securities, and eventually several investment or securities houses were included in the membership of the group.

"It is clear that the original program which Mr. Fortington stressed concerning management of the company was not executed," the Commission commented. "And it is clear that the ultimate arrangements concerning management of the company and underwriting of the securities were profitable to the group and were probably not inherently necessary to protection of its financial stake in Paramount. On the other hand, the Fortington group probably had to compromise and make deals in light of the practical situation and the pressures of various interests. Furthermore, it never undertook to represent security holders generally; it never solicited their support. It acted only for itself. It cannot, therefore, be charged with faithless stewardship.

Cites Division of Control

"From the point of view, however, of the effect of its action upon security holders generally, serious question can be raised. It appears that the ultimate spoils of reorganization—control of the new company—were divided among the Fortington group, the bank creditors and the Vanderlip committee. Provision was made for the continuation of memberships on the board of directors for one, two and three years. In addition, it is subject to serious question whether this change in control was more than a mere substitution of another set of investment bankers for Kuhn, Loeb—a change in dramatis personae rather than a new scheme for management.

"The inference is strong throughout that for various reasons the members of the group were interested in control of the new company: control for purposes of profitable business arrangements; control in the form of directorships; control for purposes of investment banking and other connections. Some side lights are thrown on this aspect of the problem by two withdrawals from the group. Mr. Fortington testified (before the SEC) that Mr. Altschul of Lazard Freres became uninterested in the program of the group when it appeared that he was not to play an active part in the reorganized company. And as we have also stated, White, Weld and Co., investment bankers, were also associated with the Fortington group for a period but withdrew in January, 1935. Mr. Fortington testified that they withdrew principally because of the group's policy that there should be no investment banker domination of Paramount.

"Conversely, the introduction into the company of the influence of Atlas Corporation is likewise illustrative of the point. Atlas was interested in acquiring securities cheaply and, apparently, in underwriting contracts. It was also interested in competing motion picture companies.

"Certainly, then," the Commission concluded, "the group advanced its own interests exceedingly well. The history of this group, like others which we shall relate, illustrates how those who enter the reorganization in the independent advocacy of the interests of the real owners can readily take unto themselves the spoils of victory. In this case the spoils were a share in the control of the company. In terms of realities in the world of finance such control is the chief stake of any reorganization."

convention appeared dubious this week when it became known that the Dramatists' Guild, one of the original sponsors, does not favor any permanent organization embracing both producers and the unions lest it develop into a "baby NRA."

However, Frank Gillmore, president of Actors Equity Association, which has approved the Council's constitution, insists there is no possibility of the Council considering strictly trade issues, noting that the constitution's Article Three rules out matters which are "fundamentally controversial" among various interests in the show business.

Among other opponents of the Council, the insurgent faction of Actors Equity notes, however, that the same Article Three allows consideration of controversial issues if all council members give their unanimous consent.

Anti-Gillmore Campaign

Nor is the Theatre Council the only subject for attack by Equity's insurgents. They are proceeding with determination to effect an anti-Gillmore campaign, starting with election of an independent Equity ticket of councillors on a platform of economy and efficiency, including reduction of salaries of Equity officers and a reduction in Equity's office staff.

In reply to the insurgents' proposal for an economy platform, Mr. Gillmore has replied that the Equity administration preserved assets of $325,000 during the worst of the depression, despite a drop of one-half in the active membership.

The internal Equity situation was complicated further with disclosure that E. J. Blunkall, former Equity WPA representative, had decided to run for the presidency in opposition to Mr. Gillmore.

The opposition group already have placed in nomination for councillors Ilka Chase, Wayne Arey, Clarence Berwent, Richard Gordon, Edward Everett Hale and Paul McGrath, all for full five-year terms, and Edward McNamara, for a two-year replacement term.

The election will take place on June 4th at the Hotel Astor, where voting also will be conducted on the official Equity slate, as follows: Officers to serve three years: President, Frank Gillmore; first vice-president, Osgood Perkins; second vice-president, Florence Reed; third vice-president, Arthur Byron; fourth vice-president, Peggy Wood; treasurer, Paul Dullzell; recording secretary, Leo Curley, and the following councillors to serve five years: Glenn Anders, Franklyn Fox, Walter N. Greaza, Louis Jean Heydt, Benjamin S. Lackland, Burgess Meredith, Claudia L. Morgan, Edith L. Van Cleve, and Richard Whorf; and Mary Morris and Clifton Webb, to serve as councillors for unexpired terms.

ALLIED STATES SETS CONVENTION PROGRAM

Says Replies to Questionnaire Indicate "Exhibitors Will Go Slow About Buying"

First draft of Allied States' annual convention program was completed this week, covering the three-day meeting from May 26th to 28th, at the Hotel Pfister, Milwaukee.

The convention will hear the final report on Allied's present buying survey among independent exhibitors, disclosing the buying habits of exhibitors throughout the country.

Preliminary tabulations of 375 questionnaire forms covering more than 400 theatres in 29 exchange centers were said by Allied this week to bear out the prediction that "exhibitors will go slow with their buying this year and await the reports to and action taken at the convention".

Not more than 22 of the reporting exhibitors were said to have bought "anything like their requirements for the ensuing year; 38 have bought two or three products (mostly two) and 34 have bought only one line, leaving 281 who have signed no contracts whatever."

The returns at this stage were said to indicate that exhibitors served from Portland, Ore., have done more 1937-38 buying and those served from Detroit less buying than in other territories.

The final report, made at the convention, "will enable exhibitors to draw certain conclusions which should be of value to them in future buying operations," said a statement issued this week from Allied headquarters in Washington, D. C.

Problems Involved

Allied claims that the buying survey will show whether block booking is more prevalent in one territory than in another; whether "the other fellow" has to take all the short subjects of a distributor; whether one exhibitor is being "soaked" with more percentage pictures than the exhibitors in other territories; whether a national policy exists on designated play dates; and whether film rental contract terms are "tougher" where there is no effective exhibitor organization than where there is.

Last week, through P. J. Wood of Ohio, general convention chairman, an invitation was issued to all independent exhibitors, regardless of their affiliation, to attend the convention. It was said at that time that the committee is working on a schedule of subjects for discussion and the assignment of speakers thereto, and that some subjects had already been determined, including: "Television and its probable effect upon motion picture theatres"; "Additional profit to be obtained through proper air conditioning"; "What the distributor can do to help the exhibitor sell his merchandise," etc. The first draft of the program now stands as follows:

LAST DAYS OF STATE LEGISLATURES BRING FINAL BATCH OF FILM BILLS

Connecticut Governor Favors 10 Per Cent Amusement Tax; Ohio 7 Cent Assessment Called Unlikely as Committee Disbands

With the last of the state legislatures starting toward adjournment, only 10 states this week were concerned with legislation affecting the motion picture industry.

In California there is a discussion of an increased gross income tax;

Governor Wilbur Cross, of Connecticut, came out in favor of a 10 per cent amusement tax measure;

New theatre taxes were proposed in Florida;

Various municipalities in Georgia voted in favor of Sunday shows;

Missouri passed the minimum wage and hour measure;

The governor of Maine signed the sales tax law;

Measures which threatened additional taxes to exhibitors in Ohio appeared beaten;

South Carolina passed a new sales tax;

The Wisconsin minimum wage and hour bill was also favorably accepted.

Meanwhile, in Washington, D. C., the House judiciary committee authorized Representative Samuel Hobbs of Alabama to appear before the Rules Committee and ask that his resolution providing for a general investigation of the motion picture industry be brought out on the floor of the House of Representatives for debate.

Copyright legislation also was taken up by the Senate patents committee, members of which indicated that hearings would be called, possibly late this month, following disposal of other legislation now pending.

Sabath To Demand Action

Representative Adolph J. Sabath, who headed the special Congress committee which studied film and theatre reorganizations, said he intended to press for enactment of a law to name conservators to control bondholders' committees in receiverships.

Mr. Sabath said he did not care whether the judiciary committee reported his bill or some other, but that he would insist a bill be reported. Otherwise, he said, he would press for continuance of his special probing committee.

Hearings are scheduled in the California legislature at Sacramento this week on an increase in the state's gross income tax. The original date for the discussions was April 20.

Governor Cross at Hartford, Conn., expressed himself in favor of the proposed 10 per cent amusement tax bill, now before the state finance committee, as well as other tax bills on cosmetics, tobacco, etc., saying that the $1,500,000 revenue from amusements, the $1,170,000 from tobacco and other lesser figures would be sufficient to make interest and dividends taxes or any form of income tax unnecessary.

The Missouri House has passed the bill which sets up a method for fixing minimum wages for women and children.

A few hours before final adjournment of the Maine legislature, Governor Lewis C. Barrows signed a bill which provides a one per cent retail sales tax to raise "new money" for old age assistance and equalization of education. The bill replaces the luxury or miscellaneous tax bill which called for a 10 per cent amusement tax.

New Jersey Levies Doubted

Possibility of the enactment of new state taxes affecting the industry in New Jersey is considered to have been removed completely when the legislature repassed over Governor Harold Hoffman's veto a bill providing for the diversion to emergency relief financing of $7,917,000 motorist taxes.

At the home offices of large companies in New York it was not anticipated that they would be affected by the New York state law providing for the establishment of minimum wages and maximum working hours for women and minors, spokesmen for the various organizations declared. It was generally pointed out that despite the collapse of the NRA, its wage and hour provisions have been retained.

Meanwhile, the Senate at Albany passed and sent to the Assembly the Berg bill requiring a permit and payment of a $10 fee to change the location of a place of business of reselling tickets of admission to theatres and places of amusement and providing that no license shall be issued unless the office is approved as suitable. An amendment was also offered by Bernard J. Moran to his Assembly bill taxing films. The amendment would increase the proposed levy from one mill to five mills per foot.

A measure regulating the admission of unaccompanied children to theatres was passed and sent to Governor Herbert Lehman. The Reoux bill, which amends the town law generally so as to give towns of the state jurisdiction over the operation of all amusements, was also passed by both houses and sent to the governor for signature.

Ohio Admission Tax Fading

The industry in Ohio was jubilant over the latest turn in legislative matters at Columbus which sounded the death knell of the proposed seven per cent increase in admission taxes. The House taxation committee, which had the measure under consideration a week ago, took no action and has now permanently disbanded after having indefinitely postponed action on all pending measures. This, it is pointed out, is equivalent to death of the admission tax bill. The committee also killed the bill calling for a tax of 10 per cent of radio advertising revenue for flood relief. Governor Davey, however, signed the civil rights bill, granting equal civil rights in all public places regardless of color or race.

Representative Bryant at Columbia, S. C., has introduced a bill providing for a gross retail sales tax of two per cent.

The Biemiller-Balzer bill, providing for an eight-hour day, 44-hour maximum work week for women in Wisconsin, passed the Assembly and is now before the Senate at Madison. The law also provides that women shall not work more than nine hours per day or 50 hours per week.

In Georgia, the city commission at Rome has sanctioned Sunday shows providing the proceeds go to charity, while Thomasville has allowed the performances with no restrictions.

Phil Gersdorf has joined the Twentieth Century-Fox publicity department in Hollywood under Harry Brand along with Dick Pittinger, who had been with Radio for the past seven years. Nat Harrison has succeeded Mr. Pittinger at Radio.

CBS Survey Sets American Radios At 24,500,000

The Columbia Broadcasting System Radio Census of 1937, a brochure bringing up to date the company's four-year continuous measurement of the national radio audience, compiled under the direction of Dr. Daniel Starch, revealed this week, among other facts, that more than 24,500,000 families in the United States own radio receiving sets.

Personal interviews with some 160,000 set owners in all parts of the country form the basis for the figures contained in the survey. The interviews by Dr. Starch's statisticians during the four quarter periods from 1936 covered every income group of 160 communities of 2,500 and more. In this category it was found that nine out of every 10 families were radio owners.

The brochure discloses a total of 33,000,000 sets in use in homes and automobiles. At the beginning of 1937, 24,500,000 families owned radios. The number of automobile radios in use at the beginning of the year is shown in the study at 4,500,000. Taking into account the 4,000,000 families owning more than one radio, the survey arrives at the 33,000,000 set mark.

Of the 24,500,000 families owning radios early in 1937, Dr. Starch's researchers learned that 20,212,500 listened to the radio an average of five hours each day. In 1932 the average daily period for each family listening was 4.1 hours.

The intensity of ownership of radios according to the size of family income varied as follows:

98.6 per cent of homes with incomes over $5,000; 96.3 per cent of homes with incomes of $2,000 to $5,000; 85.1 per cent of homes with incomes of 2,000 or less.

The percentages of homes having radios in communities of various sizes are as follows:

92.4 per cent in cities over 250,000; 90.8 per cent in cities of 25,000 to 250,000; 91.8 per cent in cities of 10,000 to 25,000; 88.8 per cent in cities over 2,500 to 10,000.

Ownership figures by time zones show the Pacific region first with 91.3 per cent of all homes equipped with radios; the Eastern division next with 90.7 per cent; the mountain region third with 89.7 per cent, and the Central zone last with 88.8 per cent.

At some time each day four out of five of the nation's radio families use their sets, 64.0 per cent after 6 P. M., 57.6 per cent before that hour.

Universal has closed a deal with General Theatres Corp. under which the company's complete service will go into the circuit's houses in Sydney, Melbourne, Brisbane, Adelaide, Hobart and Launceston (Tasmania).

NEW SPACE SYSTEM FOR SUPER-IMPOSED TITLES

United Artists Corporation in New York claims it has developed a system to eliminate dissatisfaction over super-imposed titles on foreign language motion pictures brought into this country. The objection raised by both exhibitors and audiences has been that the titles distract attention from the action.

The change is effected by taking the super-imposed title from the main action-frame and printing it on the bottom of the "frame-line," the space below the picture area. Instead of printing two or more identical titles at one time, on the picture area, the new system provides for the printing of only one or two titles at a time, no more. The frame-lines are deep enough for two lines of type the same face-size as the type used in the old method.

Existing technical difficulties in preparation and printing caused United Artists to work out the new method of printing foreign-language titles on all current and future productions, both black and white and color. In taking the title away from the picture area (frame), it is placed on a constantly black background underneath the frame, to insure constant density and brightness.

Title Footage Not Affected

The new method, says United Artists, will not affect the title footage. For instance, under the old method, three lines of title might have appeared simultaneously on the screen within a footage of seven feet. The "frame-line" method will present the same three lines successively within the same seven feet of film footage.

Before the advent of sound on film the aperture of a silent projector formed a picture outline on the screen in a proportion of approximately three-quarters to one. The aperture of a "sound-on-film" projector at first formed an outline more nearly square. To overcome this square effect of the picture the frame-lines were considerably widened and the sound picture aperture was shaped to conform.

By using a sound picture aperture with a height the same as the old silent aperture it is possible to frame the picture to include the lower frame-line bearing the "frame-line superimposed title." These apertures are made by filming the old aperture to conform to the new "frame-line" superimposed titling.

Exhibitors will require nothing more than a new aperture, which many of them can make themselves, says United Artists, so simple is the change-over, and a drop in the masking of the lower part of their screens to fit the new aperture frame in accordance with the "throw." United Artists is servicing all its foreign offices with the new aperture and foreign supply houses will have them available for the Simplex and other projection machines.

"No disadvantage is incurred by the installation of this new method," it is said. "The prevailing old method of superimposing titles still can be projected through the new apertures, the only difference being that there will be a dark blank space on the bottom of the screen (the blank frame-line) which need not be masked out.

"From an audience viewpoint, the changeover to this new method will be distinctly gratifying. Titles will appear clearly, concisely and uniformly. They will always be seen in the same accustomed space below the picture and the letters will always be of the same standard size and the same unvarying brightness. There will be no cause for complaint that the sub-titles are blurry or occasionally illegible or 'jumpy,'" says the company announcement.

Not Patented

"The benefits are especially notable in the case of Technicolor productions, such as the Selznick International film, 'A Star Is Born,' the first picture in which the new United Artists technique is being applied. Heretofore audiences complained that the title-across-the-picture was not only interrupting the smooth flow or composition of the colors but that it was ruining the sense of reality in the new Technicolor process.

"No cause for such complaint now remains, and it is believed that the new system not only has solved a difficult problem but has set a new technical standard.

"The new method is not patentable, and as a consequence it is expected that within a few months every other producer will be utilizing the 'frame-line' method."

Jacksonville Council

The Jacksonville, Fla., Motion Picture Council elected Mrs. L. R. Andrews president this week. Other officers chosen to serve for the year were Mrs. Leslie C. Jones and J. F. Marron, vice-presidents; Mrs. Mary I. Baker, recording secretary; Mrs. Alford, corresponding secretary, and Harwood Rosser, treasurer.

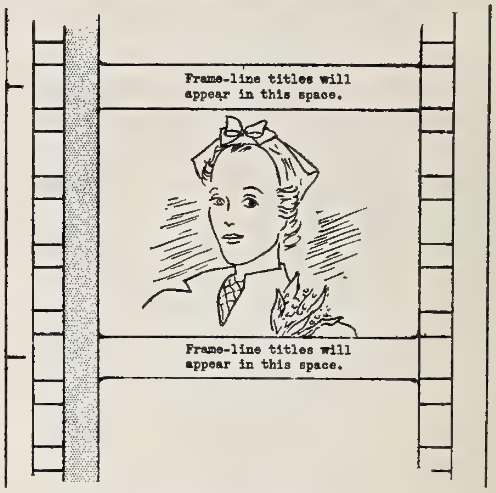
Luncheon for Schaefer

Gus J. Schaefer, manager of Paramount's Central European foreign territory, who recently resigned to become general foreign manager for Universal, was honored with a luncheon in New York Monday at the Hotel Astor by his Paramount associates. Among those present were F. Mohrhardt, W. B. Cokell, E. A. Brown, M. Simpson, J. McDermott, R. Clement, T. X. Jones,. G Weltner, F. LeRoy, M. Kusell, J. J. Unger, A. Deane and C. Gartner.

Judell Names Goldman

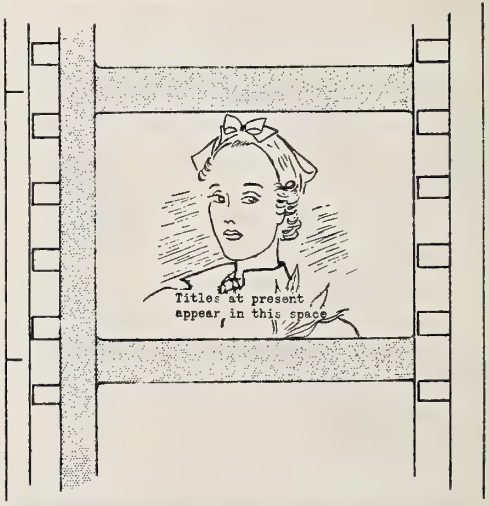
Sol Goldman, formerly in the sales department, has been placed in charge of the B. F. Judell exchange in Chicago to take the place of Carl Harthill, who resigned to take over the office of Capitol-Monogram in Indianapolis.

New and Old in Title Placement



Frame-line titles will appear in this space.
Frame-line titles will appear in this space.

UNDER UNITED ARTISTS' plan for improving the presentation of foreign language pictures in this country, the superimposed titles henceforth will be printed on the bottom of the "frame-line," as shown in the upper sketch, instead of within the main action-frame, as at present (lower sketch).



Dr. Joachim to Engineers

FUTURE OF INDUSTRY IN AUSTRALIA HANGS ON HOYTS-UNION DECISION

Kent and Hutchinson Will Participate in Discussions in September on Renewal of Five-Year Contract

by CLIFF HOLT
in Melbourne

Of vital moment to the entire industry in Australasia and of equal importance to every distributor servicing this market, the future of General Theatres Corporation, the operating company for the city interests of Hoyts and Greater Union Theatres, Australia's biggest and most important circuits, is in the balance.

The five-year "working agreement" into which Hoyts and Greater Union Theatres entered on Dec. 31, 1932, terminates on December 31st of this year, and it is expected that the decision as to whether the agreement will be renewed, or the two companies will dissolve partnership and again enter into active competition, will be reached next September.

To play a leading part in the discussions between the directors of the interested organizations, Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, which owns a controlling interest in Hoyts, and Walter J. Hutchinson, general foreign manager, will arrive in Sydney the first week in September. They will be here only two weeks, but in that time it is probable that settlement will be made of the most momentous issue in which the industry in this country has yet been involved.

Under the terms of the original agreement, both Hoyts and Greater Union Theatres were required to give 12-months notice of withdrawal from GTC, and both—Hoyts and Stuart F. Doyle for Greater Union—have said that the necessary notice has been given. This in itself, however, is not of great moment. The real point at stake is whether the parties to the agreement can arrange satisfactory terms for a lengthy renewal. Opinion is divided as to the outcome of this possibility, but indicative of how obscure are the true prospects is the statement made to the writer on the highest authority that the directors of both Hoyts and Greater Union "are completely in the dark."

Remember Experiences

It seems clear that each company would have several good reasons for wishing to dissolve partnership, but fresh in the mind of both directorates, no doubt, are their experiences before the partnership was created. In the boom period both were paying high prices for film and proceeding with extravagant theatre building programs, and while attendances were maintained these huge expenditures seemed justified. Then the world slump came.

Holding heavy overdrafts for both concerns, the E. S. & A. bank intervened. Then followed the amalgamation of the Hoyts and Greater Union city theatre interests into General Theatres Corporation. By buying film as one company and not as competitors GTC was able to get film from the majority of distributors at lower prices.

With the return of improved industrial and economic conditions, and a subsequent improvement in receipts, GTC began to emerge from the red and Hoyts and Greater Union were able to put their house in order. Both companies are now stabilized and their profits are consistent. But if the dissolution of GTC is brought about at the end of the year, what then?

One thing is certain. Competition will be hotter than ever. Of major importance will be film supply, and if one company shows a tendency to pay high prices, it will provide the lever for the distributors to force prices up all around. Stuart F. Doyle, managing director of Greater Union, has said that in 1938 his company will build or acquire 200 suburban or country theatres to establish his rural circuit on a basis comparable with its metropolitan holdings. Since the total number of theatres in the Commonwealth is little more than 1,400, he proposes apparently to increase the number bv 14 per cent, and he should know best where he is going to put them. On the other hand, Hoyts, for the last year or so, has gradually been enlarging its neighborhood circuit and bringing existing houses up to date.

In the event of dissolution, one doubts where the theatre-building "war" of seven, eight and nine years ago will be started anew, but one easily sees that the distributors, eager for a dissolution, will be in a position to make the circuits dance a tune that would be merry for them, but singularly lacking in jocularity for the theatre companies, should one try to beat the other to contracts.

Meanwhile, American companies, vitally interested, will be watching the proceedings keenly and closely; and until a decision one way or the other is reached, a welter of rumor and propaganda will complicate what promises to be the most dramatic company story in Australia's film history.

Williamson Appeal Dropped

By a majority of three judges to one, the Full Court of the High Court of Australia dismissed an appeal by J. C. Williamson, Ltd., from a decision of the Full Court of Victoria that the exclusion of motion picture rights from the company's rights to perform the musical play, "Rose Marie," included the rights of the play.

The effect of this is that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is now at liberty to distribute and have exhibited in Australia the sound film, "Rose Marie," without an infringement of Williamson's rights.

The plaintiff, seeking to enjoin the defendants, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Theatres and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Ltd., from exhibiting the talking picture version of "Rose Marie," said that in 1924 it obtained from an American company a grant of all performing rights of the play in Australia, with the exception of "moving picture film rights." It contended that that reservation extended only to moving pictures as understood by those words in 1924, and not to a sound version.

In a joint statement dismissing the appeal, the three judges said that the intention of the agreement appeared to be to reserve to the grantor of the rights so much of the exclusive performing rights as would allow the exploitation of the commercial exhibition of the moving picture as practiced at the time, and as it might be improved or developed during the life of the copyright.

Broadcasting Deal

One of the biggest deals in the history of the commercial radio industry in Australia has been closed by the Commonwealth Broadcasting Company, which for three years has been operating 2UW, Sydney. Owned by Greater Union Theatres, Ltd., and the Albert family, wealthy Australian music publishers, CBC has now either purchased outright, gained control, or formed an association with a chain of 12 leading "B"-class stations in New South Wales, Victoria and Queensland, giving the company a radio coverage of almost 80 per cent of the Commonwealth.

Williamson Loses Appeal from Victoria Court's Decision That Showing of 'Rose Marie' Does Not Violate Agreement

One of the directors of CBC is Stuart F. Doyle.

A plan will be submitted soon to shareholders for amalgamation of four picture theatre companies, Greater J. D. Williams, Ltd., Spencers, Wests and Amalgamated Pictures. The proposal is that shareholders surrender their holdings in return for shares in the operating company, Greater Union Theatres, Ltd. The total subscribed capital of the four companies is $5,733,760 and the paid-up capital of Greater Union is $2,000,000. Under the plan shareholders will have a direct voice in election of the directors of the operating company, whereas at present they have only an indirect influence as the board is elected by the directors of the holding companies. It is believed that the ultimate distribution of stock to shareholders will be at below the par value of their present holding. The actual distribution in each case will vary according to the interest of each company in the operating company.

Greater Union Theatres, Ltd., does not issue a balance-sheet, but if the scheme is agreed to, a balance-sheet will be issued to shareholders.

Queensland Contract Issue

At the annual conference of the Queensland Exhibitors Association members discussed standardization of contracts and decided to place under consideration a suggestion of approaching the State Government on the matter. It also was decided to approach the Arbitration Court for variations and rulings to clear up the anomalies that exist in the Theatrical Employees' Award, the opinion being that in its present form the Award would ruin country exhibitors and jeopardize even suburban theatre owners.

The resignation of Arthur Powell, president for the last three years, was reluctantly accepted, and John F. Rogers was elected president, with Marshall Palmer, vice-president.

New South Wales Quota

The Sydney Sunday Sun publishes an Open Letter to Phil Reisman (but its message in reality is directed to all distributors) in which the RKO executive is called upon to cooperate with local producing units and observe the provisions of the New South Wales Quota Act by including Australian films on RKO's annual program. The letter says:

"The law requires the inclusion of Australian films on your annual programs. Go one better, Mr. Reisman. Cooperate. Send us your stars to work for us. Let the names of your great companies and our growing ones appear in alliance on the screen. Let us forget talk of penalties and substitute plans for progress."

Added significance is given the letter by reason of the fact that talk of forcing distributors here to produce a certain number of Australian films each year, in proportion to their releases, is again being heard from Governmental quarters.

JOINT REPORT MAY 26 ON NEW BRITISH QUOTA

Board of Trade Secretary Calls for Film Leaders' Suggestions; GB Inquiry Demanded

by BRUCE ALLAN

in London

Dr. Leslie Burgin, Parliamentary secretary of the Board of Trade, has told the three trade organizations—the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, the Kinematograph Renters Society and the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries—that he will receive their representatives on May 26th to learn their recommendations on the report of the socalled Moyne Committee on the Quota.

The councils of the CEA and KRS will receive the reports of their own committees on May 19th and a joint meeting with the FBI Group will follow, to approve a statement to be presented to Dr. Burgin.

The conferees of the KRS and Film Group have indorsed the minimum cost principle as the determining factor in application of the Quota, but the CEA favors the Quality Clause as recommended in the Moyne Report.

While the three groups have agreed upon most of the major points, including compulsory arbitration, the report of the joint conferences is expected to leave many minor differences for the Board of Trade to decide.

Seek Study of GB Finances

The provisional shareholders' committee of Gaumont British is planning to make application under the Companies Act to the Board of Trade for an investigation of the company's finances. The committee has asked shareholders for one penny per share to meet the expenses of the action.

In a circular, the committee declared that the deficit of £507,742 shown in the company's consolidated balance sheet would be £1,594,582 except for the writing up of properties. It is asserted by the group that the deficiency of the GB investment in Denman Trust amounts to £1,000,000.

It is further claimed that the closing down of the GB studios and distribution implies heavy capital losses, but that GB Distributors appears in the assets at £510,000 and the Lime Grove Studios at £450,000. Heavy losses also are alleged in Gainsborough, Baird and British Acoustic, all GB subsidiaries. It is claimed that all the GB companies are showing trading losses.

The Board of Trade must act on the petition of 10 per cent of the shareholdings, which means 250,000 ordinary shares. It is generally believed that 1,000,000 shares are held outside the Ostrer group, although the actual figure is uncertain. It is pointed out that the committee has used facts and figures in its statement which were inadmissible in the recent court case concerning the preference dividend, including the position of subsidiaries.

Technicians Threaten Strike

Possibilities of a strike of laboratory workers were indicated in an official statement from the Association of Cine Technicians which commented severely on the attitude of 14 laboratory companies which had refused to recognize the association.

APPEAL FROM BRITISH CENSOR STILL DENIED

Geoffrey Lloyd, Under-Secretary for the Home Office in London, who announced to the House of Commons recently that an advisory committee would soon be drawn up to consider amendment of the Cinematograph Act, said last week, in reply to a question, that the Home Secretary was not prepared to consider amending the act to give motion picture producers the right to appeal from the decisions of the British Board of Censors to the Home Office.

At present there is a right of appeal to local licensing authorities, entailing separate action in each district. The Cinematograph Act should not be confused with the Films Act, which was passed in 1927. It is concerned with the licensing of theatres from the point of view of public safety, and incidentally confers the right of censorship on local authorities, who delegate it to the British Board of Film Censors, but are compelled by law to hear appeals from the board's decisions.

Proposals for a conference to discuss an agreement on working conditions and wages were made to the companies by the association last November. M. Neville Kearney, acting personally for the companies, replied that the draft proposals were unacceptable.

Recently district meetings of laboratory members of the association have passed resolutions endorsing any action, including withdrawal of labor, which the council may take in order to obtain recognition and an agreement. Reporting this fact, the association said, "The association will not hesitate to enforce any mandate from its members."

The association demands included:

A 44-hour working week, with special overtime and night work rates;

Adequate meal breaks and a limitation of continuous hours worked.

Traveling expenses for work after regular transit services have ceased.

A wage scale in which the average basic wage is £3:10 a week and a maximum in which £6:10 is exceeded in only two classes of employment. (£3:10 is approximately $17.50; £6:10 approximately $37.50).

"Horrific" Films

The London County Council has received a recommendation, in the annual report of its licensing committee, in favor of establishment of a third film category, over and above the "A" (Adult) and "U" (Universal) certification of the British Board of Film Censors. To be classed as "H" (Horrific) would be films regarded as likely to be frightening to children, and only patrons over 16 years of age would be admitted to view them.

A "Horrific" classification was, in fact, once adopted by the BBFC, for films of the type of "Dracula," but became obsolete and was not dropped because there were no subjects to which it could be justly applied. Adoption of the LCC recommendation would therefore make little practical difference to BBFC procedure.

British Colour Issue

Dufay-Chromex, Ltd., which controls world rights in the Dufaycolor and Cinecolor processes, has made an offer of shares in the London market.

The company is capitalized at £1,000,000 in 180,000 6 per cent cumulative participating preference shares of £1,100,000 6 per cent redeemable non-cumulative second preference, 6 per cent, of £1 and 2,880,000 ordinary shares of 5/- value. Offered for sale were the whole of the 180,000 first preference shares and 360,000 of the ordinary shares, each at par; total £270,000.

Dufaycolor film previously was marketed in the British Empire by Ilford, Ltd., which will merge its interests in the company and carry out an intensive selling campaign of the film to amateurs.

The chairman of the company is Lord Mottistone, and directors of Spicers, the printers, are associated. The company claims 312 patents and pending patents.

Dixey Company Issue

The British Independent Exhibitors' Distributing Co., headed by Capt. A. C. N. Dixey, on Monday issued 1,100,000 two-shilling ordinary shares. The company will engage in operations on the sale of shares totaling £50,000. This amount has been guaranteed, including £35,000 in ordinary shares subscribed for by the Rock Studios.

The company's contract with Rock for floor space at the plant calls for payment of £16,250 for the first year, rising to £32,500 annually in four years. Four films already have been bought. A total of 300 exhibitor franchise holders will absorb 100,000 franchise shares to a value of £10,000.

New Tax and Americans

The new tax on increased profits discussed by Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his budget statement, may affect American film companies operating here. The tax will be levied in one of two forms, at the option of the company. Standard profit is estimated from an average of the returns for the years 1933, '34 and '35.

On an increase of six per cent over this figure no tax will be levied. On an increase of six to 10 per cent, 20 per cent tax will be levied; on 10 to 15 per cent, 25 per cent; over 15 per cent, 33⅓ per cent. Alternately the tax may be levied on the amount by which profits exceed six per cent on the total issued capital of the company. It is believed that the British subsidiaries of many American concerns are today making much bigger profits than in the three "standard years."

Odeon Buys E & G Control

Odeon Theatres has acquired a controlling interest in Entertainments and General Investments Corp., Ltd., which controls the County Cinema Circuit. Several of the E. & G. directors have resigned and Oscar Deutsch has joined the board.

The deal creates a circuit of more than 250 theatres, for the most part in non-competitive situations. The majority were built the last three years.

C. J. Donada has received a new long-term contract as managing director of the County Circuit, and and Ralph S. Bromhead is under long contract as general manager.

It is believed that Maurice Silverstone, United Artists head here, had much to do with consummation of the arrangement, which was first planned with a United Artists tieup two years ago. The deal creates a circuit which is definitely in competition with the theatre holdings of Gaumont British and John Maxwell.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by BRUCE ALLAN
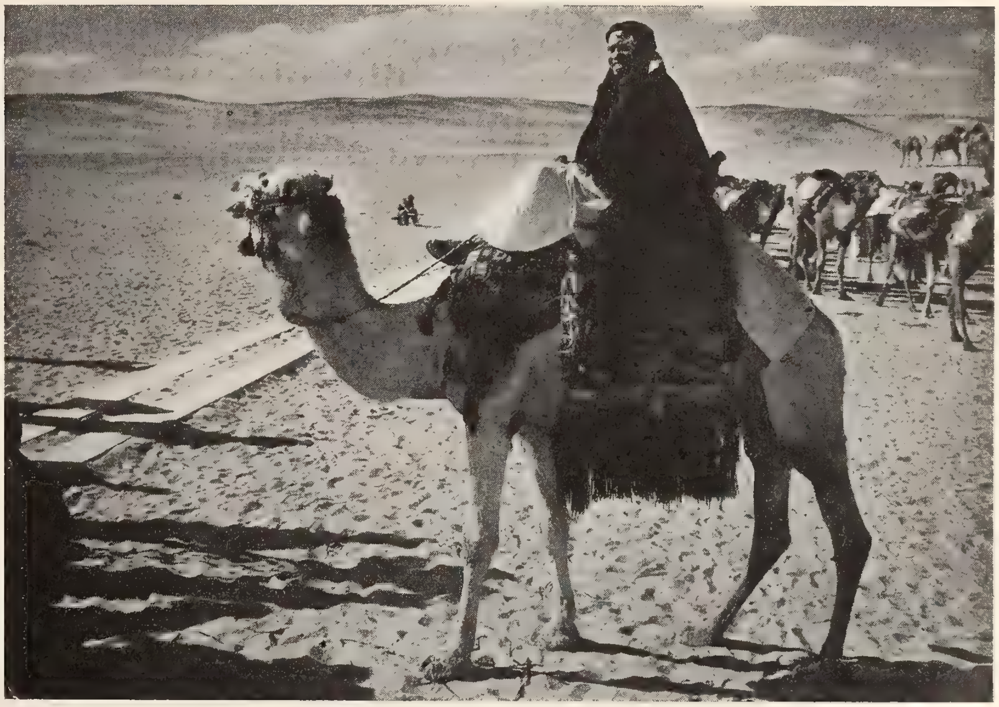
in London



THE CAMELS ARE COMING, with Paul Robeson up. The picture was taken on the Sahara where the star was on location for Walter Futter's production, "Jericho", for Capitol. Princess Kouka, Soudanese, is leading woman. Henry Wilcoxon and Wallace Ford are other stars of the film.

Royal Journey

An interesting piece of historical reconstruction was done by Herbert Wilcox for his Anna Neagle-Anton Walbrook special for Coronation release, "Victoria the Great."

Scheduled was a scene picturing the first railway journey ever made by the young Queen and her Consort, an enterprise sanctioned with much trepidation by the statesmen responsible for the safety of the Royal Person. Illustrating the exact status of mechanical transport in those days, also, is the fact that the Queen's coachman is shown giving the iron horse the expert once-over before he consented to step down in its favor.

Wilcox used in these scenes the famous hundred-year-old locomotive, the "Lion," which ordinarily stands as a museum piece in Lime Street depot, Liverpool. Taken to the engineshops of the L. M. S. Railway, the engines were found to be in a complete state of efficiency. A few days later, smoke pouring from its "chimney pot" funnel, it was running merrily up and down a siding especially laid down off the Watford St. Albans track.

Besides Anna Neagle as the young Queen and Walbrook as her Consort, these scenes introduced H. B. Warner (Lord Melbourne), Walter Rilla, Charles Carson, O. B. Clarence and Moore Marriot. A second picturesque historical touch was the appearance of a force of "Peelers," the very first British police-officers, named after their inventor, Sir Robert Peel, who is yet another figure to be seen in the Wilcox film.

Earlier studio scenes for "Victoria the Great," following on the opening shot of the young girl, in her night-dress, receiving news of her accession, have covered the arrival in England of Prince Albert matrimonially inspired, and have used some big sets, picturing the Court at Buckingham Palace, and a large number of brilliant, and authentic, costumes and uniforms of the period. The picture is well up to its production schedule.

Court Scene, Denham

One of the most important sequences at Denham in the Victor Saville production, "Action for Slander," is that picturing a cause celebre in the King's Bench court, Clive Brook figuring as the man who brings an action to defend himself against an accusation of cheating at cards. The most original feature of the scene is a reconstruction of the game in court, with Morton Selden playing a dominating part as the Judge and all the principals of the film appearing in this one scene. They include Ann Todd, Margaretta Scott, Allen Jeayes, Percy Marmont, Ronald Squire, Arthur Margetson, Kate Cutler and Enid Stamp-Taylor.

Tim Whelan, directing, has spent eight days on this sequence after two days of intensive rehearsal. A studio spectator was Frank Capra, on the eve of leaving London for Russia and, trade rumor says, for Italy and, possibly, the discussion of a picture in Mussolini's studios.

Ann Todd, as soon as her part opposite Brook is finished, will play in "The Speaker," with Edmund Lowe. She has taken over at short notice the part originally assigned to Elizabeth Allan. William K. Howard, directing, has been working on a set in which the outstanding feature is a reproduction of Battersea Bridge in fog, with the Chelsea Power station, a famous London landmark, in the background.

Basil Dean's "The First and the Last" next week will bring the subjects in production at Denham up to four.

Robert T. Kane has stopped production upon "Lawrence of Arabia," the official film life of the famous hero of the Arab Revolt, which he recently took over from Alexander Korda of London Films, on whose schedule the picture has been for more than a year. There is a denial of stories that the British Government objected to the project. Whatever the real reason, "Lawrence of Arabia" has cost a considerable amount already. Some time ago Zoltan Korda took a photographic unit to Arabia, and recently it was announced that Harold Schuster, for New World, the Kane unit, would spend three months in the desert with James Wong Howe as his cameraman.

Robert T. Kane also took over from Mr. Korda the rights of "Cyrano de Bergerac," and he made, as a New World picture, "Four Dark Hours," originally planned as the first of a series of Denham "B" pictures.

Finishing "Jericho"

"Jericho," Capitol Films feature produced by Walter Futter, directed by Thornton Freeland, and featuring three American stars, Paul Robeson, Henry Wilcoxon and Wallace Ford, is near the windup. Pinewood studio is being used for the interiors of the picture, but its big selling value is likely to be the impressiveness of the Saharan exteriors.

Sponsored by Max Schach, "Jericho" will definitely reach the American market, with Mr. Futter probably taking an active share in its exploitation there.

Pendleton - Matthews

Nat Pendleton started on his scenes for "Gangway" at Pinewood this week. The film is one of the Jessie Matthews vehicles which are being made by Gaumont-British and General Film Distributors in partnership, for distribution by GFD. Barry Mackay is opposite Miss Matthews and Noel Maddison is another cast feature. A further American value is the special music of Goodhart, Lerner and Homan.

Pendleton has a gangster role and his first day's work, in the veranda bar of a superliner, was played with Alistair Sim, a comedy detective, as a foil.

Robert Hale, father of Sonnie Hale, the director of "Gangway" and husband of Jessie Matthews, plays a small part. He happened along when a bit player was missing.

In preparation at G-B's Gainsborough studio is "Dr. Syn," from the Russell Thorndike book. Roy Neill is directing George Arliss, John Loder and Margaret Lockwood. The original assignment gave direction to Herbert Mason, but the illness of his wife compelled him to relinquish it.

G-B has in the cutting room "Non-Stop New York," "King Solomon's Mines" and ". . . Said O'Reilly to Macnab" (Gainsborough).

Five Named for 'Red' Film 'War'

The American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Legion of Valor and the Knights of Columbus are among the patriotic American organizations, all national in character, participating in the campaign against "subversive" motion pictures, according to the New York American, which, with other Hearst newspapers, is conducting a "war" against "Red" motion pictures imported from the Soviet.

The organizations mentioned have a membership alone approximating some 2,500,000, and with their families have an influence on some 10,000,000 persons. The American Legion has 949,542 members, the Elks 500,000; Legion of Valor, 1,000; Knight of Columbus, 439,183.

The American said editorially this week that the "anti-red" film fight "is wisely centered in Los Angeles, the heart of the motion picture world."

Commander George Radcliffe of the W. F. W. announced his group has joined the K. of C. attack on the showing of Russian films in Chicago.

A new political fight on American entertainment media was started this week by the Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League to Champion Human Rights. Headed by Samuel Untermeyer, New York attorney, and League president, a nationwide campaign was started "to cleanse the air of all Nazi-financed and pro-Nazi radio broadcasts over American stations."

American Films Dutch Leaders

During 1936 a total of 290 feature productions were imported into Holland from the United States, as compared to 240 in 1935 and 265 in 1934, according to the annual report of the Dutch board of censorship in Amsterdam.

The dominant position of American product in the Dutch market is indicated by the fact that the nearest competitor in point of quantity of import, Germany, imported 84 features in 1936, the same number in 1935 and 91 in 1934. All other countries combined imported for three years, 154 features, 145 and 126 respectively.

A total of 20 features were banned by the censor in 1936, of which 13 were American, three French and one each from Germany, Austria, Belgium and Russia.

Ohio Censor Reports

The Ohio censors, at Columbus, reviewed a total of 605 reels in April from which 36 eliminations were ordered. This compares with 699 reels reviewed and 38 eliminations ordered in March. In April, last year, there were 31 eliminations in 605 reels reviewed.

A troupe from Minerva Tonfilm, a German company, arrived in New York late last week to shoot scenes for "Heimweh." The group is headed by Juergen E. K. Von Alten and Albert Heubsch.

Sophie Tucker Heads Actors' Federation

The American Federation of Actors, at their annual meeting in New York Monday, chose regular and honorary officers for the next three years and named eight councilmen to serve for four years. The officers, most of whom were incumbent, are Rudy Vallee, honorary president; Sophie Tucker, president; Joe Laurie, Jr., first vice-president; Ben Bernie, second vice-president; Chick York, third vice-president; Harry Richman, fourth vice-president; Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary, and Charles S. Mosconi, treasurer. The councilmen chosen were Mr. Richman, chairman; Mr. Laurie, El Brendel, Eddie Garr, Dan Healy, Guy Maglen, Matt Shelvey and Louis J. Pope.

Stage Shows May Yield to Doubles

by WILLIAM F. CROUCH

in Chicago

Balaban & Katz is understood to be considering elimination of stage shows in its Chicago and Oriental theatres and introduction of a double feature policy instead, following the general decline of attendance the last few weeks. The stage shows, elaborate as they are, have not proved a sufficient attraction to offset the strong pull the neighborhood theatres have with duals at a lower admission rate.

Business in all theatres in this territory has declined sharply. Exhibitors blame daylight saving time as a chief factor. With double features the evening shows start earlier than with a single feature program, but with the extra hour of daylight patrons wait until after sundown, and then find the show lasting past midnight.

Another element cited is the $90,000,000 increase in general rental in apartments and homes this spring. Other factors blamed are the call of the out-of-doors and the elimination of the so-called chance games.

Young Reviewers Hold Conference

The Young Reviewers and affiliated 4-Star Clubs of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures are holding their spring Conference in New York on Saturday, May 15. The Young Reviewers are boys and girls from 8 to 16 years who were organized in 1931 by the National Board to find out from children themselves "just what they were most interested in and most affected by in the motion pictures they saw." The program of these clubs usually consists of four units, appreciation, projection, production, and community activities.

Saturday's curriculum will consist of the awarding and showing the winning entries of the first annual 4-Star "Make Your Own Movies" contest at the 8th Street Playhouse which will be followed by a luncheon at New York University and an address by Mr. Robert Porterfield. The afternoon session will be an open forum. Delegates from New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania will attend.

Second Offer to RKO Creditors

Federal Judge William Bondy in New York on Monday denied the petition of Class A and common stockholders of RKO for permission to intervene in the reorganization proceedings of the company. The objections filed by the stockholders, however, were referred to Speciail Master Alger.

The reorganization plan of RKO was amended on Wednesday before Special Master George W. Alger in New York to provide that unsecured creditors will be offered one share of new preferred and one share of common stock for each $100 in claims instead of the previous offer of three quarters of a share of preferred and one and one-half shares of common in the original plan. This change was suggested by the Atlas Corporation, proponent of the reorganization plan.

It was also proposed that the preferred will be convertible into four shares of new common stock for each share of preferred instead of three and one-third shares as formerly. Under the amended plan the proposed distribution of securities will be as follows: debentures, $12,718,500; new preferred stock, $8,000,000; new common stock, 2,123,148 shares of which 1,288,800 would be issued for old common.

Bank Discloses Fox Stock Sales

The Chase National Bank in New York officially disclosed for the first time that a portion of its holdings in Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation stock had been sold in the open market. It disposed of 2,500 shares of common stock and 1,200 shares of preferred during the month of March from its regular holdings of the securities and 3,204 shares of preferred and 1,602 shares of common in escrow under the terms of the General Theatres Equipment Corporation reorganization agreement.

In discussing the sales, the bank said that it "has during the last two months sold a few thousand shares of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation stock in the open market.

"As occasion offers, the bank may in the future sell additional shares of stock in the open market or otherwise. Such sales, as and when made, will be in the pursuit of its settled policy to gradually accomplish a liquidation of stock holdings which, under normal conditions, it is not permitted legally to retain indefinitely."

Apart from a small block held in escrow under the terms of the General Theatres Equipment reorganization agreement, the bank's holdings of the motion picture stocks March 1, last, consisted of 680,378 shares of preferred and 340,189 shares of common. The remaining stocks still held under the escrow agreement on March 31 amounted to 20,235½ shares of preferred and 10,117¾ shares of common.

Samuel Goldwyn this week signed Lady Sybil Colfax, British literary figure, as London story editor.

THE NEW UNIVERSAL CONVENTION

MPTOA TRADE PRACTICE PROGRAM IS DELAYED, BUT ITOA DEMANDS BOARD

National Exhibitors' Ten Point Plan Awaits Decision on Government's Legislative Program; New York Arbitration Urged

Ohioans Protest Paramount's Sales Policies; Allied Plans Nationwide Survey; U. S. Studies Adherence to St. Louis Decision

While studio production leaders and home office distribution executives are describing new product to sales crews assembled from the field in annual convention, the readjustment of certain of the trade practices governing dealings between exchanges and exhibitors in the buying and playing of product is occupying the attention of organized exhibition, the courts, and, indirectly, the government.

Developments of the week included the following:

The campaign of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for enactment of a ten-point trade practice program was halted temporarily pending determination of the Government's new legislative policy for industry.

New York independents started planning a local "arbitration" board for self-regulation, to eliminate any threatening Government trade intervention.

Ohio exhibitors expressed objection to certain practices of Paramount in selling its product.

Kansas City, Kan., distributors and exhibitors continued their conversations to effect new clearance as demanded by independent owners.

Allied States Association was preparing a nationwide survey to determine buying habits of exhibitors and their trade practice relations with exchanges.

The Department of Justice was reported checking in New York on fulfillments of distributors' stipulations in the St. Louis anti-trust case of last summer.

Federal court in Boston dismissed an anti-trust suit involving trade practices of exhibitors in that territory.

That further efforts of the MPTOA to bring about adoption by distributors of its trade practice program will be suspended was made known by Ed Kuykendall, president, on his arrival in New York from Washington. The possibility that the Administration's forthcoming industrial legislation will encompass fair trade practices which would supersede the exhibitor group's trade program, in the event the organization were successful in bringing about its adoption, makes further campaigning on behalf of the program inadvisable for the time being, Mr. Kuykendall said. This was regarded as being particularly true of the efforts to establish local conciliation boards through which the MPTOA expected to realize seven of its ten proposals. Any industrial legislation enacted at Washington is expected to make provision for administrative boards with enforcement powers within industries.

The Administration's industrial program is expected to be made known as soon as President Roosevelt's proposal for court changes is acted on, and enactment of the new industrial legislation is regarded as likely at this session.

MUSEUM PRESENTS 150 YEARS IN THE THEATRE

The Museum of the City of New York last week opened its exhibition tracing the chronology of a number of families that have made history in the legitimate theatre during the past 150 years. The exhibition is called "Fathers and Sons of the New York Stage".

The exhibition traces the history of 78 families that have achieved prominence on the New York stage in the last century and a half and is showing photographs, engravings, paintings and posters of many actors who have been Broadway stars. Among the familiar faces to be seen are the Drews, Barrymores, Booths, Nugents, O'Neills, Davenports, and Jeffersons. To another era belong the Keans, Salvinis, Bonifaces, and Mathews. The modern generation includes Ed Wynn and his son; George M. Cohan and his father; the Hulls, the Thomases, the Lonergans, and the Duncans.

Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, this week emphasized the need of closer industry cooperation and said that the first step necessary would be to set up a local arbitration board for the New York area. Mr. Brandt pointed out that in a recent case the New York court of appeals could not make a ruling because it did not understand the language involved.

"This local arbitration board," Mr. Brandt said, "if successful, could be the basis for establishment of an industry NRA and could be expanded so that its scope would be national. Here is an opportunity for Will H. Hays to show evidence of good faith by approving this plan and allowing the industry to regulate itself."

"The success of this plan," Mr. Brandt continued, "means a happy and smooth association between producers and theatre operators and will obviate the threat of Government regulation."

Resolutions have been passed by the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association "condemning" Paramount for transferring certain features from the 1935-36 list to the 1936-37 list, "thereby disregarding the moral rights of the 1936-'37 contract holders."

Copies of the resolution were being sent to Adolph Zukor, Neil F. Agnew and regional and state exhibitor organizations affiliated with Allied. The matter is to be one of the topics for the Allied States Convention in Milwaukee May 26 to 28.

Conferences between Kansas City, Kan., exhibitors and individual distributors on the showmen's demands for first-run clearance were continuing this week. The Kansas City Kansan continued to use the influence of its front page to arouse Kansas City Kansans to the importance of getting distributors to cease considering their town a suburb of Kansas City, Mo., in releasing pictures. In a two-column front page story the Kansan quoted from a news article that appeared in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week.

Not more than 22 of approximately 400 theatre operators canvassed by Allied States have bought product to an extent approaching their requirements, it was claimed by Allied in a report on a preliminary tabulation of a questionnaire it had sent out to 29 exchange centers. At the Milwaukee convention a study will be made of certain trade practice relations such as whether exchanges force one exhibitor to take more short subjects and more percentage pictures than another and whether there is a "standard" national policy among distributors on preferred playdates.

Although Russell Hardy of the Department of Justice denied last week that his trip had anything to do with the St. Louis anti-trust case which was settled out-of-court last summer, it was learned this week that he has been checking up with various litigants involved on the fulfillment of stipulations filed in the New York federal court. Mr. Hardy was in New York two days and visited executives of Warner Bros., Paramount, RKO and Fanchon and Marco. Attorneys for the distributors, it was said, had assured the Department of Justice counsel that the stipulations agreed to will be lived up to in due course.

In Boston, two anti-trust actions filed by Nashua Theatres, Inc., and Commonwealth, operators of the Park and Colonial theatres at Nashua, N. H., against Colonial Theatres, which has the Tremont and State, were dismissed by Federal Judge George Sweeney. The first two companies are controlled by Moss and Rotheberg and Colonial Theatres is owned by Mort A. Shea. Although the conspiracy actions against the exhibitor have been marked off the calendar, eight large distributors, defendants in the suits, have yet to file answers.

When Moss and Rotheberg first instituted suit, it was claimed that the distributors and the Shea company had conspired to keep product away from Nashua Theatres, Inc. Attorneys for the respondent contended that Colonial Theatres was not doing business in Boston and that it was a New Hampshire company.

National Decency Legion Classifies 11 New Films

Of 11 pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency during the past week nine were approved for general patronage and two were noted as unobjectionable for adult patronage. The pictures and their classification follow:

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage: "Dance, Charlie, Dance," "The Man in Blue," "Michael O'Halloran," "Midshipman Easy," "Rootin' Tootin' Rhythm," "Shall We Dance," "Tough to Handle," "Turn Off the Moon," "Wings Over Honolulu." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "The Thirteenth Chair," "Jaeger von Fall."

Schulte Forms Company

Radio City Theatres, Inc., has been formed in Detroit by William J. Schulte, circuit operator of southeastern Michigan, as the operating company for the Radio City theatre which was just opened by the circuit at Ferndale, just north of Detroit.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended May 8, 1937, from 107 theatres in 18 major cities of the country was $1,098,702, a decrease of $121,989 from the total for the preceding week ended May 1, 1937, when 111 theatres in 18 large cities aggregated $1,220,691.

IN COURTS

Defer Questioning in Fox Receivership

Resumption of the questioning of witnesses in the William Fox receivership, scheduled for Monday in Atlantic City, was postponed one week. Federal Referee Robert E. Steedle said that the postponement was requested for Mrs. Fox, for whom they are preparing an appeal from her conviction for contempt of court.

Federal Judge John Avis, in Camden, upheld Mr. Steedle's contempt citations against both Mrs. Fox and Herbert Leitsteen, family bookkeeper, for refusing to answer questions. Mrs. Fox could purge herself of the contempt citation by submitting to questioning, but she has chosen to fight further, it has been learned. In Mr. Leitsteen's case the offense was described as a criminal degree of contempt, so that by testifying now he could obtain only a lessening of the sentence, it was pointed out by Mr. Steedle. Mr. Leitsteen will have that opportunity on Monday.

Delay Trans Lux Suit

Trial of the patent suit of the Trans Lux Movie Ticker Corporation and the News Projection Company against Frederick A. Morny, Bethel Morny and David Witherspoon has been adjourned to June 4 by Federal Judge John C. Knox in New York.

Kaplan Suit Dismissed

Federal Judge Robert C. Patterson in New York has dismissed the copyright infringement suit brought by Fay Kaplan against Twentieth Century-Fox.

Hear Universal's Plea

A motion by Universal Pictures for a bill of particulars will be heard by Justice Alfred Frankenthaler in New York supreme court this week. The B. F. Moss Broadway Theatres, Inc., is suing Universal for $130,752 damages arising out of the alleged breach of a lease made in September, 1927, for the B. F. Moss Colony theatre. The alleged lease was made for 260 weeks but was terminated by consent on May 31, 1930. The plaintiffs claim that Universal failed to keep the theatre in good condition and that injuries to the high standard, good name, and reputation of the Colony resulted. The damages asked include renovation cost.

File Goldwyn Particulars

Mort Eisman, Clara Dellas and Robert L. Shayon on Monday filed a bill of particulars in the federal court at New York in their plagiarism action against Samuel Goldwyn, Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., United Artists and Eddie Cantor. The action is based upon an alleged infringement of the plaintiff's script, "Oh, Shah," in the picture "Roman Scandals."

Frenke Sues Universal

Dr. Eugene Frenke has filed suit in the supreme court at Los Angeles against Universal Pictures for $153,424 charging breach of contract. The complaint charges violation of a contract signed May 12, 1934, in which Dr. Frenke agreed to share the expense of a film called "Life Begins," and also to share in the profits. The contracts called for distribution through Universal channels, but Dr. Frenke said he was forced to handle the picture himself through his limited outlets. He asks $100,000 which he estimates the picture would make on Universal release, also an additional $45,000 which he claims was spent on the film and $8,000 salary.

Gazette Sues Paramount

The National Police Gazette Corporation has filed suit in the federal court at New York against Paramount claiming the defendant's picture, "Klondike Annie" contains scenes showing Mae West reading the Police Gazette and that by reason of the defendant's allegedly illegal and unlawful act in showing the magazine the company's property is being rapidly destroyed. An injunction and an accounting on profits was asked.

Postpone Lowell Suit

Trial of the $250,000 personal injury suit brought by Joan Lowell against Van Beuren has been postponed in the federal court at New York, which said it was postponing the case for the last time and would dismiss it unless the plaintiff was ready to proceed. Miss Lowell alleges that she sustained injuries in Central America during the filming of "Adventure Girl" and is now unable to work. Miss Lowell is at present in Brazil.

Marx Suit Settled

A civil infringement suit against Groucho and Chico Marx has been settled out of court in Los Angeles. It was brought by Garrett and Carroll Graham, writers, and was predicated on the asserted unlawful use of a radio skit by the comedians.

Postpone Korda Trial

Federal Judge John W. Clancy in New York has ordered the trial of the action against Alexander Korda, London Film Productions, United Artists Corporation, by Francis Hackett, be postponed until January, 1938. The order was made on consent of both sides to allow testimony to be taken by deposition outside the state.

Bennett Papers Filed

Papers in a $62,500 damage action brought by Constance Bennett against Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur have been served in New York, it is said. Miss Bennett claims she entered into an agreement with the writers whereby they were to furnish her with a script for an independent production but that they failed to do so thus causing her monetary losses.

Goulden Sells Interests

Louis B. Goulden, for the last 10 years president of Fountain Square Theatre Company at Indianapolis, has disposed of his interests in the organization and tendered his resignation as president and director. He is still head of General Theatres Corporation there, however, as well as of the Stanley Theatres, which operates houses in small towns in Indiana.

Judgments Awarded

Twentieth Century-Fox, RKO, and Van Beuren Corporation were awarded judgments by default in the federal court at New York Monday against Amusement Parkway, Inc., Isidor Liebman and Edward Siegal for playing pictures without a contract in violation of copyright.

OBITUARIES

Harry Linsley Cort, Producer, Is Dead

Harry Linsley Cort, legitimate theatre producer and musical comedy writer, died unexpectedly of a heart attack at his home in New York last Thursday. He was in his 48th year. Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Margretta Cort; two daughters, Suzanne and Patricia, and a son, John. Funeral services were held Sunday.

A son of the late John Cort, he came to New York two decades ago and assumed the management of the Standard theatre and later Daly's 63rd Street. In collaboration with George E. Stoddard, Mr. Cort wrote several musical comedies including "Listen Lester" and "Just a Minute."

O. E. Schmidt

O. E. Schmidt, 55, pioneer theatre operator in the northwest, died last Friday at Salem, Ore., where he had come from Twin Falls, Idaho, seven years ago and purchased the Grand theatre which he had operated as an independent exhibitor. While in Twin Falls he also operated the Rigby and before that he had three houses in Bozeman, Mont.

James L. Carhart

James L. Carhart, 93, retired actor, is dead at Port Washington, New York, of pneumonia. In his long stage career he appeared in support of such stars as E. L. Davenport, John Drew and Laura Keene.

Sam Franko

Funeral services were held Sunday for Samuel Franko, 80, veteran violinist and conductor who died at Roosevelt Hospital in New York last Thursday night from the effects of a fall he sustained a few hours earlier. Interment was in Ferncliff Cemetery, Hartsdale, N. Y.

John Gilroy

Funeral services were held Tuesday in New York at St. Malachy's Church off Broadway for John Gilroy, 65, vaudeville actor and song writer who died Sunday after a heart attack. His wife, Ethel Gilroy, survives.

Edward Bimberg

Edward Bimberg, veteran vaudeville actor, died Sunday at his home in New York following a brief illness. He was 49.

Wilhelm Henie

Wilhelm Henie, father of Sonja Henie, died in Hollywood last Sunday after an illness of a week. He was 65. Mrs. Henie, his daughter and Tyrone Power, Jr., were at his bedside when he passed away. His body will be sent to Norway for burial.

Mr. Henie, who trained his daughter as an ice-skater, left his prosperous fur business in his native country to manage her when she turned professional.

Balaban and Katz has acquired an interest in State Amusement Company, operators of the Grand and New State in Gary, Ind. Peter M. Kalleres is president of State Amusement Company.

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

Columbia

ADVENTURE IN MANHATTAN: Jean Arthur, Joel McCrea, Reginald Owen—A very good picture that made film rental. Did no business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

DEVIL'S PLAYGROUND: Richard Dix, Chester Morris, Dolores Del Rio—This story has been told so many times it becomes dull in the retelling. A grand cast tries hard but to no avail beyond what measure of satisfaction your audience can get in seeing them go through routine situations. Played March 20.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LADY FROM NOWHERE: Mary Astor, Charles Quigley—A very entertaining little picture that pleased our patrons very much. Mary Astor, as lovely as ever, gives a splendid performance and Charles Quigley, a newcomer to the screen, ably supports her. There is quite a bit of comedy, action and thrills to round out a good production. Running time, 58 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

MAN WHO LIVED TWICE, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Marian Marsh—A very splendid production and Ralph Bellamy should certainly take a bow. This is, to my estimation the best performance to date given by Bellamy and it certainly is a credit to him. The rest of the cast does well and I would like to see more of this type of picture soon. Running time, 71 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

MAN WHO LIVED TWICE, THE: Isabel Jewell, Ralph Bellamy—Good. Is different. Liked by all. Running time, 73 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

THEY MET IN A TAXI: Chester Morris, Fay Wray, Lionel Stander—A good programer aided by the splendid comedy action of Lionel Stander. He certainly has risen very rapidly and certainly does add to the entertainment of the picture. Chester Morris and Fay Wray also do well in this picture. Running time, 65 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

WHEN YOU'RE IN LOVE: Grace Moore, Cary Grant—As a warning to you fellow exhibitors, do not give this your best playing time if your customers do not like opera singing because that is what Grace Moore does. We made the mistake in giving this Sunday opening and they would not take it. I am telling the truth and nothing but the truth, one walkout after another.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

WOMEN OF GLAMOUR: Virginia Bruce, Melvyn Douglas—One of the most marvelous love stories of the screen in a long time and if it never does anything but bring Virginia Bruce to the front it was worth the effort. This Virginia Bruce appeals to me as the greatest emotional movie star of all time. The picture failed to attract any attention in my theatre.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

Crescent

GLORY TRAIL, THE: Tom Keene, Joan Barclay—A well produced western play. Sound is excellent and should please even non-western fans. Played March 13.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

First National

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1937: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell, Victor Moore—This latest Gold Diggers is far superior to any that have gone before. Dick Powell was never better and with the assistance of Glenda Farrell and Joan Blondell the picture went forward in a gale of laughter, song and comedy. The final production number is tops in dance staging. In our estimation, however, Victor Moore stole the whole picture. His characterization of J. J. Hobart was a "wow" and well worth the price of admission to any theatre but ours. All in all it's good entertainment and you can't go wrong. Running time, 100 minutes. Played April 24.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

ONCE A DOCTOR: Jean Muir, Donald Woods—Good programer. Running time, 60 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

SING ME A LOVE SONG: James Melton, Patricia Ellis—Very agreeably surprised with this picture. Had a little of everything and was excellent program entertainment. Running time, 79 minutes. Played April 21-22.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Grand National

23½ HOURS LEAVE: James Ellison, Terry Walker—This has a very poor start in the beginning and ends the same way.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

CAMILLE: Greta Garbo, Robert Taylor—This one is not a small town picture. May be good for cities but not for us. Business poor. Our people do not want to see Garbo and they say so. Running time, 108 minutes. Played April 29-May 1.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

CAMILLE: Greta Garbo, Robert Taylor—Brilliant performance and a beautiful production but, oh, what a sick box office the second night. Garbo should go modern. Played March 14-15.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FAMILY AFFAIR, A: Lionel Barrymore, Cecilia Parker—Hardly got by. Running time, 67 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

THREE LIVE GHOSTS: Richard Arlen, Beryl Mercer, Cecilia Parker—Very poor program picture that shouldn't have come from Metro.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

WIFE VERSUS SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Myrna Loy, May Robson—Just a fair program picture. Three good stars almost wasted on a very poor story. If other people would play this story, the exhibitor would not care to face the outcoming customers, but the stars saved the story and the exhibitor from being mobbed. Running time, 9 reels. Played April 11-12.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ACCUSING FINGER, THE: Paul Kelly, Marsha Hunt—A great melodrama. Played March 17.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

ALONG CAME LOVE: Irene Hervey, Charles Starrett—Frothy but clever and seemed to please. Played April 21-22.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

ARIZONA MAHONEY: Larry Crabbe, Joe Cook—Why do they do it? Why do producers make such a low quality picture? Why do small town fans fall for them? It was very ordinary quality and the fans sure did fall for it. "Champagne Waltz" the following evening couldn't gross one-half and what a difference in the quality of programs. Running time, 58 minutes. Played April 23-24.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

ARIZONA RAIDERS, THE: Larry Crabbe, Raymond Hatton, Marsha Hunt—A fine western with touches that set it apart from the usual kind. Humor that was most enjoyable and the smart little dog, Tuffy, trained and raised in our own part of the country.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

CALL OF THE PRAIRIE: William Boyd, Jimmy Ellison—A splendid western picture and that is what I can say for the entire Hopalong Cassidy series. This type of picture is appealing to almost any audience and if this production caliber is held up, westerns will certainly gain in popularity. Running time, 64 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

CHAMPAGNE WALTZ: Gladys Swarthout, Fred MacMurray—Thoroughly satisfactory to all patrons and paid out, although we could use only on a Monday account of April Blizzard that disrupted local light service.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

CHAMPAGNE WALTZ: Gladys Swarthout, Fred MacMurray—Indeed we were surprised. This was a much better picture than we had anticipated. Maybe it was on account of the "waltz" title and Vienna setting. But the comedy strain was just enough and the mixture of jazz and "The Blue Danube" just about right. Running time, 85 minutes. Played April 25-26.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

DESIRE: Marlene Dietrich, Gary Cooper—A very, very fine picture and it certainly did surprise me. It seems that Paramount really made an error in titling this picture and would have had something big if the name were more appealing to the public. For once we got them in, they all went home satisfied. Running time, 93 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

GENERAL DIED AT DAWN, THE: Gary Cooper, Madeleine Carroll—Good stuff, but too draggy. Not a business getter, for so many dark scenes, you don't see very much of the picture; looks all black. The night scenes should be cut to a shorter time and make 'em guess at that night stuff. Running time, 10 reels. Played April 23-24.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

GO WEST, YOUNG MAN: Mae West, Randolph Scott—It's about time Paramount got wise to themselves and stopped making any more Mae West pictures if they cannot do any better than the last attempt. I believe it is an insult to the intelligence of the audience to show pictures of this caliber. Let's hope we don't get any more like this one. Running time, 77 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

GO WEST, YOUNG MAN: Mae West—Entertaining and seemed to please fairly well. Good business.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

HIDEAWAY GIRL: Shirley Ross, Martha Raye, Robert Cummings—We do not care for Martha Raye in roles of this type. She does not sing nearly so well when she yells as when she actually tries to sing. Liked her best in "College Holiday." Shirley Ross really held up this show. Running time, 72 minutes. Played April 16-17.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

JUNGLE PRINCESS, THE: Dorothy Lamour, Ray Milland—A very splendid program picture that seemed to please all. The cast did exceptionally well and the direction by Wm. Thiele was superb. Running time, 81 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

LADY, BE CAREFUL: Lew Ayres, Mary Carlisle—A dandy program picture. Plenty of comedy situations and lots of fun. Good for any night. Running time, 8 reels. Played April 27-28.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

MOON'S OUR HOME, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Henry Fonda, Charles Butterworth—Everyone liked this picture. I was surprised at the whole-hearted laughter wafting my way to the box office.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

MURDER GOES TO COLLEGE: Roscoe Karns, Marsha Hunt—Fair programer. Running time, 68 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

MURDER WITH PICTURES: Lew Ayres, Gail Patrick, Paul Kelly, Benny Baker—A well done mystery drama, aided by light comedy, brings this production above the program classification. The entire cast does very well and the suspense of the mystery is capably handled. Running time, 65 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

PLAINSMAN, THE: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—A grand small town picture; 100 per cent above the average western. The best of its kind since "The Virginian." Business good. Running time, 113 minutes. Played April 19-21.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

TEXAS RANGERS, THE: Fred MacMurray, Jean Parker, Jack Oakie—Very good Friday and Saturday program. Poor business on Friday, but Saturday good. We never know how they will go over or flop, but this one deserves better patronage at any time. Don't be afraid of it; step on the gas. Running time, 10 reels. Played April 16-17.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

TEXAS RANGERS, THE: Fred MacMurray, Jack Oakie, Jean Parker—One of the finest westerns we have been privileged to play. The box office echoes the comments of the fans. Played April 24.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

TEXAS RANGERS, THE: Fred MacMurray, Jean Parker, Jack Oakie—Little old, but reputation gave this real good business. Swell production any place.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

WAIKIKI WEDDING: Bing Crosby, Bob Burns, Martha Raye, Shirley Ross—Good in any spot. Everyone thought it a good show. Running time, 90 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Me. General patronage.

Republic

BEWARE OF THE LADIES: Donald Cook, Judith Allen—Just a general programer with very little to get excited about. Running time, 61 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

AIR EXPRESS
—THAT MEANS RUSH
AIR EXPRESS DIVISION RAILWAY EXPRESS
AGENCY, INC.

Three-mile-a-minute speed is no further away than your telephone. When minutes mean money, call any Railway Express office for the only nation-wide AIR EXPRESS service. It saves time, worry, and money because AIR EXPRESS flies your shipments 2500 miles overnight—offers you day and night service direct to 216 cities in the United States and Canada—and to Honolulu, Guam, Manila and 32 Latin-American countries. If it's RUSH, remember, phone RAILWAY EXPRESS.

BOLD CABALLERO, THE: Robert Livingston, Heather Angel—A good action picture with color bringing it out of the program class. This picture pleased generally. Running time, 68 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

COUNTRY GENTLEMEN: Olsen and Johnson, Joyce Compton—This production was certainly very dull. These supposedly good comedians don't seem to do very well in pictures and if it hadn't been for the acting of Joyce Compton this picture would have been a terrific flop. Did not please. Running time, 68 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

HAPPY GO LUCKY: Phil Regan, Evelyn Venable—An entertaining picture with capable acting by Phil Regan and Evelyn Venable. The poor sound recording does not do Regan's voice a bit of good and Republic should really give him and also the exhibitors a break by improving their sound recording. Running time, 68 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

JOIN THE MARINES: June Travis, Paul Kelly, Warren Hymer—A well done action picture with Warren Hymer's performance really standing out. Republic should really give this star a more featured role for he certainly does have audience appeal. Pleased generally. Running time, 67 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

MANDARIN MYSTERY, THE: Eddie Quillan, Charlotte Henry—Just a mediocre production with Republic sound, as usual, very poor. This picture just squeezed by. Running time, 62 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

OLD CORRAL, THE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Gene Autry westerns have good drawing power and seem to please the public generally. Nevertheless, these productions could be improved upon and Republic should surely make every effort to make these pictues the tops in their field.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

RKO Radio

EX-MRS. BRADFORD, THE: William Powell, Jean Arthur, Eric Blore—This was another perfect picture that failed us at the box office. It's been many a day since we've had a picture to do us business from RKO. Didn't make film rental on this one.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

PLOT THICKENS, THE: James Gleason, Zazu Pitts—Average programmer. Played March 20.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PLOUGH AND THE STARS, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Preston Foster—Nothing to it. Will disappoint all except the fine arts patronage. Played March 25-26.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THAT GIRL FROM PARIS: Lily Pons, Gene Raymond, Jack Oakie—Lots of good entertainment here but it's hard to get folks in as they suspect another shower of grand opera. The trailer doesn't help any. Played March 21-22.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TWO IN REVOLT: John Arledge, Louis Latimer—A story of a dog and a horse that is worth playing. Get behind this one. If you can get them in, you'll make customers on this. Business fine on this one.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

WE WHO ARE ABOUT TO DIE: John Beal, Preston Foster, Ann Dvorak—Nothing out of the ordinary in prison dramas here. The whole is rather disheartening and certainly won't put your audience in a cheerful frame of mind. Played March 24.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WITHOUT ORDERS: Sally Eilers, Robert Armstrong—Dandy picture. Good acting and lots of action. No one to see it and why? It must be the title. That don't mean anything as the picture is all there and should please all that see it. Not many saw it here. Running time, 7 reels. Played April 20-21.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

WITHOUT ORDERS: Sally Eilers, Robert Armstrong—An excellent performance, particularly interesting to aviation enthusiasts. About normal business. Played April 10.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CAN THIS BE DIXIE?: Jane Withers, Slim Summerville—Excellent drawing card. Pleased all. Very good business. Good old Fox, the small town picture giver.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

CRACK-UP: Brian Donlevy, Peter Lorre—An unusual picture play that will please some and displease others. Fair amount of action. Played March 23.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DIMPLES: Shirley Temple, Frank Morgan—Good from any angle you look at it. Shirley is a nice little actress, but she will soon be growing up. The producers better be looking for another little star that can take Shirley's place in about two years. Running time, 8 reels. Played April 18-19.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

DIMPLES: Shirley Temple, Frank Morgan—Our patrons are always satisfied with Shirley. Some of them feel she is over-rated, but most of them like her very well. Good business due to special matinee for children. Played April 16-17.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

FAIR WARNING: J. Edward Bromberg, Betty Furness—It was stormy weather as far as this house was concerned on this one. There is no quality to it all, no star value and Fox's yen for a precocious kid that was an amateur detective that was strictly a pain where it does the most harm. So preposterous. The director must have suffered from brain fag. One picture in support and Fox thinks that they are ready for stardom, that means J. Edward Bromberg. How wrong they are is shown by the thumbs down by the audience on this one.—A. E. Hancock, Columbus Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HOLY TERROR, THE: Jane Withers, Anthony Martin—Okay Withers opus. Will entertain generally. Played March 27.—L. I. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LLOYDS OF LONDON: Freddie Bartholomew, Madeleine Carroll, Tyrone Power—Superb photoplay that played to less than average business. Played March 18-19.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NANCY STEELE IS MISSING: Victor McLaglen, Peter Lorre, Walter Connolly, June Lang—Not supported, although the picture is okay. But take a look at what we have played or dated, murder, ganster, kidnapping: "Nancy Steele Is Missing," "Parole Racket," "Racketeers in Exile," "I Promise to Pay," "Fair Warning," "Under Cover of Night," "Black Legion." Not to mention the westerns that kill them off wholesale. Fully forty per cent of the pictures that we have played this year have been of the above type. Is it any wonder that business is slacking off to some extent. The above are just a few that come in recently, but the start of the season had their full quota. It is getting so that if the title does not indicate what the picture is they call up and ask if it is a gangster picture. You can draw your own conclusions what happens if it is one.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

OFF TO THE RACES: Jed Prouty, Shirley Deane—Tale of the Jones at the County Fair. Pleased. Played April 23-24.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

SECRET VALLEY: Richard Arlen, Virginia Gray—A fair sort of western. Arlen okay in the part, but why isn't he given more suitable material. Played March 16.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

STAR FOR A NIGHT: Claire Trevor, Jane Darwell, Arline Judge, Evelyn Venable—Here is a picture as good as a lot of the specials that Fox puts out, but business poor because there isn't any popular star in it, but we still say it's a better class picture. O. K. Boys step on the gas. Running time, 8 reels. Played April 13-14.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

United Artists

ACCUSED: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Dolores Del Rio—We liked this picture and think our audiences enjoyed it. A murder mystery made with suspense, fine actors and the fine quality that we always find in pictures from this distributor.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

BELOVED ENEMY: Merle Oberon, Brian Aherne—A truly great picture with just average drawing power. Entire cast performs splendidly and direction is the tops. Running time, 88 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

BELOVED ENEMY: Merle Oberon, Brian Aherns—Grand picture. Something to it. But where was the crowd? We did a terrible business, the worst in months. Running time, 88 minutes. Played April 18-19.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

COME AND GET IT: Edward Arnold, Frances Farmer, Walter Brennan, Joel McCrea—A great production. Cast, acting, direction is all that anyone would ask for in a picture. It is too bad that pictures of this type do not have more drawing power. For I am sure that every person that saw this picture is amply satisfied. A credit to United Artists. Running time, 95 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

DODSWORTH: Walter Huston, Ruth Chatterton, Mary Astor—Great! And that certainly does describe this production. This production is more appealing to the class element. Running time, 98 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

GAY DESPERADO, THE: Nino Martini, Leo Carrillo, Ida Lupino—An average production with Martini's singing outstanding. He certainly has a beautiful voice. Leo Carrillo's comedy relief is of great assistance to this production. It seemed to satisfy. Running time, 85 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

HISTORY IS MADE AT NIGHT: Charles Boyer, Jean Arthur, Leo Carrillo—The tempo is just a little slow at the start, but it picks up and is a very good picture that will please the majority of the patrons. The crash of the ship into the iceberg are great shots and the reaction of the passengers is something to see and remember.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LAST OF THE MOHICANS, THE: Randolph Scott, Binnie Barnes, Henry Wilcoxon, Bruce Cabot, Heather Angel—A very good historical picture with plenty of action and thrills. Seemed to please generally. Running time, 90 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

THESE THREE: Miriam Hopkins, Merle Oberon, Joel McCrea—A fair program. For us it is a killer. Sunday poor and Monday worse. Had better stayed closed. Stars very good, but no business. Running time, 10 reels. Played April 25-26.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

THESE THREE: Miriam Hopkins, Merle Oberon, Joel McCrea—Here is a picture that goes fine any place and anywhere. Not only a good, interesting story, but beautifully produced. A picture that has quality you cannot help recognizing and appreciating. —Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

Universal

FIGHTING YOUTH: Charles Farrell, June Martel, Andy Devine—Our less than normal number of patrons enjoyed this screen production very much. Played April 3.—C. W. Miles, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MAGNIFICENT BRUTE, THE: Victor McLaglen, Vinnie Barnes—Had many compliments on this picture. People spoke of it many days after it was shown, telling us how much they enjoyed it.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

MY MAN GODFREY: William Powell, Carole Lombard—Here is a good picture in the comedy line that really drew. Just the thing for the tired business man who wants to forget his worries.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

NOBODY'S FOOL: Edward Everett Horton, Glenda Farrell, Cesar Romero—A fine comedy from beginning to end. You cannot go wrong on this one.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

RIDE 'EM, COWBOY: Buck Jones—A fine western. Drew mediumly well, but all were pleased.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

Warner Brothers

BENGAL TIGER, THE: Barton MacLane, June Travis—A good circus story that has good drawing appeal. The acting of the leads and also the animals in this production were certainly great for the kids and the general audience appeal. Running time, 60 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

BLACK LEGION: Humphrey Bogart, Erin O'Brien-Moore, Dick Foran—This is a splendid production from Warner Bros., typical of their dynamic type of picture. The entire cast does very well and the picture moves along rapidly at all times. General appeal. Running time, 80 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE WOMAN: George Brent, Beverly Roberts—This is a natural for the small town and the business good. Coloring fine. Running time, 85 minutes. Played April 1-3.—Beatty and Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, A: All Star Cast—In our estimation, this is the poorest picture ever produced. Did not please five per cent of those who saw it. A lot of good comedians in this and all they did was to act pathetically silly. Our patrons will not forgive us for a long time. Business fair. Running time, 117 minutes. Played April 5-7.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: Kay Francis, William Powell—If you haven't played this picture, by all means play it. And if you have, you can certainly repeat same. A good story, splendid acting and very good direction makes this production appealing. Splendid drawing power. Running time, 66 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: Kay Francis, William Powell, Aline MacMahon—This was a play-back and one that was successful. Fine acting, good story and the cast right in their roles all the time. All did outstanding work in this one and glory be, there was no killings. But as the title indicated the stars went the one way passage, he to prison, she to succumb to the malady and the borrowed time on which Kay Francis was living.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SMART BLONDE: Glenda Farrell, Barton MacLane—A very good newspaper yarn with action, thrills and romance throughout. The wise cracking of Glenda Farrell and the ruggedness of MacLane stood out in this picture. Pleased generally. Running time, 56 minutes.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

CHAMP'S A CHUMP, THE: All Star—Here is a grand short subject if your people like fun. Our folks were convulsed. Running time, 16 minutes.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

FALSE ALARMS: Three Stooges—Hilarious comedy that will suit where the Stooges are liked.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LOVE COMES TO MOONEYVILLE: Andy Clyde—Break your arm to get this one; it's a real laugh.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can.—General patronage.

SCRAPPY'S BIG MOMENT: Scrappy Cartoon—Very good; worth playing.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS, NO. 2: Very good; always enjoyed here.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

TWO LAZY CROWS: Color Rhapsodies—Excellent color cartoon—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Educational

ALPINE RENDEZVOUS: Song and Comedy Hits—Some good yodeling in this one. Otherwise only fair. —L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

AMUSE YOURSELF: Two-reel Comedies—Won't cause any flurries of praise.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FARMER AL FALFA'S TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY: Terry - Toons — Discouragingly poor. Twenty years and still no really clever cartoon gags or characters.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

JUST THE TYPE: Two-reel Comedies—This company's average, not good, not bad.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MIXED MAGIC: Buster Keaton—A dandy comedy. Pleased.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

RAH, RAH, RHYTHM: Herman Timberg, Jr., Pat Rooney, Jr.—Well, we really need two-reel comedies as the one-reelers are only good with a 10 or 12-reel show, but a short feature needs a two-reel comedy like this one. It's good and we hope to have more like it. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

WACKY FAMILY, THE: Tim and Irene—Good comedy for a filler. Irene sure can put on the stuff, and makes 'em laugh. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

DEXTERITY: Pete Smith Specialties—Good.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

ORIENTAL PARADISE: FitzPatrick Travel Talk —Beautiful and educational, yet interesting from purely entertainment purposes.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SPOOKY HOOKY: Our Gang—Very satisfactory comedy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TOP FLAT: Patsy Kelly Comedies—Little fun to this one and Patsy always puts pep into any subject. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Paramount

CLEAN SHAVEN MAN, A: Popeye the Sailor—A fair Popeye cartoon that tickled the kids.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

HAWAIIAN BIRDS: Color Classics—Excellent colors; of the best—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

I FEEL LIKE A FEATHER IN THE BREEZE: Jack Denny and Orchestra—A good Screen Song.—Erma L. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

I'M IN THE ARMY NOW: Popeye the Sailor—Good as usual.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MUSIC IN THE MORGAN MANNER: Russ Morgan and Orchestra—Good musical headliner, swell music and good singing. It's a dandy. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

NEPTUNE'S SCHOLARS: Grantland Rice Spotlights—Somewhat of a novelty and some swell underwater scenes. The waves make you somewhat dizzy, but who cares? Good one-reeler.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

NEVER KICK A WOMAN: Popeye the Sailor—A good cartoon with a wallop to it. This time it's the skinnibone girl that eats the spinach and cleans up on the rival girl. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

NEVER SHOULD HAVE TOLD YOU: Screen Songs—Think this is an excellent series, as it does not give you too much of any one thing. Orchestra music with the bouncing ball and a small new cartoon subject mix just enough to keep from being boresome.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL, NO. 5: Of fair interest to some.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SONG HITS ON PARADE: Headliners—Excellent. —L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

cartoon with Pudgy the pooch.—R. J. Schmitt, Star Theatre, Geneva, Ind. General patronage.

WESTERN SKETCHES: Musical Romance Series—Beautiful scenes; in fact, we never saw finer colored photography. But what a dull subject. No pep, nothing but scenery and that gets tiresome.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

DAY WITH THE DIONNE QUINTUPLETS, A: Special—An entertaining two-reeler with the Quints and Doctor Dafoe. Hardly worth the money asked us for it, however. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Estee, Estee Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HILLBILLY GOAT: Edgar Kennedy Comedies—A funny comedy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

IT'S A GREEK LIFE: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Don't play this, or your people will wonder if you have gone crazy.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

PARDON MY SPRAY: Sports with Bill Corum—This Bill Corum dialogued sports reel is entertaining.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

VOCALIZING: Edgar Kennedy Comedies—Just fair; some laughs now and then and all ends well. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

United Artists

WATER BABIES: Silly Symphony—A novelty cartoon in color and good all the way through. Very good, clear photography. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

BENEATH THE SEA: Pepper Pot—Okay for those who like natural history.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BLACK NETWORK, THE: Nina Mae McKinney—Very poor material. No real Negro talent is used where it might be easily have been.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

CITY'S SLICKER, THE: Dawn O'Day, Radio Rubes—A very good subject on the whole.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

ECHO MOUNTAIN: Broadway Brevities—This color short is very colorful and contains some good singing. Not a musical comedy, however.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

EMIL COLEMAN AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—This outfit plays real music and, for those tired of "swings," Coleman will come as a welcome relief. The short features the "Nightingales," three girl singers, and a dance team. Very good. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

JIMMIE LUNCEFORD AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—A good band act with lots of "hotcha" in the Lunceford manner. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

MELODY MASTERS SERIES: Unless producers do something to build up these band reels with something more than just orchestra music, we are not going to be interested. Good snappy vaudeville numbers, one or two with each reel, would help a lot.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RAMON RAMOS AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—A good band act.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SUNDAY GO TO MEETIN' TOWN: Merrie Melodies—Okay color cartoon.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TOY TOWN HALL: Merrie Melodies—Excellent color cartoon, though a bit short.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Serial

Republic

DICK TRACY: Ralph Byrd, Smiley Burnette, Kay Hughes—This is without doubt the best serial to come from Republic to date. The popularity of the newspaper strip and its good production qualities certainly aids in making this the tops in serials. A credit to Republic.—Theodore J. Friedman, Strand Theatre, Suffern, N. Y. General patronage.

Industry Plans Own Memorial Services

Endorsement by industry executives in New York and Hollywood was given this week to the proposal for an annual memorial service in tribute to deceased members of the film industry, and a large number of leaders on both coasts have consented to serve on the sponsoring committees.

Hollywood and New York are to be linked in a coast-to-coast radio broadcast of the services.

It is hoped that definite plans for the service will be concluded by the fall.

Praises Chinese Market

T. J. Holt, exhibitor in China and representative of that government's Minister of Industries, pictured China as the next great market for American produced motion pictures as he arrived in Hollywood this week to make a detailed report of activities for the Chinese industry. Mr. Holt said that China has over 400,000,000 people and only 250 theatres.

THE EXHIBITOR CALLS HIS SHOTS

(1) Ralph Cokain of the Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind., in "What the Picture Did for Me," issue of March 20:

"Perhaps Annabella is under contractual obligations on the Continent, but if she ever becomes available, Darryl Zanuck, Louis B. Mayer and a few others should see who could get her to America first. I'll wager Zanuck would win if he can see the possibilities in this girl that others see."

(2) From a news resume of 1937-38 production plans of Twentieth Century-Fox, Motion Picture Herald issue of May 1:

"Sidney R. Kent, president, in Paris announced the signing of Annabella, Continental and British stage and screen star. She will make two for Fox next season, one in Hollywood, one at the New World studios, at Denham."

"Wings of the Morning," on which Mr. Cokain was reporting, and "Under the Red Robe" were both made by Robert T. Kane and New World and are both 20th Century-Fox releases.

Jolson and Grauman Win in Gold Mine Suit

Judge Joseph W. Zickers in the supreme court at Los Angeles this week denied the damages and declaratory relief asked by H. H. Stowell in his suit against Sid Grauman and Al Jolson for $100,000. Mr. Stowell charged that the failure of the defendants to complete exploration for gold on several pieces of mining property after he had leased it to them endangered his title to the property.

ANOTHER CREDIT

Of course it is a fine thing that Lew Chatham and Sid Holland had so enjoyable a visit to Hollywood; that the studios threw open wide the gates in welcome to the 1936 Quigley Grand Awards winners as the boys themselves tell in their own story. But also to be noted and emphatically is the high place given theatre showmanship by the speakers at the Awards presentations which is indicated importantly in the following from the address by Cecil B. DeMille:

"The inspiration that these men (the winners) provide is of inestimable value to the entire industry because Hollywood must become conscious of the fact that it is dependent upon the men to whom it turns over its product."

The Quigley Awards are credited with many accomplishments. But far from the least is that the Hollywood presentations are bringing to the theatreman a long-delayed recognition of his importance from those who make the pictures he sells.

THE HAPPY COMBINATION

There is no reason why theatres should not go along in advancing the progress of meritorious civic projects when the occasion calls for such participation. But how far the theatre is expected to go and how far it can afford to go has always been a question to be settled of course by the manager's good judgment. The ideal arrangement naturally is one where the box office benefits while the theatreman does his share of the work, but unfortunately this happy combination is not always easy to arrive at. When it occurs, wise is the showman who gets behind the tiein with everything he has.

The very neat job done by Manager John J. Baker in offering the Fox, in Hackensack, N. J., to be utilized for the civic Sportsman Show put on by his Deputy Wardens Association, is a case in point. The purpose of the show, illustrated by one of the exhibits reproduced in last week's issue, was to give the public a better idea of the sort of game and fish released for their recreation. Transforming the lobby into an outdoors setting and obtaining wide publicity not only brought throngs to the theatre from all over the state but in addition a benefit conducted by the Association brought in a heap of extra revenue.

In fact, according to Baker, a goodly amount of the patronage during the week of the show was due solely to the exhibition. And that, in the final analysis, gentlemen, is the correct answer to what a tieup is intended to accomplish.

JUST A LITTLE IMAGINATION

The ads in themselves are well done but that isn't the most important thing to discuss as has to do with the displays created by Tom Olsen and reproduced on a following page. It's what Tom has to say about the ads, where he dug them up, and how the theatreman can give his advertising a shot in the arm by using the old beano. The layouts under discussion were obtained from the newspaper mat service for advertisers and suggested by mats meant originally for savings banks and building and loan companies. Further says Olsen:

"New mats come to the papers monthly and a fellow with a little imagination can revise or devise and work out something away from the rut theatre advertising. Too many of us are content to continue using the straight picture mats and letting it go at that. And right in front of our noses there are newspaper mat services oozing with usable stuff. Of course I don't recommend this too often but at those times when you feel that your ads are losing their punch."

This is a business of intangibles, and obstacles are many in the way of keeping advertising up to par and above. Through such devices as the above managers seeking about for something different can adapt to their own purposes ideas other businesses have found fruitful in engaging the attention of the same sort of folks the theatre aims to get.

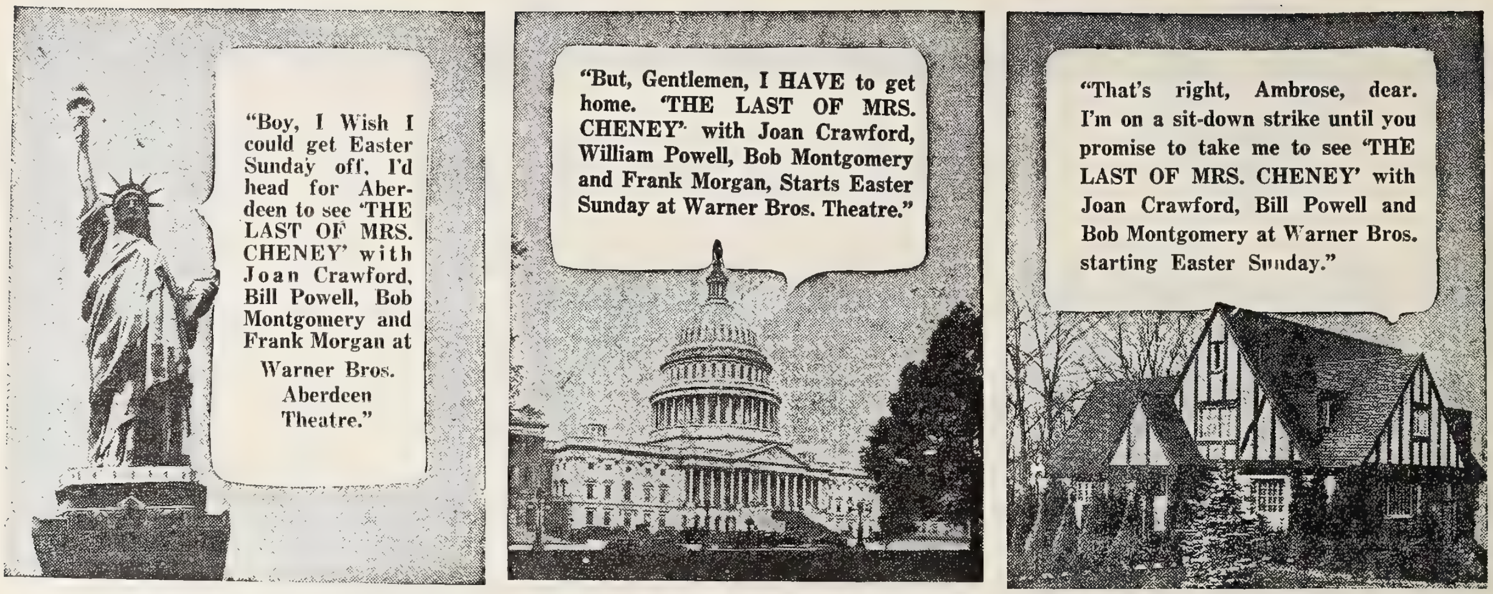
ALWAYS IN CHARACTER

The average male confined to a sick bed isn't concerned with much more than getting well and out. But not Walter Davis, that nimble skipper of the Capitol, Regina, up in the Canadian Saskatchewan. Davis recently put in a stretch at a local hospital and while there discovered a couple of hundred kid patients with time on their hands. So he got Kiwanis to help put on a party for the youngsters which wound up gloriously by the distribution of Shirley Temple photos autographed with the name of the theatre and the thanks of the combined hospital staffs.

All of which goes to prove of course that a showman on his feet or flat on his back is always in character.

A-Mike Vogel



"Boy, I Wish I could get Easter Sunday off, I'd head for Aberdeen to see 'THE LAST OF MRS. CHENEY' with Joan Crawford, Bill Powell, Bob Montgomery and Frank Morgan at Warner Bros. Aberdeen Theatre."
"But, Gentlemen, I HAVE to get home. 'THE LAST OF MRS. CHENEY' with Joan Crawford, William Powell, Bob Montgomery and Frank Morgan, Starts Easter Sunday at Warner Bros. Theatre."
"That's right, Ambrose, dear. I'm on a sit-down strike until you promise to take me to see 'THE LAST OF MRS. CHENEY' with Joan Crawford, Bill Powell and Bob Montgomery at Warner Bros. starting Easter Sunday."

Getting away from the usual theatre advertising on behalf of "Last of Mrs. Cheyney," Manager Tom Olsen, Warners' Aberdeen, Aberdeen, Wash., was able to inject a refreshing note by using the above three ads. Originally they were meant for savings banks and secured by Olsen from his paper's free mat service for advertisers, the manager supplying his own ingenious copy.

McBride and Tucker Win Quigley Plaques for April

The Quigley Silver Award for the month of April goes to Ed McBride, of Syracuse, N. Y.; the Bronze to John Tucker, Park, Roselle Park, N. J. McBride, who manages Loew's State Theatre, won his Award on MGM's "Maytime" and Tucker on Grand National's "Great Guy". Both men hit the plaque column for the first time, with Ed landing among the Honorable Mentions list several times during the life of the competitions. Tucker had also entered two previous campaigns on which he received his certificates. Following close behind come the two First Mentions, with the usual repeaters and newcomers rating Honorables. Who, what and where are set down as follows:

First Mentions

ARLIE CRITES, Manager, Washita, Chickasha, Okla. "Romeo and Juliet"
DAVID MARTIN, Manager, Liberty, Sydney, Australia. "Show Boat"

Arresting Sign For "Courageous"

Created by Howard Dietz, MGM advertising, publicity and exploitation director, an unusual sign was erected at the Astor for the "Captains Courageous" premiere. The sign consists of a giant electric-studded reproduction of a Gloucester schooner with complete equipment, canvas sails and rope rigging, which rides on four rollers. There is a spray of real water at the bow and stern, with a ripple machine providing a continuous wave effect. A blower keeps the sails in motion on quiet days.

The title letters are eight feet high. The boat was designed by a wellknown shipyard and an unusual lobby display featured marine backgrounds and bright water colors.

Premiere was broadcast from the theatre lobby over station WHN with Colonel J. C. Flippen, master of ceremonies, and Radie Harris and Jimmy Jermail, inquiring reporter from the New York News, introducing theatrical and social celebrities.

QUIGLEY GRAND AWARD WINNERS DESCRIBE VISIT TO HOLLYWOOD

PARTY STRUNG OUT ACROSS COUNTRY

Not the least exciting part of the Quigley Award journey to the Coast was the job of finding the rest of the party as the Skylounge zipped across country. Sid Holland was due to join up in Chicago, and as the airport was crowded with folks watching the planes come in there was a bit of searching about and rescue by Bill Crouch, able Herald correspondent in the Windy City, who directed us to the Holland party. Sid was just getting over a lot of entertainment sponsored in his honor by bossman Alex Manta, who was at the airport to see Holland off, as were others of the Illinois-Indiana circuit.

At the Cheyenne airport, Lew Chatham was on hand and recently arrived from Omaha by local plane as instructed by wire. Connections made and Chatham on board with us, relieved, we set off into the night. Came the dawn, came the Boulder Dam, came Los Angeles, and that ended all the rest any of the party was to receive for an entire week, and which is herewith described on this page by the boys themselves.

All in all, it was a grand seven days and highly enjoyable on every count. To all the folks in Studioland who rallied round to make the party a memorable one, our heartfelt thanks.

A-MIKE VOGEL

Oklahoman Tells What Was Seen and Done During Trip by Visiting Theatremen; Meet Many Stars and Directors

by L. A. CHATHAM

Sooner Theatre, Norman, Okla.

The seven fastest moving days and nights that ever happened in my life occurred in Hollywood as guest of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Being the recipient of a Quigley Grand Award is apparently the magic key to the studios.

Starting the first day with a visit to the Quigley Hollywood offices every moment of the day was occupied, with dinner at the Brown Derby and then to the Cathay Circle to a screening of MGM's "They Gave Him a Gun." Many of the stars and directors were present. Next morning we started the day at Paramount for pictures and lunch at the Commissary (they are all called commissaries in the studios). At lunch around us and passing our table were stars, near and great. Some stopped for a chat. After lunch we were photoed with a number of the players and then visited the sets of "Artists and Models," "Exclusive" and "Double or Nothing." After the Paramount visit, we were taken to United Artists for other photos and while there took a look at the sets for "Hurricane," "Dead End" and "Stella Dallas." In the evening we had dinner at Coconut Grove as guests of Columbia.

Wednesday of course was the day of days with the presentation to Sid Holland and myself of the Quigley Grand Awards at a big party attended by studio executives and players. Jesse Lasky presided as toastmaster and Cecil B. DeMille presented our plaques. In the evening we were at the Hal Roach ranch to attend a barbecue supper and big vaudeville show and entertainment.

Winners Make Studio Rounds

Thursday was another full day with the morning and lunch at the RKO Radio studios. Here more shots with the players and then to visit the "New Faces" stage where a lot of extras were taking part in a theatre scene. In the afternoon to Warner Bros. lot, to meet Mervyn LeRoy, producer of "Anthony Adverse" on which I won my Plaque. Mr. LeRoy posed with us and had pictures taken with us. We also looked in on some other sets and paid a visit to the Warner five-acre crafts building. This building was certainly worth while seeing as under one roof there were machine, carpenter, ladder, plaster, paint, wall paper shops and about every other kind of a shop to turn out properties for the Warner pictures. The plant covered acres of ground and is as well equipped and kept as the finest kind of industrial building. We did enjoy going through it.

The day wound up by another elaborate entertainment, the dinner dance and show at the MGM studios attended by over 1,000.

On Friday we were guests of Twentieth Century-Fox for lunch to meet Darryl Zanuck and after photos with some of the stars spent some time on the sets. Then Saturday morning to MGM to watch shooting on "Saratoga" and "The Firefly" and lunch at the studio commissary. Sunday was set aside for sight-seeing and on Monday we were scheduled to leave for a flight to San Francisco to spend the day and again by United Air Lines to head back East.

It is hardly possible to keep track of all the stars and featured players we met, but among those who posed with us or stopped to say hello, as best as I recall, were: Jean Harlow, Robert Young, Bing Crosby, Joan Crawford, Marlene Dietrich, Fred MacMurray, Martha Raye, Joan Blondell, Dorothy Lamour, Charles Ruggles, Mary Carlisle, Humphrey Bogart, Jon Hall, Allan Mowbray, Esther Muir, Bert Wheeler, Bob Woolsley, Joe Penner, Parkyakarkus, Milton Berle, Eleanor Powell, Bob Montgomery, Franchot Tone, Sonja Henie, Jane Withers, Tyrone Power, Simone Simone, Alice Faye, among others.

The Quigley Awards trip will ever remain in my heart and soul as the event of a lifetime.

Indianan Impressed with Care and Great Detail Necessary in Production of Pictures Observed at Major Studios

by SID HOLLAND

Elco Theatre, Elkhart, Ind.

From the moment we came down at the airport until the last minute of our stay in Hollywood we were welcomed royally. I pay meager tribute to a colony of people who have contributed to one of the most treasured weeks of my life.

I seem to have been whisked as if by magic carpet from one studio to another; on and on, one miracle after another seemed to be unfolded to us. I will not go into detail as to the actual schedule of events arranged for our pleasure as my friend, Lew Chatham, has covered the history of our stay in this mecca of make-believe.

The layman has no conception of the thought and effort that goes into the making of a picture. We sat in at the shooting of a number of sequences and it is hard to realize that it is possible to produce a full-length attraction in so perfect detail within the time allotted. When we consider the average length of features should we not marvel at the organized genius which gives us the finished product?

A shot that will consume some 30 seconds of running time might necessitate many "takes" before the director is satisfied that our patrons will get the significance of every word and gesture. I recall one sequence in the picture "Double or Nothing" where an entrance to a room by Bing Crosby required a number of takes. And after each the director would constructively suggest changes in gesture or voice intonation until at last the take was satisfactory. Much time, indeed, and money is expended to insure the finished product.

One would think that with the tremendous strain under which the players create the roles they are called upon to portray, their dispositions would suffer and they would sing a sour note if called upon for anything outside of their actual duties. But this was not the case. We called upon numerous stars and featured players to pose for publicity shots and in every instance they were gracious and accommodating.

At this time, too, it is fitting that a word of appreciation be voiced for the publicity heads at the different studios who saw to it that our visits would be most enjoyable. On behalf of both Chatham and myself, I would like to say thank-you to Chris Dunphy of Paramount; Howard Strickling, MGM; Howard Benedict, RKO Radio; Harry Brand, Twentieth Century-Fox; Ed Selzer of Warner Bros., and Bill Thomas of Columbia. They all were patient and cooperative.

The seven days spent in Hollywood were a revelation to me. After this close-up I shall always be grateful for the opportunity of seeing what makes the wheels go round.

United Artists Awards Cash Prizes on "Night"

Awards for the best major city exploitation campaigns on "History Is Made At Night" were announced by United Artists. Richard Harrity won $100, first prize for his campaign at Keith's, Washington, D. C., and Lew Maren of United Artists Theatre, San Francisco took the $50 second prize.

Highlights of Harrity's campaign were publication of the story by the Washington Herald as full length novel tabloid insert, a great names contest and recipe contest in Herald tying in with leading hotel chefs and a foot race of waiters with full trays.

Maren's drive was concentrated on co-op page ads, also a recipe contest and tieup with largest department store in city with the theatre selecting a "Miss Jean Arthur of San Francisco."

Student Radio Interview On "Pennies from Heaven"

R. E. Russell at Poli's at New Haven, Conn., for "Pennies from Heaven" arranged a special broadcast over station WELI during which students from local high school were interviewed on the picture. Attractive window displays were planted about town and special cast of characters was illuminated in lobby frame.

Rolls of ten pennies were given out with change at the boxoffice, orchestrations of all song hits were played at night clubs, bannered sound trucks on streets two days ahead played picture tunes and millinery shop featured new modes with stills of Madge Evans in latest styles.

Writes Schools On Short

For date at the Capitol, Salt Lake, on "Servant of the People," MGM's two-reeler on the story of the Constitution, Charley Pincus addressed a series of letters to the heads of all local P.T.A. units, to principals and leading educators in various schools. Letter described the short and stressed that its timeliness would "help bring about a better understanding of the principles and purposes of the Constitution."

Patrons Sign Names For "Three Smart Girls"

Oversized red wooden heart with copy on outside reading "To Miss Deanna Durbin. You've captured our heart; here it is," was constructed by Roscoe Hopkins, Chief Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico, for "Three Smart Girls." Heart was planted in lobby and guests were invited to sign their names on sheets provided, girl was later sent on streets to get signatures of pedestrians (see photo) and later heart was carried to Mayor Milosevich for his perusal when he was presented with pass to see the picture.

Another highlight of Hopkins' campaign was tieup with local department store which featured a fashion show of latest spring styles on stage of the Chief. Beauty parlor also cooperated by dressing hair of models in revue, both merchants carried mention of show in their ads, stories also running in papers.

For lobby display, three cutout heads of the girls in the picture were used; first had her hands over her eyes, second over her mouth and third over her ears. Copy over all read "They see nothing, they say nothing, they hear nothing of . . . Love but know everything." Title was done in red lined with blue and a line of silver metallics.

Robinson Makes Personal For "Thunder" Opening

For the opening of "Thunder in the City," at the New York Criterion, Phil Lauffer and the Columbia exploitation department arranged for the personal appearance of Edward G. Robinson, and parade of fife and drum corps down Broadway carrying banners welcoming the star. As a bally stunt in front of the house, a double of Robinson was used, doing a few shows a day. After impersonating other film stars, the climax of the act was impersonation of the star of the picture.

For the front, shadow box scene depicted toppling buildings (see photo) which were illuminated from the sides and base in color. Torn paper effect gave impression of buildings crashing through the background. Enlargements of Robinson were set against this with four radio towers and a red light flashing on top of each tower in code effect. Helium filled balloons in shape of blimp were strung above and below marquee and imprinted blimps were distributed to patrons.

Goetz Arranges "Power Night"

Because Tyrone Power, Twentieth Century-Fox star is a Cincinnati boy and received much of his earlier education there, Joe Goetz, manager of the RKO Paramount, found good enough reason to put on a "Power Night," featuring the presence of the star's grandmother, his cousin and principal of the school attended by Power. Goetz had the visitors up on the stage to answer questions about the star and his early life, interview taking place before a mike hooked to a loud speaker.

Pearlstein's Billboard Stunt

Five-column illustrated feature story for "Top of the Town" at the Hippodrome, Cleveland, was planted by Manny Pearlstein, of the Warner district publicity office, who promoted the Press to have one of the paper's by-liners paste up a 24-sheet on the date and write a yarn on his experiences. Sufficient fuss was made to attract crowds and a local cop wangled to threaten arrest for blocking traffic.

Nanking Called Well Served With Motion Picture Theatres

Capitol City of Chinese Republic Supports Four Modern First-Run Cinemas

by J. P. KOEHLER
in Shanghai

With this interesting article on the status of the showbusiness and local conditions as affect the situation in Nanking, China, your Round Table continues the Showman's Travelogue series which for some time has been a feature of these pages. From what our correspondent, J. P. Koehler, writes, interest in the motion picture in the capitol city of the Chinese Republic is mounting, indicated by the recent construction of new houses and the modernization of first-run cinemas. The series carries on in a forthcoming issue when the Travelogue will deal with Buenos Aires.

Nanking, the capital city of the Chinese Republic, and an open port with direct outlet to the sea on the Yangtse Kiang, represents from a cinematographical point of view the now second best exhibition town in Central China—Shanghai coming first. The city, with its now million population, lies both within and without the 33-mile-long wall which surrounds the greater portion of the old and new development. Until about 10 years ago, Nanking was the usual type of interior Chinese city, with narrow crooked streets and native architecture and lack of sanitation, water supply and electric power supply. The city is located on the south bank of the Yangtse River, and is the cross roads of the railway traffic to north China. Gradually, yet swiftly, transformation has taken place in both the architecture, and the life of its inhabitants. Today, a fine railway station comparable to any in the world greets the visitor, with a broad plaza, taxi stands and orderly ricksha and excellent fast bus connections to all parts of the city. A large airport, with both regular and express air passenger and mail express service radiates from Nanking east, west, north and south daily. By express plane, the one hundred and forty miles to Shanghai, ordinarily taking seven hours by train and one day by river boat is covered in one hour and twenty minutes at a fare of Yuan 25.00 (the Yuan in U. S. money is approximately 30 cents). Incidentally, the air-service comes in handy at times for rush picture service though it is rather expensive.

Wide, new avenues have been cut through the maze of huts and lanes, the fine governmental structures have arisen over the ruins of ancient hovels and swamplands and farms, a beautiful memorial has been reared to the memory of the Republic's revered founder, Dr. Sun Yat Sun.

Picture Exhibition Policy Liberal

Broad acres and hills have been developed into athletic fields, a great stadium and swimming pool, track and field sports grounds have been made, an excellent golf course, tennis courts, and large and peaceful public park—all have become realities with the past few years. Nanking is now the home of thousands of highly educated Chinese men and women—graduates of both native and foreign universities, men and women who have brought back with them the experience of the western world and the experience of the western cinemas.

Nanking is the heart of China's motion picture policies. As such it would be expected that, with the government striving for the cultural development of its citizens, the theatres would be carefully restricted in the matter of the type of films shown. As it stands, however, Nanking is as liberal in its exhibition of foreign motion picture exhibition as any city in China, since any film once passed by the Censor Committee in Nanking for showing throughout China may be exhibited in Nanking provided playdates can be arranged in one of the several theatres located here. Here are located the bureaux controlling the production, censorship, advertising and exhibition of both native and foreign films. Here are issued all the permits for the taking of motion picture throughout China. Here is the publicity Council of the Central Kuo Min Tang, the political party in power, the Ministry of Education, the Bureau of Film Industry and the Central Film Censor Committee. Here are also located the Central News Photo Service, a service sponsored by the government and the Central Studios, a semi-governmental studio devoted to the production of propaganda, educational and entertainment films.

TARZAN STUFF. Ten days ahead of opening of "Tarzan Escapes," Manager N. R. Lynn, World Theatre, Kearney, Neb., created this lobby display which was executed by artist Elton Benson.

Nanking is a city of great distances. From one gate of the city wall, across the city via the new Chungshan Road, it is really a fine wide paved boulevard, takes about 20 minutes by taxi at good speed. Along this magnificent highway have arisen and are now rising new governmental structures which are assuming grand proportions with their modern utilitarian architecture relieved by the Chinese curving roofs and colorful tiles. Two grand highways separate the city in roughly four quarters and where these highways cross there is a large plaza. Grouped around this central plaza are the new commercial and banking structures rising to many stories, the new modern business section with its shops and restaurants and offices, and the cinema center of the city with the two, modern theatres both constructed within the past year. A fast, modern bus service is maintained through its section, connecting with all parts of the city. The busses are of medium size, but comfortable and streamlined in their green and white colors. The ricksha and taxi are the other main means of transportation to the cinemas. Private motor cars, while numerous, do not as yet find common use among the residents of Nanking. There is, therefore, no parking problem to speak of.

Modern Equipment Widely Used

Nanking is well served with motion picture theatres, having now four first-run cinemas seating over 6,500, equal to Shanghai, the oldest first-run theatre having been constructed since the advent of the new development. One first-run house seating about 1,200 is located in the older business section and about 20 minutes ricksha run from the central plaza. Another is about 10 minutes walk from the central plaza, but is of much more modern type and was constructed about five years ago. These two houses are the Capitol and National Theatre respectively, the National seating about 1,400. The Capitol is equipped with Western Electric Sound and Simplex projectors and has recently undergone renovation and installation of Wide-Range equipment. The house is not air cooled, the circulation of air being by means of wall and ceiling fans. Summer business naturally is effected under such conditions.

The National Theatre is equipped with R. C. A. sound on Simplex projectors and is now installing high-fidelity equipment and also undergoing renovation. This theatre is also not air-conditioned, but it is believed plans are under way for such improvements. Located on a wide business street in a busy sector, not too far from the city's center, this house maintains a good patronage for foreign film exhibition combined with certain native productions. In fact, with little exception, the first run theatres of Nanking now run a foreign picture policy combined with a certain minimum of native product sponsored for educational purposes.

Admission prices in these two cinemas run from yuan 0.30 and 0.50 for matinees and yuan 0.40 to 0.80 for evenings. Performances are given three times daily usually at 2:30, 5:30 and 8:30 P. M. Children are admitted at half price and also at yuan 0.10. Both the above theatres are well above the average in construction and appointments and, considered in the light of the usual provincial theatre, even though they are in the nation's capital city, are equal to any in roominess and cleanliness. Until the advent of the New Capitol Theatre, the National was Nanking's best house.

The New Capitol Theatre, a picture and description of which was given in a recent number of Better Theatres, represents one of the best in Chinese theatre construction. Seating 1,605, with admission prices from yuan 0.40 to yuan 1.00 and with three performances daily, this cinema is a fine, comfortable modern house, tastefully decorated, with scarcely a touch of Chinese in design and decoration. Its interior is more on European lines. Acoustically treated throughout, equipped with Western Electric No. 3/1936 Simplex projectors and H. I. lamps, sound and screen presentation are excellent. The theatre is air conditioned and cooled. Power supply is both from public service and with a standby private emergency power plant. The location is within 300 yards of the central plaza, on the main Chungshan Road. There is no parking problem nor, even should traffic increase greatly, would there be any to speak of since the space available is ample.

City Boasts Fine Theatres

The latest addition to Nanking's cinemas is the 1,800-seat State. No finer house is found in the Far East, and it is quite up to the standard of modern motion picture theatres. Located on the main Chungshan Road scarcely 500 yards away from the New Capitol, this cinema is also well served by all the various transportation systems. As yet no tram-lines serve this section of Nanking, and it is not believed that street cars will ever enter into Nanking's local transportation system except the line which has been operating for many years in the older sections and outlying districts.

The State Theatre is a beautiful motion picture theatre, with comfortable seating, excellent layout, modern lounges and foyer, a magnificent lobby and broad, low, modernistic exterior of dignified simplicity.

It has all the requirements of a modern house air-cooling, air-conditioning, W. E. Wide Range Sound, indirect lighting, decorative schemes, comfortable to the eye and pleasing to the senses, rest-rooms, restaurant, excellent screen presentation through projectors of German manufacture with H. I. lamps. The house is one in which no expense or thought has been spared to give the effect of roominess.

Prices of admission range from C. $0.40 to $1.00 with three shows daily. Foreign pictures are shown exclusively, but, being in Nanking and a Chinese owned theatre, policy may require at times a certain percentage of native product to be shown.

There are several smaller cinemas in Nanking running second and third run, but they are all old, and cater to the poorer classes as is natural.

Competition to first runs lies mainly in a few native opera theatres, and in a few small cinemas given over to native product.

No Night Life But Cinemas

Nanking has no night clubs, no cabarets, and no recognized evening entertainments except the cinema and private clubs both foreign and native. Outdoor activities competitive in nature are few, mainly the usual athletic games, golf, swimming, tennis and hiking, together with visits to memorial or historical structures. Being the center of the Chinese Government, great stress is laid on cultural and moral uplift. However, all foreign films passed by the Nanking censors are permitted to show in Nanking.

The population has been greatly augmented by the modern trained youth from both foreign and native universities. The consequence is that the cinema receives much of its patronage from this class, and with the comfortable new theatres, patronage of sophisticated films has increased.

The foreign element in Nanking, as regards cinema patronage, is negligible, being comparatively few in number, and confined to diplomatic and consular agents and manufacturers' representatives. Therefore, patronage is overwhelmingly native, and foreign film must, in general, meet the needs of such patronage.

The gradual increase of industrial plants has led to the employment and better spending power of the lower classes, who, however, still find their amusement in the cheaper cinema and native opera houses.

There is no question, however, that, in a few years more, Nanking will rank as one of the premier show cities in China, though by that time, native product will undoubtedly expand to take over most of the playing time.

School Supervisor Endorses Jenner's Student Matinees

The possibilities of closer cooperation with local schools on special student matinees have recently been exploited and found advantageous by Bill Jenner, of the California, San Bernardino, Cal. So well has the idea worked out that with the endorsement of the supervisor of schools, the special event is now being held weekly. The details of the Student Matinee as reported by Jenner to Dean Hyskell, Fox West Coast ad head and published in the circuit's managers' publication are set down as follows:

"Our first contacts were made with two school supervisors in charge of elementary and secondary courses in city schools; also the supervisor of music, who has charge of all the city's school work in that department. With this group of three, we laid out a campaign; then called in five other teachers of English, History, Physics, Drama and Motion Picture Appreciation. To this entire group we presented a list of available pictures suitable for revival. Meanwhile, the Supervisor of the City Schools had been contacted and received the plan with favor and okayed our list of pictures.

Teachers Advised of Attractions

"Each week the three original supervisors advise all teachers throughout the entire City School District of the attraction to be shown at the coming Wednesday (4 p. m.) Students' Matinee, and recommends that each school principal make weekly announcements of the attractions to be shown as well as the suggestion that the principal try and attend the Matinee since most of the subjects embrace travel, history, music, the classics—as well as entertainment.

"Following the third Matinee (late in January), we issued cards to all City School students. These cards listed the four attractions for February, and advised students that if they would bring the card each week and have it punched at the door—thus showing they had attended each previous matinee—they would be presented with a guest ticket to our Mickey Mouse Matinee the following Saturday. Student Matinees are run at 4 o'clock each Wednesday, following our regular matinee.

"Aside from the satisfactory increased revenue coming from these Student Matinees, we have been enabled to 'crash' every school in the city on regular program announcements. Moreover, the policy is spreading good-will for the theatre. It also enables us to get trailers on coming attractions before the juvenile theatre-goers and, as a result, is building our regular patronage from this group."

FRENCH PICTURES LEAD IN SURVEYS IN PARIS

U. S. Product Ranks Higher in "Specializing" Theatres Than Where Dubbed Versions Show

by PIERRE AUTRE
in Paris

For the first time in France, an investigation has been made to learn from exhibitors which films are the most successful and which stars are the most popular. The survey was carried out by the leading French trade publication, La Cinematographie Francaise. Two hundred exhibitors, representing the 500 principal theatres of Paris and provinces, took part. The voting was on films exhibited between January and December, 1936.

Of the 450 films listed, 75 were chosen by the exhibitors as box office leaders.

Here are the 14 which topped the list in sequence of votes received:

		Points
1.	Cesar. French	3,020
2.	L'Appel du Silence (Call of the Wilderness). French	2,718
3.	Le Roi (The King). French	2,200
4.	Mayerling. French	2,009
5.	Veille D'Armes (The Eve of the Battle). French	1,695
6.	Modern Times. American	1,665
7.	Marinella. French	1,504
8.	Les Bas Fonds (The Underworld). French	1,474
9.	La Porte du Large (Door to the Open Seas). French	1,470

Following these came Au Son Des Guitares, Messieurs Les Ronds de Cuir, Le Roman D'Un Tricheur (French), The Trail of the Lonesome Pine (American), Bichon, Samson (French), Mutiny on the Bounty (American), Les Loups Entre Eux (French), The Charge of the Light Brigade (American), Les Hommes Nouveaux, L'Amant de Madame Vidal, Port Arthur, Jenny, Les Amants Terribles (French), Desire (American), Club des Femmes (French).

Other American films mentioned in the lists were in order: Curly Top, Captain Blood, Mr. Deeds Goes to Town, Captain January, Let 'Em Have It, Little Colonel, Anna Karenina.

La Kermesse Heroique released in November, 1935, and the latest French pictures such as Courrier Sud and Nitchevo, were not included in the poll.

French pictures led in the vote of 75 films voted box-office leaders; 56 were French.

It is to be noted that the poll has been taken only among exhibitors of the ordinary theatres, which show French speaking films, either French made or foreign films dubbed in French. "Specializing" theatres, showing foreign product in original version with French subtitles, were not included.

The three films at the head of the list are three films of a very strong French type. "Cesar" was made by Marcel Pagnol, author of "Topaz," and it shows the particular brand of humor of the Marseillais (inhabitants of Marseille). This film followed two big stage and screen successes: "Marius" and Fanny." It was written and directed by Marcel Pagnol and had the popular French actors: Raimu, Pierre Fresnay, Orane Demazis and Charpin.

> "Hope that mine are of benefit to someone."

"L'Apel du Silence" (Call of the Wilderness) from the cinematographic point of view is perhaps not excellent but it has the merit of being a wholesome story of the heroic life of Père de Foucault, the monk of the Saharas, who helped to establish the French North African Empire and was killed by Touaregs in 1916. This film brought a new type of patron.

"Le Roi" (The King) is a comedy, of the "boulevardier" humor, which has known great success on the stage in France, before and after the war. Directed by Pierre Colombier, it has an all-star cast including Gaby Morlay, Elvire Popesco, Raimu, Victor Francen and André Lefaur.

"Mayerling" was directed by Anatel Litwak and acted by Charles Boyer and Danielle Darrieux. It is the story of the Hapsbourgs' tragedy.

"Veille D'Armes" (The Eve of Battle), directed by Marcel l'Herbier, is a story of the conflict of duty and love. The action is set in the French Navy; the stars are Annabella and Victor Francen.

"Marinella" is a musical film starring Tino Rossi, a French singer, who is as popular with the French public as Bing Crosby is in America. This was his first film.

"Les Bas Fonds" (The Underworld) is by Jean Renoir, and the action is set in an imaginary Russian town. The cast includes Jean Gabin, Louis Jouvet, Suzy Prim, Junie Astor and Sekoloff.

Among foreign films, Charlie Chaplin's "Modern Times" is by far at the head of the list. The French public has not forgotten its favorite "Charlot" of olden days.

With the exception of "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," most American comedies when dubbed in French seem to have lost their original wit and "snappy" dialogue. And the dubbing of voices, no matter how well done, takes much away.

The only films of other countries represented in the poll were: "Casta Diva," German; "Les Marins de Cronstadt" (The Sailors of Cronstadt), Soviet; "The Ghost Goes West" and "Things to Come," British.

This poll confirms what often has been said here: that for general and ordinary distribution in Paris and in the French provinces, it is the French film, with French dialogue and acted by French stars, which is, by far, the most popular.

Other polls of the public have given slightly different results.

A poll taken by the weekly fan paper, Pour Vous, included French as well as foreign films in their original versions shown, in "specializing" theatres in Paris or later in other theatres in a dubbed version. Here are the results for 1936:

	Points
Mayerling (French)	10,112
Mutiny on the Bounty (American)	6,411
Anna Karenina (American)	4,872
L'Appel Du Silence (French)	3,400
Mr. Deeds Goes to Town (American)	3,029
Cesar (French)	2,750
Helene (French)	2,241
Les Bas Fonds (French)	2,003
Trail of the Lonesome Pine (American)	1,423

Receiving more than 500 votes were:

French films: Anne Marie, Club Des Femmes, La Porte Du Large, Jenny, and Under Western Eyes.

American films: The Charge of the Light Brigade, Little Lord Fauntleroy, and Captain Blood.

Compared with the poll of exhibitors, one notices that here foreign films have a better place. The explanation is that the readers of Pour Vous are an important part of the Paris theatregoing public who attend "specializing" theatres and see foreign films in their original form.

Another poll was organized by the important daily newspaper of Southwest France, the Depeche de Toulouse. The results follow:

	Points
Cesar (French)	16,636
Veille D'Armes (French)	12,651
Le Mioche (French)	12,250
L'Appel du Silence (French)	11,450
L'Equipage (French)	11,400
Mayerling (French)	10,900
La Porte Du Large (French)	10,336
Mutiny on the Bounty (American)
Michel Strogoff (French)
Au Sons Des Guitares (French)

This poll is close in results to that made among the exhibitors. In the provinces foreign films are shown dubbed, and the French film is at the head of the list.

Films of other countries, England and Germany, are scarcely mentioned.

A general conclusion from the polls is that the French above all want good French films and big American pictures of adventure and action.

The Box-Office Stars

La Cinematographie Francaise followed up its study of the best film records at the box office with another poll to discover which players drew best at the theatres. The results follow:

MALE STARS	Points
Charles Boyer (French and American)	426
Pierre Richard-Wilm (French)	362
Fernandel (French)	339
Lucien Baroux (French)	305
Victor Francen (French)	287
Tino Rossi (French)	209
Jules Berry (French)	146
Charles Chaplin (American)	139
Raimu (French)	135
Jean Gabin (French)	114

Receiving fewer than 100 votes were: Pierre Blanchar, Larquey, Bach, Sacha Guitry, Jean Murat, Fernand Gravet (French); Clark Gable, Gary Cooper (American); Charles Vanel, Victor Boucher, Signoret, Louis Jouvet, Pierre Fresnay, Constant Rémy, André Lefaur, Henri Rollan, Jean-Pierre Aumont (French); Franchot Tone (American).

FEMININE	Points
Gaby Morlay (French)	211
Danielle Darrieux (French)	192
Annabella (French)	175
Shirley Temple (American)	126

Shirley Temple tops the list of foreign stars.

Spectators in the North and in Paris have quite different tastes from those in the South, be it Marseilles or Toulouse.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1936, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1936-37 season.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Omaha, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We are hoping that the boys will try and control their indignation when they learn we are back on the road again. We don't know how long we will stay, but we will try. We feel somewhat like Uncle 'Leazer Biggs felt when he and Aunt Polly were out driving in their model T. They came to a small town and they saw a sign, "Speed limit 15 miles per hour" and Uncle 'Leazer turned to Aunt Polly and said, "Well, Maw, I don't know as she can make it but we'll try."

We came down here to Omaha to look after things and found everything working in perfect order except Colonel Creel and Bob Ballantyne. They had to be looked after a little. We went up to the headquarters of the Variety Club and met several of the boys and among them was Ted Mendenhall, of Paramount, the Chief Barker for the Club. Ted was elected to that position, presumably, because of his long experience barking for Paramount. Ted is a good barker; he's got a coon dog beat a mile. But speaking of the Variety Club, you probably don't know that the Club recently put on the biggest show ever seen in Omaha, in fact the biggest show ever seen west of Rockefeller Center. They hung up a target for other entertainment committees to shoot at, and we'll bet that they all miss, too. Our doctor put us on a strict diet and that is why we stuck to icewater, a commodity that is very scarce around the Club rooms.

When we were at home we went to the Moon theatre and saw "Come and Get It," with Edward Arnold, Francis Farmer and Joel McCrea.

This is a lumberjack story supposed to happen up in the lumber woods of Wisconsin, and it's a mighty good one, too. If your customers like north woods stories and lumbering scenes, "Come and Get It," we believe, will be very acceptable, and when you hear Francis Farmer sing a song in that gambling dive, if you don't say she has the loveliest voice of any woman you ever heard, then we will take all the dinner checks. If you have not already played "Come and Get It," our advice would be for you to go and get it.

The other day we received a nice, long letter from William R. Weaver (familiarly called "Bill"). Bill, you know, is one of the boys that make the wheels go around in the Herald office in Rockefeller Center. You may have forgotten it, but Bill grew up from a small sapling in Boone, Iowa, out "where the tall corn grows," etc., and that's what made Boone so famous (like the beer of Milwaukee), and Ernie Rovelstad is one of the reasons why Minneapolis is such an important city, or so we understand it, and Harry Krebeck's herd of Poland Chinas and Mrs. Terwhilliger's Plymouth Rocks made our home town of Neligh an important center.

Bill, when he was a youngster, was the pride of Boone. He was a constant attendant at Sunday schools, except when he was fishing for bullheads in the Des Moines river. He told us about getting lost over in Brooklyn. He said he drove around all day trying to find his way back to New York and finally stopped and asked a brass-buttoned gentleman from Erin how to get to New York and he just studied a while and then shook his head and replied, "Sure, I never heard of the place." He reminds us of the fellow from Idaho who was driving through New York and a cop saw his license plate on his car and said, "Idaho, Idaho—whereinhell is Idaho?"

Bill should be driving out here in this country where the highways are plainly marked. He couldn't go wrong. For instance, he'd see a sign, "Fifteen miles to Chugwater" (the biggest little town on earth), and a little farther on he would see another, "Turn left at the southeast corner of Bill Smith's cow pasture," and over in the pasture he'd see another sign, "Beware of the Bull." That's what J. C. Fanning of Brownsville, Texas, said to Shine Mason of McAllen when we were telling about the big fish we caught in the Gulf.

Mr. McLucas invited us to see a screening of "A Star Is Born," a United Artist production with Fredric March, Janet Gaynor, May Robson and Adolph Menjou. Not being a critic of pictures, we probably don't know a whole lot about it, but we regard it as the most outstanding picture for many a day, and if Miss Gaynor has ever been lost to the public eye she certainly comes back with a wallop in this one.

The acting of Fredric March was nothing short of superb, and his portrayal of the man who was lost through dissipation brings a lesson to many who need it. If our opinion is worth anything to the exhibitors, our advice would be to grab this one and play it.

Then again, we saw another screening, a Twentieth Century-Fox production, "Cafe Metropole." This is another worthwhile picture, which is further evidence of Hollywood's efforts to make pictures for an intelligent public, an important thing that had been overlooked in many cases in the past. And this brings us again to the conclusion that pictures are getting better and better all the while. Mr. McLucas and the Twentieth Century-Fox folks have our thanks for these.

The Omaha World-Herald recently carried a story in which the word "Electroencephalographist" was used several times and suggested that there was a job waiting for anyone who could pronounce the word. We didn't try it, because we have a job already, but we did try to figure out what it meant. Webster seems never to have heard of it, and that makes us wonder if it is a part of the New Deal, or something the cat drug in, or possibly something we saw in the Gulf when we were fishing last winter. We saw something, and maybe "electroencephalography" is what it was, but, anyhow, there's no darn sense in using such a word, but if we were to guess on it, we'd guess it had something to do with electrical resistance, or something like that. Maybe it's a new kind of a device for weaning calves.

After thinking the matter over carefully, we have arrived at the conclusion that this will be about all the reader can stand, and this brings up the suggestion that it is about time to ring off and go to bed. There seems to be no doggone sense in prolonging the agony further.

AMPA Votes to Move Meeting Headquarters

The board of directors of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York voted this week to move the headquarters for their weekly luncheon-meetings from the Hotel Edison to Sardi's Restaurant, on West 44th Street, and to effect the regular summer recess after the meeting on May 27th, resuming in September.

Reports will be made later on a study of the extent of cooperation—if any—of local newspapers with theatres staging "premiere" showings of important pictures. It is intended to conduct a roundtable with New York film critics and columnists in the fall.

This week's meeting, on Thursday, will have as guests Ben Bernie, Lou Holtz, Nick Lucas and Mark Sandrich, director of "Shall We Dance?" It will be the first meeting of the new regime headed by Ralph Rolan, vice-president of March of Time.

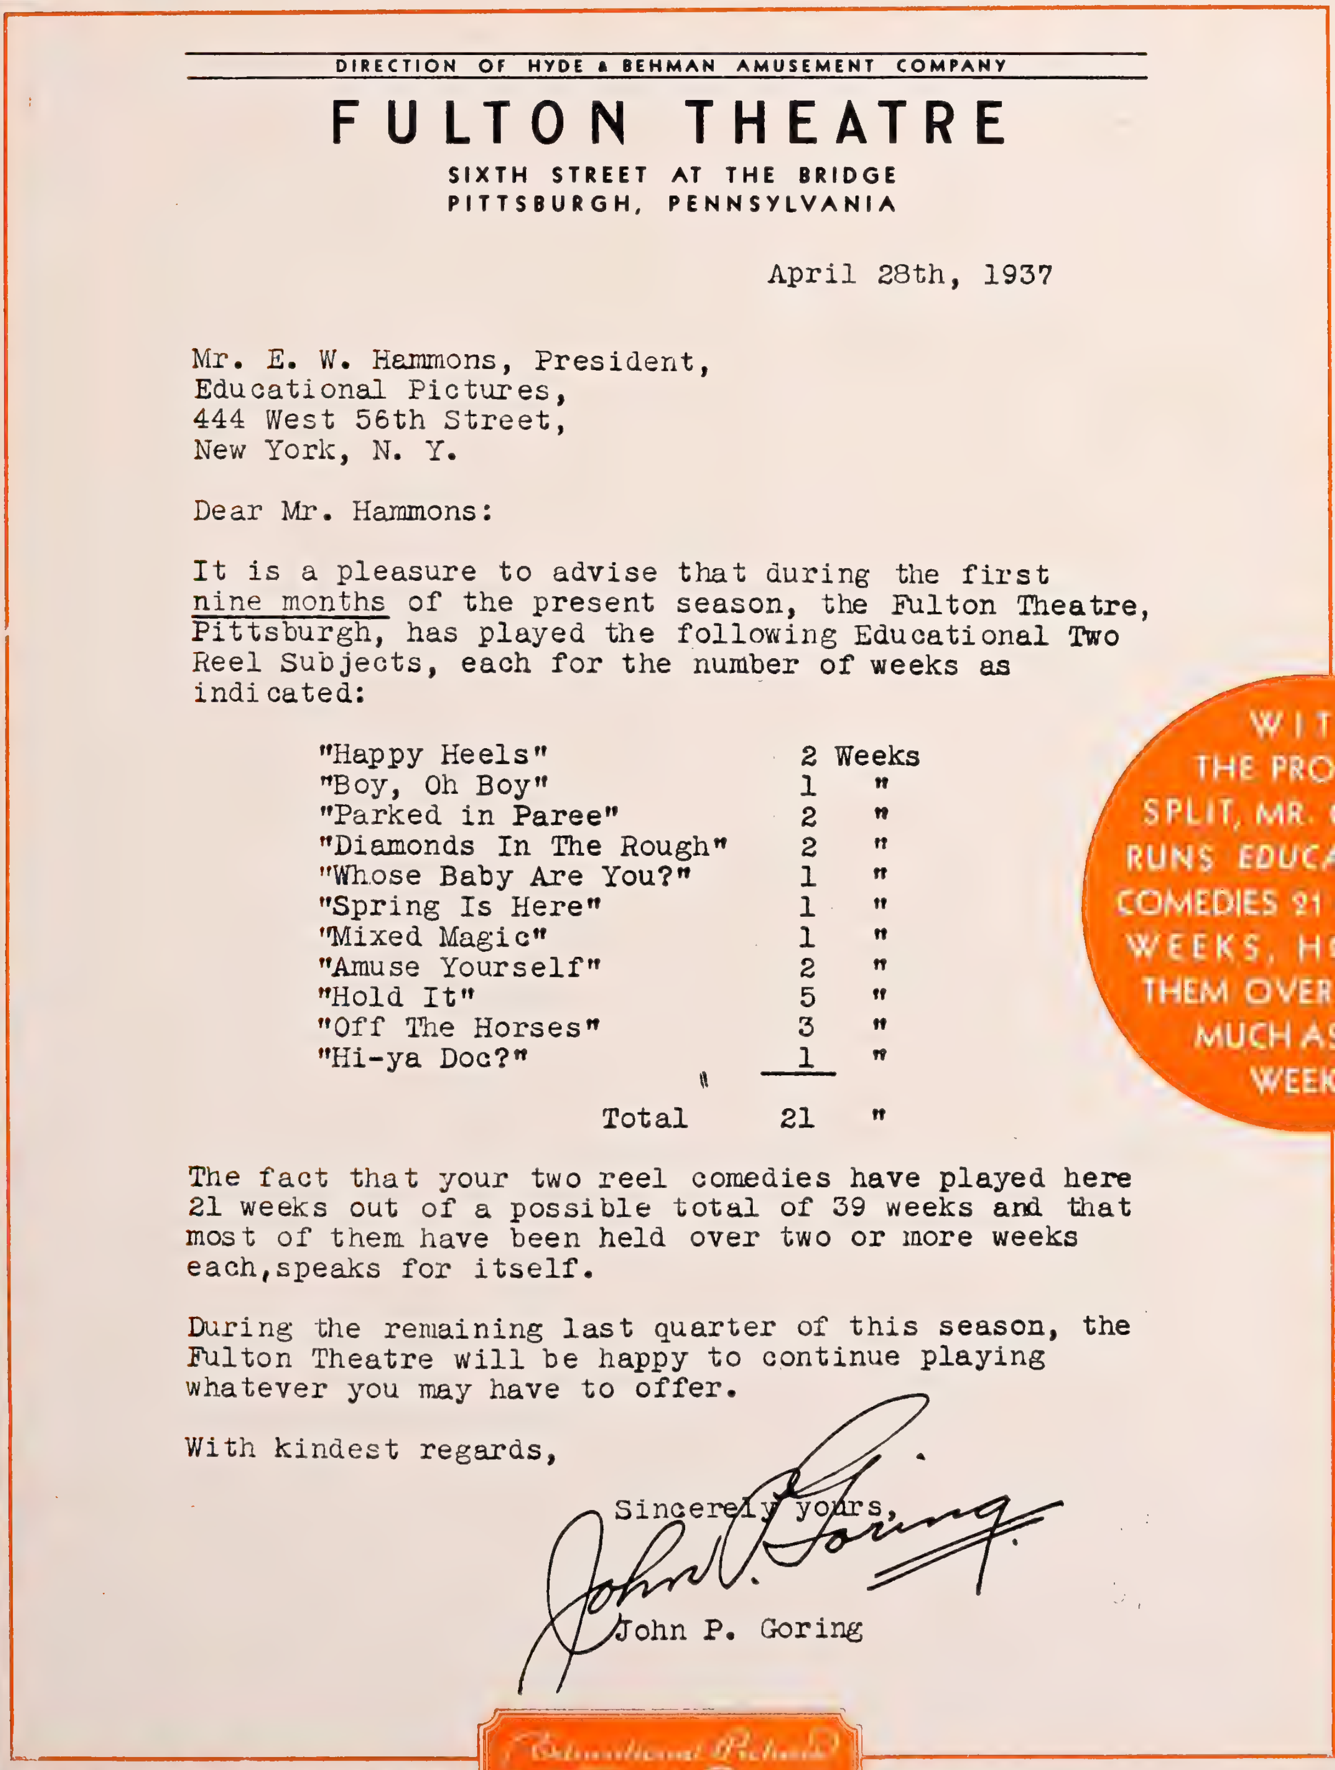
A SHOWMAN IN SHORTS PLAYS 'EM AND SAYS...IT'S A PLEASURE



DIRECTION OF HYDE & BEHMAN AMUSEMENT COMPANY

FULTON THEATRE

SIXTH STREET AT THE BRIDGE
PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA

April 28th, 1937

Mr. E. W. Hammons, President,
Educational Pictures,
444 West 56th Street,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Hammons:

It is a pleasure to advise that during the first nine months of the present season, the Fulton Theatre, Pittsburgh, has played the following Educational Two Reel Subjects, each for the number of weeks as indicated:

"Happy Heels"	2 Weeks
"Boy, Oh Boy"	1 "
"Parked in Paree"	2 "
"Diamonds In The Rough"	2 "
"Whose Baby Are You?"	1 "
"Spring Is Here"	1 "
"Mixed Magic"	1 "
"Amuse Yourself"	2 "
"Hold It"	5 "
"Off The Horses"	3 "
"Hi-ya Doc?"	1 "
Total	21 "

The fact that your two reel comedies have played here 21 weeks out of a possible total of 39 weeks and that most of them have been held over two or more weeks each, speaks for itself.

During the remaining last quarter of this season, the Fulton Theatre will be happy to continue playing whatever you may have to offer.

With kindest regards,

Strip-Tease Sequel

SOME aspects of New York City's projected process of eliminating the strip-tease from the metropolitan stage remind one of the late Bill Nye's solution for removing grease spots from his vest. It worked so well that it removed the vest, too.

It seems that what might have been called the Gypsy Rose Lee movement swept on to such unbridled triumphs that everybody but three or four Minskys agreed the scenery was getting to be considerably richer than the naked eye could bear. Then Mr. Paul Moss, commissioner of licenses, being rather without power to cancel licenses without a court conviction—and it is hard to convict with juries as susceptible to sex appeal as they so often are—resorted to the device of letting the licenses of the offending burlesque theatres expire, also a procedure not too well grounded in the law. Then in haste to remedy the situation and empower the commissioner, the Dunnigan bill conferring arbitrary authority to close any theatre presenting a performance deemed offensive, was hurried through the legislature at Albany. Happily, Governor Lehman's veto saves the state from an inept, dangerous law.

THE Dunnigan bill substantially would have established a censorship. It might have been a highly intelligent censorship and again it might not have been. The average record of censors and censorships is discouraging. Censors, like other bosses, tend to administrative policies that can be labelled for convenience decidedly fascistic.

The passage of the Dunnigan bill drew extensive and pungent attention in the daily press of the city. The editor of Motion Picture Herald was alarmed to find himself in a state of agreement, about this bill, with such diverse persons as Roger Baldwin, Heywood Broun and Walter Lippmann, who were found in agreement that the measure was a stricture on the stage and a peril to human liberties. They offered, so far as one may discover, no defense of dirty burlesque, as dirty burlesque. The only voice, outside the array of the bill's exponents, raised in its behalf was that of Mr. Joseph F. Lamb, chairman of the New York Chapter of the Knights of Columbus, and with the official approval of the office of Cardinal Hayes.

THIS appeared rather at variance with usual Catholic contentions against censorship. A more consistent course, it would seem, would have been in parallel with the pressures of the Church in behalf of decency on the screen, through such instrumentation as the Legion of Decency and finding ultimate expression in the motion picture's self-regulative Production Code Administration.

And that will remind one, too, that the gentry who were now so indignant about the Dunnigan bill are not to be recalled as enthusiastic approvers of the motion picture Production Code Administration and its process of interior self-regulation. There has been a deal of twittering among the cognoscenti about "censorship" as a misbranding of the very device by which the motion picture has avoided invasions of censorship.

The stage might well take a lesson from the younger screen. If the theatre will not regulate itself, it will get regulated. It can hope for liberty only by deserving it.

Honest men rarely are aware of the law.

MR. MYERS MEETS PANDORA

BECAUSE of the prominence of Mr. Abram F. Myers in discussions and movements pertaining to aggressive legislative programs concerning the motion picture, some of his expressions within the fortnight concerning his views on the "Current Trends in Federal Legislation" assume for the audience of this page a special interest.

Mr. Myers' expressions have been put into print for circulation by the National Lime Association, for which he is consulting counsel, with the footnote that he was formerly a special assistant to the Attorney General charged with the enforcement of the anti-trust laws, and later chairman of the Federal Trade Commission. It would have been nice if his position of counsel to the Allied States Association in the world of motion pictures had been recorded, too.

OVER on page 8 of the reprint one discovers a one-sentence keynote of Mr. Myers' lime-trade attitude when he says: "Pandora's box has been opened and the end is not in sight." To brush up your mythology, Miss Pandora had a big box, and it was full of trouble.

"I doubt," observed Mr. Myers to the dusty lime burners, "whether the Wagner Act will be held to apply to the retail trade. The new order has come about too suddenly and I am not yet sufficiently oriented to envision Uncle Sam bossing the corner grocery store."

The editor's pipe went out while he reflected on some movements to invite Uncle Sam to boss the movie palace up on the next corner, only a block from the grocery store. Anyway grocery stores do not sell lime.

"But," continued Mr. Myers, "if any business men today derive satisfaction in counting themselves out of the Wagner Act their contentment is likely to be short lived, as it is prob-

Convention Cavalcade

An industry made convention conscious by news of sales and trade meetings past, present and impending found opportunity to scan the record of yesteryear, the status of today and the prospect of tomorrow from a standing or sitting position about that far from the printed page.

Universal executives told its sales force convened in Los Angeles, May 17-20, that "the most pretentious production schedule the company has ever attempted" will include 50 features, four serials and 170 short subjects. (Story on page 39, picture on 11.)

Grand National sales representatives foregathered in the same city at the same time were informed of 65 pictures to be offered for the 1937-38 season, among them 12 specials, 12 Class A features, 24 series films developed around radio, book and cartoon characters, and 14 westerns. (Story on page 40, picture on 12.)

RCA Photophone personnel attending the company's sales sessions at Indianapolis, May 13-16, learned of a 35 per cent increase in sales of sound equipment to theatres, interpreted as indication of widespread improvement in theatre conditions. (Story on page 40.)

Allied States Association members heard that the exhibitor organization's legislative program will be a major topic of discussion at the annual convention in Milwaukee, May 26-28. (Story on page 41.)

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers had advance word of favorable reports on technological developments within the industry to be delivered to them at their convention in Hollywood, May 24-28. (Story on page 63.)

Stage producers, directors, playwrights and actors prepared to consider divers proposals designed to achieve rehabilitation of the so known legitimate theatre, preferably with the cooperation of motion picture interests, at the first convention of its kind, called for May 24-27, in New York. (Story on page 70.)

Twentieth Century-Fox and Republic sales conventions were scheduled to run concurrently, May 30-June 2, in Los Angeles. (Story on page 55.)

Dunnigan Bill Vetoed

Governor Herbert Lehman of New York vetoed the Dunnigan bill, which would have endowed the theatre licensing commissioner with broad powers in the field of stage entertainment, on Wednesday.

The story appears on page 15.

The Studio Strike

Third-week developments in the strike of the Federated Motion Picture Crafts included the return to work of studio cooks and mechanics, the ratification of the Screen Actors' Guild agreement with producers, a flare of fisticuffs in which no one was injured and bizarre tales of metropolitan mobsters being imported to act as bodyguards for picture stars (who would know better than that at worst). A threatened cross-country picketing of cinemas by some 2,000,000 volunteers had not materialized at press time.

The situation is described on page 51.

IATSE Recruiting

George Browne, president of the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees and Moving Picture Operators, told Hollywood listeners that his organization has written agreements covering the organization of exchange workers in 35 cities and is moving ahead in a campaign to organize theatre ushers throughout the United States and Canada.

Places are named and events chronicled on page 52.

G-B Prospects

Optimism towards the coming season's program of Gaumont British and a lively current activity in the selling of this year's product were the principal impressions gained by Arthur A. Lee, head of GB in America, who returned to his offices in New York Wednesday from a tour of exchanges in the western and southern states. Mr. Lee also said that the annual sales convention of GB would be held in New York June 10th and that at that time announcement would be made of the new product. The New York meeting will be followed by others in Chicago and Los Angeles.

Capital Signs Fox

Capital Films, Ltd., in London announced on Wednesday that William Fox has been engaged to develop Chemicolour, a new color process with which the company has been experimenting, in the United States. Mr. Fox has not been active since he sold the Fox Film Corporation to the Chase banking interests some seven years ago.

Coronation Censorship

The British press found much fault with the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Duke of Norfolk, official censors of pictures made of the coronation of King George VI, criticized for limiting the British releases to "the same length as a Mickey Mouse" whilst permitting films of up to twice as long to be dispatched for exhibition outside the realm. Archbishop and Duke preserved British tradition by disdaining to reply.

The English complaint and the transoceanic exploit of Dick Merrill and Jack Lambie are treated of on page 84.

AMPA Appointments

Ralph Rolan, recently elected president of The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, named six regular committees to handle various affairs of the organization.

The Allied Program

"The need to unite for self preservation is greater than ever before," declared Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied States, on the eve of the exhibitor organization's annual convention to be held in Milwaukee May 26-28, where Mr. Myers will present "Allied's Case in Law." Also to be heard on the program is a report by Al Steffes of Minnesota regarding the progress to date and future prospects of the Allied campaign for legislation aimed at separation of exhibition from distribution and production.

Hoyt's-Union Deal Off

Interviewed on his return from Europe with respect to the five-year partnership operating agreement between Hoyt's and Greater Union theatres in Australia, Walter J. Hutchinson, head of the foreign department of Twentieth Century-Fox, said, "As far as I know the deal is not being renewed." With Mr. Hutchinson and bound for the company convention in Hollywood were R. Sutton Dawes, England; T. Isdahl, Norway; Luigi Giordano, Egypt; Armand Paucker, Roumania; Stanley S. Crick, Austria; and Leslie Whelan, foreign publicity director.

National Issue

The controversy over the Quota suggestions of the so-called Moyne Committee is crystalizing into a clear cut issue of British versus American interests and it appears likely that the Cabinet may have to frame its own revision of the Films Act because of irreconcilable differences within the industry. The six British companies represented on the Council of the Kinematograph Renters Society have allied themselves with the Film Group, whereas the KRS as a body is speaking for the American importers. Out of which, what?

Bruce Allan's tracing of the eddying currents in the British Industry's largest problem is found on page 74.

Sound Men Confer

Sound department heads of the major studios, those unseen wizards who look after the audible content of the modern motion picture and do their work too well to be lionized for it, met in Hollywood Monday with technicians of the sound equipment companies under sponsorship of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to discuss new standards for sound track dimensions and placement on film, matters little understood but mightily appreciated by trade and public.

She is Gypsy Rose Lee no longer, and is to be known henceforward as Louise Hovick. Also she will not strip-tease for Twentieth Century-Fox pictures, according to official announcement. She is currently a member of the cast of "You Can't Have Everything," in production in Hollywood.

ASCAP Makes Plans

Nebraska followed the example of Montana and Washington in passing legislation estopping the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers from operating within its borders. Whereupon the organization summoned its field representatives to a convention in New York for the purpose of determining upon a plan of action to prevent further legislation in kind.

The story is on page 56.

Production Level

Eleven pictures were placed in production and 8 taken to cutting rooms, bringing the production level down from 51 to 48, but 4 of the new undertakings are of the kind known as "big" in a community where that adjective is significant.

Gus McCarthy gives details on page 37.

Admission Trend

Convention utterances of production, exhibition and distribution executives reiterate the thesis that rising costs of labor and materials must be accompanied by an increase in theatre admission prices. Plans disclosed by circuit operators indicate that steps in this direction are to be taken, and it is generally felt that independent theatre owners will follow their lead.

The trend is scanned on page 13.

To Double or—

Quite a lot of light is thrown upon the question, to double or not to double features, by exhibitors, distributors and producers in expressions induced by means of ballots, questionnaires and interviews.

The problem is presented as of now and yesterday and tomorrow on page 80.

Held in Bombing

Arrest of Charles O. and Leo K. Smith in Indiana as stench bombers responsible for auditorium outrages committed recently in the New York area and elsewhere was represented by District Attorney William F. X. Geoghan of Brooklyn as bringing to an end the wave of olfactory abuses accountable for many temporary closings and some injuries to patrons. And then, Tuesday, an usher in the Central theatre, New York, one of four in the Times Square district owned by Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatres Owners Association, found a stench bomb under a seat in the seventh row. Police were called to stand guard at the entrances to all four cinemas.

The story is on page 38.

The Color Factor

The color factor in motion pictures appeared in a fair way to take on augmented importance as Samuel Goldwyn announced an all-Technicolor policy for his future productions and the color company publicly mentioned receipt of orders for 55,000,000 feet of Technicolor film for delivery this year, a combination of revelations popularly associated with a rise of nearly 7 points in the market value of Technicolor stock.

More about this on page 50.

Title Registration

Proposals for changing the title registration rule of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association in such manner as to afford protection for 3 or 4 years instead of 2, as at present, are not expected to be acted upon prior to the annual meeting of the board, scheduled for next month. Revision is believed likely.

OWNERS TO STIMULATE UPWARD TREND OF PRICES

Large Circuits Undertake General Revision of Admission Scale and Independents Prepare to Follow Suit

Admission scales, trending upward since last fall, will continue to increase, present plans of exhibitors indicate. Large circuit operators have begun general revision of their box office prices or have announced that they will do so and independent theatre operators throughout the country are prepared to follow suit, though many of them believe that any change should be delayed until after the new season is well under way.

Executives of production and distribution companies have indicated in talks at sales conventions and in interviews that admission prices must be increased to meet rising production and overhead costs.

At the recent Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer convention in Los Angeles, Al Lichtman, executive assistant to Nicholas M. Schenck, criticized the selling of shows at rates not in keeping with the excellence of the product.

"Good motion pictures are being sold too cheaply by the theatres of America," Mr. Lichtman said. "The cost of picture entertainment has not kept pace with the rise of other prices and the rise of wages. Prior to 1930, the average price at a major theatre was 75 cents. Today the price for an evening show averages 40 cents. There is no question but that there is a definite trend on the part of theatres toward higher prices throughout the United States. This is a healthy situation."

Barney Balaban, Paramount president, also has expressed the view that a general "tightening up" of admission scales is both necessary and possible in many sections of the country. He pointed out that a general rise in theatre overhead must be expected and would have to be met by increasing admissions, wherever possible. The present 40 cent exemption level of the federal admission tax continues to stand as a basic obstacle to higher admissions, however, Mr. Balaban observed.

Paramount theatre partners, at their convention in Miami in March, agreed that increased production costs, a greater number of pictures in the higher budget brackets from all major studios, and actual and anticipated higher labor costs are factors which will make admission increases inevitable. While opinion on the result was divided the majority believed that the public would meet the increase without resentment.

Adolph Zukor, chairman of the Paramount board, told delegates at the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America meeting in Miami at the same time that exhibitors must be prepared to pay more for film either by way of extended runs or more preferred playing time, or through admission increases if they would assure themselves of a steady flow of high quality product. He informed them that negative costs were considerably increased over last year and might be expected to go higher.

TWO ON THE AISLE TO BE CALLED FOR

The admission prices change at the Metropolitan, Boston, at 1 P.M. A woman recently 'phoned to the theatre at 12:55 P.M. and asked the management to put aside two lower priced tickets. She was unavoidably delayed and would not be able to reach the theatre before the price change-over. The manager's answer is not recorded.

California Prices Raised

Late in April the first general increase by all important theatres in a particular territory was instituted by 125 major and independent houses in northern California, including the San Francisco and Oakland areas. The Fox West Coast circuit was the leader in the move, 24 units of National Theatres being included in the total, and Spyros Skouras, head of the circuit, said that its purpose was to meet increased costs of films, labor and materials. Mr. Skouras added that the circuit would raise prices in most spots throughout the country where it has not already done so, except in situations where competitive conditions made the move impractical.

Theatres in the California area which had been charging 40 cents increased the scale to 55 cents and the smaller houses, charging 25 cents, added five cents. The 30 cent admission level was raised to 40 cents.

Nate Blumberg, general manager of RKO theatres, announced recently that the circuit had increased admission in "practically all" of its theatres and that the effect had been good.

Individual Increases Noted

Cases of individual theatres or those within a small area increasing prices continue to be reported.

In Providence, R. I., every first run theatre in the city has increased its top price to 50 cents. In some instances the rise was as much as ten cents but in the majority of cases only a five cent raise was necessary. The houses included the Majestic and Fay's of the Fay circuit, Loew's State, RKO Albee and the Strand, an independent.

"Early bird" matinee prices at five Hamrick-Evergreen first run theatres in Seattle have been advanced from 25 to 30 cents. This price prevails until 1 P.M. when admissions are increased another five cents to 6 P.M. Evening prices remain at 40 cents. At Aberdeen and Hoquiam, Wash., six Grays Harbor theatres have raised prices five cents to 35 cents for balcony seats and 40 cents for the lower floor.

Theatre Rates Must Go Up to Meet Increased Costs of Production and Overhead, Sales Conventions Are Told

Theatres controlled by the Memmar company in Boise, Idaho, have increased prices five cents. The houses are the Granada, the Ada and the Pinney.

In Milwaukee the first run Fox and Warner-Saxe houses have raised their low prices from 25 to 35 cents while the top price remains at 50 cents.

The Rialto, State, Plaza, Victory, Tabor, Center and Isis theatres in Denver have all increased their scales five cents following increases by one or two houses.

A number of theatres in Alabama have raised prices since the sales tax became effective in the state on April 1st. The tax calls for a one mill token for each five cents of admission price and to save the trouble of handling the tokens managers have raised the scales five cents and absorbed the tax. The larger theatres in Birmingham, however, have not revised their scales.

In Tennessee a three per cent amusement tax has been passed on to the public in increases of one or two cents in all the first run and neighborhood houses.

Call Special Session Of Nebraska MPTO

Charles E. Williams, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Nebraska and Western Iowa, has called a meeting of all independent exhibitors at the Hotel Loyal at Omaha on May 25. Mr. Williams' announcement said that all exhibitors "should consider methods of self-defense" against instructions being given by various distributors to their selling forces at the annual sales meetings.

The annual convention of the Independent Theatre Owners of Arkansas will be held May 23-24 at the Hotel Marion at Little Rock, J. F. Norman, secretary, announced this week. Louis Haven, of Forest City, will preside.

Community Group Denied Voice in Censorship

The Ontario government has refused an unusual request from the Community Welfare Council of Ontario with headquarters at Toronto in the proposal from the organization for a committee to sit with the Provincial Board of Moving Picture Censors at all screenings so that the council can publish classified lists of pictures suitable for adult and family patronage. The council, made up of representatives from many community and religious bodies, desires to set up a system of subsidiary censorship.

able that many of the states will now enact similar statutes applicable to purely local employments." That seems to be being attended to for motion picture purposes, too.

Mr. Myers finds the United States Supreme Court somewhat crossed up on itself, and offering abundant citation of precedent for its new attitude, which he thinks may develop extensively. Many will agree.

"I believe," Mr. Myers remarked, "that the preponderance of opinion in industrial circles favors the establishment of some method whereby the competitive problems of industry can be worked out cooperatively under the watchful eye of the Federal Government and without undue interference on the part of inexperienced and opinionated bureaucrats. The tragedy of N.R.A. was its maladministration."

UNFORTUNATELY, due maybe to a pressure of time, Mr. Myers did not indicate even sketchily how he expects to get the "watchful eye" without "undue interference," or how bureaucrats are to be vaccinated against getting opinionated, nor yet how better keepers of the Blue Eagle might have been had. Perhaps it may be permitted the editor to remark that on this same page the day the Blue Eagle was hatched there was a suggestion that his egg came from Pandora's box. It will be remembered that the Blue Eagle was carried to the Supreme Court in a chicken coop and died of it. That was the old court of the status quo ante, a judicial institution, and, at that time it was not engaged in a legislative program.

Like some of the rest of us, Mr. Myers finds some aspects of application of the Robinson-Patman Act confusing. And concerning the Sugar Institute case he finds that the ruling "is a little like the permission by the lady in the familiar couplet to her daughter who wanted to go swimming." That is the only reference that Mr. Myers seems to have made to the strip-tease movement—which does not seem to move at the moment. That has nothing to do with lime, of course, and probably not even sugar. Anyway Mr. Myers wants more precedent adjudications before he knows where the Patman Act applies. The motion picture business is like that about it, too.

MR. MYERS made one suggestion to be deemed especially pregnant in this democracy. He would have the taxes put where the people could see them.

"Every person who enjoys a livelihood, no matter how meager, should make a direct contribution to the Federal treasury, even though the amount paid barely covers the cost of collecting it. All citizens now pay heavily in the form of indirect taxes, but the payment of a direct tax would create a sense of responsibility and induce sober thinking on the part of a vast number of those who think today of the Federal Treasury only in terms of a game of put and take—they take while others put."

In conclusion of Mr. Myers' able and thoughtful expression he said: "In the solution of these new and troublesome problems, in the formulation of plans for the future, in the promotional work which is so necessary to repulse the invasion of substitute products, and, in a hundred other ways, you will require the guidance and assistance which only a well-organized, efficiently conducted trade association can supply."

That is the sole tribute to the Hays office in Mr. Myers' speech.

Edward Hyman Resigns From Century Circuit

Edward Hyman, who has been in charge of theatres and active in film buys, resigned Tuesday from the Century Circuit in New York after being with the organization for the past nine years. The resignation becomes effective June 1.

Mr. Hyman and his brother have just purchased a 3,000-acre apple orchard at Markham, Va., which is 50 miles from Washington. He will open a New York marketing office.

Before joining Century, Mr. Hyman had been with Mitchell H. Mark for 17 years, 10 of which were spent as managing director of the Brooklyn Strand. No successor has as yet been appointed to Mr. Hyman by Century.

Eastman Raises Dividend

Eastman Kodak Company, one of the largest manufacturers of motion picture raw stock, this week raised the dividend on its common stock to an $8 annual basis as directors voted a quarterly payment of $2, due July 2 to holders of record June 5. In previous quarters, $1.50 was paid.

A. T. & T. Anti-Trust Suit Delayed

Trial of the action charging American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, Inc., with violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Laws has been postponed in the United States district court in New York to October 4.

RKO to Acquire Three Theatres in Yonkers

Having reached an agreement with Sam D. Cocalis and Berman Sussman for the acquisition of the Park Hill, Broadway and Central theatres in Yonkers, N. Y., RKO has not yet signed the contracts but is expected to within the next week. Mr. Cocalis operates the first two houses while Mr. Sussman has the Central. Mr. Cocalis also revealed this week that he had acquired Matty Kutinsky's one-third interest in six Bronx and White Plains theatres and that he would build three additional houses at New Jersey shore resorts.

Form Richards-Lightman

Richards-Lightman Theatres Corporation has been formed at Dover, Del., with capital listed at $130,000 and 206 shares of no par value stock. The incorporators are L. H. Herman, B. R. Jones and J. P. Murray of Wilmington. It was reported in New York that the new company was formed to take over the theatre properties in Mississippi and Arkansas in which E. V. Richards of New Orleans and M. A. Lightman of Memphis have joint interests.

Drive Collects $17,293

The motion picture division of Catholic Charities, headed by Frank C. Walker of the Comerford Circuit, has received $17,293 toward the 1937 appeal, it was announced this week by John A. Coleman of Adler-Coleman and Company, chairman of the special gifts committee.

Argentine Leading Buyer Of American Productions

For the past two years Argentina has been the biggest foreign market for American motion pictures although European competition and adverse exchange conditions have retarded the sales of American sound and projection equipment there, Assistant American Trade Commissioner Joseph D. Walstrom, Buenos Aires, reported to the Department of Commerce this week.

Of the 1,200 motion picture theatres listed in Argentina, about 750 are active and of these, approximately 550 are equipped with sound equipment which may be termed adequate, the report continues.

Of the 1,200 projectors in active use, 720 are of German origin, 300 British, 120 American and the remainder of Dutch and French manufacture, it was also said.

C. A. Schultz, executive head of Commonwealth Theatres in Kansas City, announced this week the spring convention of his circuit managers would be called for May 25-26 at the Blue Hills Country Club.

NEW THEATRE LICENSING MEASURE VETOED AFTER PROTEST BY ACTORS

Dunnigan Bill Denounced at Rally as 'One - Man Censorship'; Motion Picture Theatre Executives Noncommittal

Governor Lehman Rejects Bill Because of Too Broad Provisions; Expresses Sympathy with Aim of Proponents

OMAHA WILL REVIVE BOARD OF CENSORS

The Omaha city board of stage and screen censors, called the City Welfare Board, will be revived by Mayor Dan Butler, who announced this week he is tired of carrying the entire burden of censorship himself. The mayor's pronouncement followed his attempt to prevent the play, "Tobacco Road," from playing at the Paramount theatre. He stopped it one night by stationing 117 policemen around the house but these were removed the next day by a court order and the show went on as scheduled. Previously to his action against the play, Mayor Butler also banned the picture, "Ecstasy," from Omaha theatres.

The Dunnigan bill, an outgrowth of the recent agitation against strip tease acts in particular and burlesque in general, which would have empowered a license commissioner to revoke the permit of any theatre housing a show he deemed objectionable, provoked a storm of controversy before it was vetoed on Wednesday by Herbert H. Lehman, New York's governor. Leading representatives of the legitimate stage, the press and civic and religious authorities who had attacked burlesque, debated the bill, pro and con.

The Governor refused to sign the bill on the ground that the powers it gave the license commissioner were too broad.

At a public rally in the New Amsterdam theatre, New York, last Sunday night playwrights, actors, producers, critics, stagehands and an audience of 2,000 registered loud disapproval of the measure as "one man censorship" and demanded that it be vetoed.

On Tuesday the Right Reverend Francis A. McIntyre, chancellor of the Catholic archdiocese of New York, announced that a statement favoring the measure made by Joseph F. Lamb, chairman of the New York Chapter, Knights of Columbus, had the approval of Patrick Cardinal Hayes.

The press, editorially, was unanimous in condemnation of the bill on the ground that present laws provide adequate protection against indecency and that limitation of the stage might lead to encroachment on civil liberties.

Motion picture theatre circuit heads were reported to have declined to join the legitimate theatre forces in protesting against the measure.

In vetoing the measure Governor Lehman said: "While fully appreciative of the high purpose of those supporting this bill and while warmly joining in the desire to maintain the theatre on a proper moral plane, it nevertheless seems to me that the specific provisions of this bill are too broad and too susceptible of abuse in administration."

Representatives of the legitimate stage and other groups protesting the bill had requested that the Governor hold a public hearing, but he rejected the bill without this formality.

Although Paul Moss, Commissioner of Licenses for New York, had refused to make any statement, opinion in the press was that the measure had been introduced by John J. Dunnigan, state senator, as a direct result of the recent burlesque problem in New York. Mr. Moss secured a conviction on a charge of indecency against one theatre and shortly afterward refused to renew the licenses of 13 others.

The bill would have given the commissioner power, upon proof of "immorality" satisfactory to himself, to revoke a license for any "exhibition, drama, play, show or entertainment, though there shall have been no conviction therefor." The measure was passed by both houses of the legislature in the closing minutes of the session without hearings or debate.

The legitimate stage's objections were voiced at the rally by Marc Connelly and George Middleton, playwrights; Helen Hayes, Peggy Wood and Maurice Evans, players; Arthur Hopkins, producer; John Anderson, dramatic critic; James J. Brennan of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, and Morris L. Ernst, attorney.

A telegram signed by 24 organizations was sent to Governor Lehman following the meeting, in which he was informed of the theatre's "intense concern" and "profound disapproval" and was begged "not to subject us to the withering destructiveness of censorship."

Mr. Connelly called the bill the first that "completely and categorically denies us the right to appeal to the courts," and Mr. Ernst insisted that "there are ample laws now against nudity and profanity in the theatre."

Mr. Evans, English actor now appearing here in "King Richard II," decried censorship as it is practiced in London where arbitrary power is vested in the Lord Chamberlain.

Telegrams from others of the theatre's important names, among them Eugene O'Neill, Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontaine, Philip Merivale and Maxwell Anderson were read by Mr. Connelly.

"Filthy Shows" Condemned

The statement by Mr. Lamb which was given official approval by the Catholic hierarchy said that the issue at stake was "whether New York must remain helpless and submit to filthy shows." He asked if "our youth cannot be protected against the influence of the barons of vice" and added that "this great city should have the power to free itself of stage racketeers who thrive on slop-jar theatricals."

Simultaneously with Cardinal Hayes' expressed interest in the passage of the bill, the church's two leading weekly newspapers in the city, the Catholic News and the Brooklyn Tablet editorially assailed the lay press for opposing the measure and held that the time had come to clean up the "mess" in the theatres along Broadway.

Mr. Lamb's statement disagreed with the prevalent opinion that the bill provided one-man power equivalent to censorship.

"If the bill be examined closely," he said, "it will be found that the license commissioner, before he can revoke a license, must call a hearing; due notice must be given of this hearing; interested persons may be represented by counsel; there may be a cross-examination; there may be rebuttal. This gives an opportunity for trial and full judicial procedure.

"The decision of the license commissioner is administrative rather than punitive. As he has power to grant a license, why should he not have power to withdraw a license when it is abused? The decisions of the license commissioner must be based on the law as it exists, just the same as a decision by a judge would be based on the same law."

Newspapers Attack Bill

Editorial opinion in the New York dailies was unanimous in condemning the bill, especially because of the implications of encroachment on personal liberty and civil rights which they saw in it.

It was agreed that measures against such excesses as reached by the burlesque theatres were necessary but present laws against indecency were held to be adequate for such protection.

The New York Times said, "Paul Moss, the Commissioner of Licenses was not only within his rights but acting in accordance with his official duty in attempting to have them (burlesque theatres) closed. But the method that he selected was of questionable legality. . . . If the Governor fails to veto it, that measure will be a threat to the entire New York stage." The Herald-Tribune's editorial reaction was similar.

The World Telegram called the measure "unnecessary, undemocratic, oppressive and muddled. The American said, "Immorality in the theatre must be suppressed, of course, but not through the denial of legal rights which protect citizens against the greater immorality of injustice."

Trans Lux Earnings For Quarter $92,850

Percy N. Furber, chairman of the board of Trans Lux Daylight Picture Screen Corporation, parent company of Trans Lux Movie Ticker Corporation, Canadian Trans Lux Corporation and Trans Lux Movies Corporation, told stockholders at the annual meeting in New York this week that consolidated net earnings after all charges and taxes for the March quarter approximated $92,850. This compared with $72,386 a year ago.

Trans Lux Movie Ticker, 70 per cent owned, in the three months had an indicated net of $101,809, against $92,134 a year ago. There were 1,993 tickers in service on May 8, comparing with 1,871 at the first of the year.

Canadian Trans Lux had an indicated net of $33,622 for the first quarter, against $10,600 a year ago. Trans Lux Movies, theatre unit, in the first quarter had a net profit of $44,000, against $37,000 a year ago.

FILM 'KING SOLOMON'S

an illustrated article

by BRUCE ALLAN

in London

WHILE a practical world frets about international boundaries and economic standards, matters disdained by Sir Rider Haggard in the highly imaginative novels that lifted his readers likewise free of them, Gaumont British cutters are at work on something like 100,000 feet of film exposed in the process of bringing "King Solomon's Mines" to the modern screen under circumstances the author would have revelled in. The writer took up residence at Otto's Bluff, deep in what was called darkest Africa, and roamed Zululand, the Drakensburg Mountains, the Kalahari Desert and the Valey of a Thousand Hills while writing the fantastic novel of this setting. The production crew assigned to its filming did likewise, using the Haggard house as executive headquarters and photographing the exteriors as the author saw them.

The advance guard of the production unit left England on November 16th, the remainder of the party, including players, four days later. They have only now returned to London, bearing such evidence of their labors under the broiling African sun as the stills reproduced herewith. That they've "got something there," to use an Americanism gaining currency on this side, is the opinion of the favored who have seen portions of the picture in the rough. (It is not expected that it will be exhibited in final form before July.)

Much is said, and to be said, as to why the picture is counted upon to manifest that international appeal so sought after at this time, but expert and layman alike point out that precisely that appeal was a dominant characteristic of the Haggard writings.

There is a good deal of mentionable data indicative of the scale on which the production has been handled—items like the employment of 4,000 native tribesmen in battle sequences, the cost of constructing a native kraal and other required buildings in a remote country, the maintenance of daily radio communication with the home studio—but statistics are less esteemed than personal equations in the calculations of the man behind the ticket wicket. Important to him are the names (left to right, incidentally, in the group picture on your right) of Cedric Hardwicke, Paul Robeson, Anna Lee, Roland Young and John Loder, the principals in a large cast. Important to him, also, is the information that Mr. Robeson has been given three songs to sing in the picture, originals by Mischa Spoliansky, and that Miss Lee's role has romantic aspects not provided by the Haggard script but deemed essential from the cinema point of view.

CONSOLIDATION OF FEDERAL FILM ACTIVITIES PROPOSED IN CONGRESS

House Bill Calls for Concentration in Printing Office Under Director Supervising $1,000,000 Annual Production Outlay

Film Workers in Government Employ Say Measure Would Bring Economy and Eliminate "Play-Boys" from Operations

Consolidation of the many far-flung motion picture production activities of the United States Government was proposed Wednesday in Congress in a bill presented by William Theodore Schulte, Democrat from the first Congressional District in Indiana.

The measure would establish an Office of Motion Pictures in the Government Printing Office, under a Director who would have authority over and supervision of federal expenditures approximating $1,000,000 annually for motion picture production and now widely scattered over the intricate structure of government bureaus, boards, divisions and departments. Thus the Government Printing Office, basically, would take control of the motion picture art in federal filming matters in the same manner that it has embraced the printing press.

Congressman Schulte is said to have written his bill after a thorough personal study of the subject, and, according to motion picture workers in government employ, its enactment would result in economy in government and also eliminate the "play-boys" from motion picture work in the federal structure. They assert that government motion picture activities now are conducted in a manner so varied as to preclude any definite evaluation either of the technical or other talent employed, investments made, or equipment used.

Would Concentrate Work

The bill will concentrate the government motion picture work under one roof so that it can be observed and made to use competent talent, stay out of politics—in which it participated considerably through the WPA in the last Presidential campaign—and, equally importantly, discontinue interference with private film work in business. Too, it would show up the waste in film work in federal activities, according to Washington motion picture observers.

The proposal by Congressman Schulte would not, however, make it mandatory for the government to build a laboratory or a studio—"If the Director finds he can contract the laboratory and production work out to commerce cheaper than he can build and operate a laboratory or studio," or assemble a lot of inefficient equipment. Business, then, will get a chance to bid on some of the federal film projects.

Virtually every old-line Government department, and most of the New Deal's "alphabetic bureaus," are engaged in filming activities of one kind or another, from the Department of Mines and the Department of Agriculture, which are "old-timers" in motion picture production, right on up to the more recent Resettlement Administration, et al.

Congressman Schulte's bill follows:

A BILL

To establish an Office of Motion Pictures in the Government Printing Office and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there is hereby established in the Government Printing Office an Office of Motion Pictures under the direction of a Director, who shall be a practical motion picture engineer versed in the art of motion picture production, and who shall be appointed by the Public Printer without regard to the Civil Service laws. The Director shall receive a salary of $8,000 per annum.

"Sec. 2. The Public Printer is authorized and directed, upon requisition from the Director, to appoint, without regard to Civil Service laws, three Technical Assistants who shall be practical motion picture engineers versed in the art of motion picture production and who shall each receive a salary of $4,800 per annum: and to appoint, subject to the Civil Service laws and to the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such other officers and employees as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

"Sec. 3. The term Federal agency as used in this Act includes the United States of America and any department, administration, commission, board, bureau, establishment, agency, or instrumentality of the United States of America: Provided, That no provision of this Act shall prohibit the authorized functions of the War and Navy Departments and the National Archives and any agencies thereof but the War and Navy Departments and the National Archives and any agencies thereof may utilize the services of the Office of Motion Pictures upon payment of the cost of the services rendered.

"Sec. 4. (a) The Office of Motion Pictures shall establish and maintain an establishment to procure and to provide motion picture film production and manufacturing services for all Federal agencies of the government, to distribute motion picture films, and to render professional and technical services for any Federal agency in connection with the production, the procurement, and the distribution of motion picture films.

"(b) It shall be the duty of the Director to establish all costs, to produce, procure, prepare, and furnish motion picture films (including copies and duplicates): to edit, project, score with sound, process, manufacture, store and distribute motion picture films; and to provide such services for any Federal agency.

"(c) Any Federal agency ordering services from the Office of Motion Pictures shall pay promptly by check to the Public Printer upon his written request, either in advance or upon completion of the services all or part of the estimated or actual cost thereof, as the case may be, and bills rendered by the Public Printer in accordance therewith shall not be subject to audit or certification in advance of payment: Provided, that proper adjustments on the basis of the actual cost of delivered services paid for in advance shall be made monthly or quarterly as may be agreed upon by the Director of The Office of Motion Pictures and the agency. All sums paid to the Public Printer for services that he is authorized by law to furnish shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the working capital of the Public Printer, and become at once subject to requisition by the Public Printer for authorized expenditures of the Office of Motion Pictures.

"(d) It shall be the duty of the Director to cooperate in planning, budgeting, and estimating costs for any motion picture activity of any Federal agency.

(a) The Director may compile and publish price lists and general and specific information concerning motion picture films which are owned by any Federal agency and which are available for loan or sale and may sell copies of any motion picture film subject to the approval of the head of the agency in which such film originated: Provided, All moneys received from the sale of such films shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the working capital of the Public Printer for authorized expenditures of the office of Motion Pictures.

"Sec. 5 (a) The Public Printer is hereby authorized to make such expenditures for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for rent, for travel expenses, for books of reference and periodicals, for printing and binding, and for photographic, technical, motion picture laboratory and other equipment and materials (including contract production services) as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, and as may be provided by Congress from time to time.

"(b) The Public Printer shall include in his annual report to Congress a statement of all moneys received or disbursed by him on account of the Office of Motion Pictures, and statements showing the cost of all services furnished for the several Federal agencies.

"Sec. 6. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated such sum of money as may be necessary for working capital and expenses of the Public Printer in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

"Sec. 7. The Public Printer may accept by transfer, any equipment, supplies or other materials offered by the head of any Federal agency for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act.

"Sec. 8. All photographing, developing, printing, processing, procuring, contracting, and storing of motion picture films shall be provided by the Office of Motion Pictures for all Federal agencies, and no part of any appropriations shall be expended by any other Federal agency, other than provided in this Act, for personal services, travel, equipment, rent, supplies, and materials, for the purpose of producing, procuring, preparing, or distributing of motion picture films.

"Sec. 9. The Joint Congressional Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to adopt and employ such measures as in its discretion it may deem necessary to remedy any neglect, delay, duplication, or waste in the production, procurement, preparation and distribution of motion picture films by the Office of Motion Pictures.

"Sec. 10. This Act shall take effect 90 days after its approval.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Policemen at Work

The ladies and gentlemen trudging the picket lines are not the only ones making work for police and detectives. Before the strike started policemen where haunting United Artists studios because Walter Wanger, making "Vogues of 1938," had hired hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of furs and gowns which the models he imported from New York would wear. One day a little fire broke out on the set where the girls wearing the priceless finery were working and quick as a wink, the cops formed a cordon around the surprised models.

Further down the U. A. lot another deadline was established. Despite a high "spite fence,'" Samuel Goldwyn made doubly sure that no one would cast an eye over the set he is preparing for "Hurricane" by establishing a picket line of plain clothes men.

But it remained for MGM to pull the stunt deluxe. Down Washington Boulevard raced an armored car, sirens screaming. Ahead and behind rode motor cops. Inside the gates the reason for the wild excitement was revealed. When a son was born to Empress Marie Louise, Napoleon presented her with a set of jewels. For more than 100 years they were in the hands of royalty. Owned by Archduchess Immaculata of Hapsburg-Holstein, they were shown to the public at the Barcelona Exposition in 1929. In 1930, New York collectors bought them. Guarded day and night, the jewels, which have a monetary value of $500,000, but which from an historical consideration are priceless, will be worn by Greta Garbo in "Madame Walewska."

Finish 11; Start 8

The record of pictures started and finished during the past two weeks while the strike situation appeared critical does not indicate that the widely publicized fracas interfered with production. During the period when Hollywood was supposed to be facing the gravest crisis in its history, twenty-two films started and nineteen finished.

Two pictures started at 20th Century-Fox. Jane Withers is the star of "Wild and Wooly," in which Pauline Moore, Robert Wilcox, Douglas Fowley, Lon Chaney, Jr., Walter Brennan and Jack Searl will also appear. Alfred Werker is directing. "Lancer Spy," being directed by Gregory Ratoff, will present Peter Lorre, Germaine Aussey, George Sanders, Virginia Field, Sig Rumann, Joseph Shildkraut, Colin Clive, Lester Matthews and Fritz Feld.

Grand National Starts Two

To give its sales convention delegates something to look at while in work, Grand National also started two. "Love Takes Flight," a George Hirliman production which Conrad Nagel is directing, features Astrid Allwyn, Edwin Maxwell, Gordon Elliott, Bruce Cabot, Beatrice Roberts and Grady Sutton. A Condor production, "King Of The Sierras," will present Rex, king of wild horses, Wally Albright, Frank Campeau, Ed Peel and Lester Hilton. Arthur Rosson is directing.

For RKO-Radio release, Hirliman Productions started "Windjammer." George O'Brien and Constance Worth are the leads, with William Hall, Brandon Evans, Gavin Gordon, Lal Chand Mehra, Lee Shumway, Stanley Blystone, Ben Hendricks, Frank Hagney and Jerry Frank in support. Ewing Scott is directing.

A-MIKE COVERS A-HOLLYWOOD PREVIEW

A-Mike Vogel, chairman of the Managers' Round Table Club, shepherding the winners of Quigley Grand Awards for 1936 through the allurements of Hollywood, wrote his editor:

"Last night I attended my first 'premeer' at the Carthay Circle on MGM's 'Courageous'. Never had a time like it. Imagine thousands of mooches in specially built grandstands waiting from early in the morning, and a police pass mailed with the tickets so that customers can get through the lines — orchestras, loud speakers, broadcasts, stars, directors and Louella Parsons — 10,000-watt colored lights . . . oh, nuts, Mister, there ain't no such place as Hollywood. Someone just dreamed it (and ask me the rest of the gag when I see you)."

Under Ralph Staub's direction, Republic began work on "Meet The Boy Friend." The cast includes David Carlyle, Carol Hughes, Pert Kelton, Warren Hymer, Andrew Tombes, Gwili Andre and Oscar and Elmer.

Warners' new activity is "The Perfect Specimen." Principal cast names are Errol Flynn, Miriam Hopkins, Dick Foran, Donald Meek, and Edward Everett Horton. Michael Curtiz is the director.

"Anything For A Thrill" was started by Maurice Conn. It will feature Frankie Darrow, Kane Richmond, June Johnson and Ann Evers. Les Goodwin is directing.

Eleven Are Finished

MGM, relieved both of its visiting conventioneers and the strike threat, went back to the business of making motion pictures with "General Hospital." Leading players assigned to the film, with more to come, are Franchot Tone, Maureen O'Sullivan, Janet Beecher, Virginia Bruce and G. Pat Collins. George B. Seitz directs.

The completed side of the schedule looks more than ordinarily interesting. Of the eleven productions finished, at least four appear to be in the big picture classification, with one, Paramount's "High, Wide And Handsome," promising to be one of the season's real surprises.

In addition to this film, Paramount also wound up two others. "Mountain Music" features Bob Burns and Martha Raye with John Howard, Terry Walker, George Hayes, Jan Duggan, Fuzzy Knight, Rufe Davis, Wally Vernon, Spencer Charters, Olin Howland, Arthur Hohl, William Burress, Rita LaRoy, Charlie Arnt and Charles Judels. Robert Florey directed. Leads in "Forlorn River" are Larry Crabbe, June Martel, Lucien Littlefield and John Patterson. Charles Barton directed the Zan Grey story. In "High Wide And Handsome," which everybody in the studio is wildly excited about, Irene Dunne, Randolph Scott, Dorothy Lamour, Raymond Walburn, Charles Bickford, Elizabeth Patterson, William Frawley, Akim Tamiroff, Ben Blue, Alan Hale, Irving Pichel, Lucien Littlefield, Helen Lowell, Tommy Bupp, Russell Hopton, Billy Bletcher, Stanley Andrews, Frank Sully, Jack Clifford, James Burke and Claire McDowell will be seen. Rouben Mamoulian directed.

Three pictures came off the line at Grand National. "Sweetheart of the Navy," a B. F. Zeidman production, will present Cecilia Parker, Eric Linden, Roger Imhof, Bernadene Hayes, Cully Richards and Henry Rocquemore. Duncan Mansfield directed. Alexander Productions completed "The Shadow." The cast, which Lynn Shores directed, includes Rod LaRoque, Lynn Anders, Norman Ainsley, Kenneth Harlan, Jack Carnwale, James Blakely, Walter McGrail, Cy Kendall and James Morton. The third film, "Riders of the Rockies," an Ed Finney production, features Tex Ritter with Louise Stanley, Charles King, Snub Pollard, Horace Murphy and Heeber Snow. R. N. Bradbury directed.

Warners completed two. In "Ever Since Eve," Marion Davies and Robert Montgomery are featured with Patsy Kelly, supported by Frank McHugh, Marcia Ralston, Allen Jenkins, Barton MacLane, Frederick Clark, William Davidson, John T. Murray, Pierre Watkins, Harry Hayden and Louise Fazenda. Lloyd Bacon directed. "That Certain Woman" will present Bette Davis, Henry Fonda, Ian Hunter, Donald Crisp, Anita Louise, Ben Welden, Hugh O'Connell, Mary Philips, Minor Watson, Norman Willis, Joyce Lull and Duane Day. Edmund Goulding directed.

"Once A Hero" finished at Columbia. Directed by Harry Lachman, it will present Richard Dix, Fay Wray, Charles Arnt, Billy Burrud, Victor Kilian, James Donlan, Franklyn Pangborn, Granville Bates, Zeni Victori and Don Rowan.

Hollywood Week

Actors win Guild Shop. Players celebrate. Producers breathe easier. Harried FMPC leaders charge "double-cross." . . . Sonja Henie's father dies. . . . Society of Motion Picture Engineers sets May 24-28 as dates for Spring Convention in Hollywood. . . . Harry M. Warner came to town to visit Doris LeRoy. . . . More than 1,000 actors join Guild following signing of new pact with producers. . . . Smith Ballew replaces Dick Arlen as star of Sol Lesser's westerns. . . . Frank Seltzer resigns as director of advertising and publicity for Warner theatres.

Producers Aiding Exhibitor Group In Radio Control

Almost all the large producer-distributors will assist the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in drawing up regulatory measures to prevent radio broadcasts from using Hollywood's motion picture stars or new picture material from competing unfairly with theatres, the exhibitor committee was advised Tuesday at its first meeting in New York with representatives of the film companies. The meeting was held at the Hotel Astor.

The Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on short wave radio communication in Hollywood this week also started a survey to determine the amount of radio transmitting and receiving equipment owned by the major studios and the extent of which radio is now used for communication between studios and locations. After completing this survey, during which information will also be assembled on the number of location trips to which companies have been sent by each studio during the past year, the committee will formulate plans for obtaining a maximum benefit from the use of radio communication.

The production and distribution companies in New York showed a concern over the possible injurious effects of radio broadcasts equal to that of the exhibitors, members of the M.P.T.O.A. committee said following their meeting. They agreed to cooperate with the committee in devising means of eliminating the competition about which exhibitors have complained and said that steps are being taken to bring the studios closer to distribution departments to receive and investigate complaints based on specific broadcasts.

The exhibitor committee, according to its statement, will, in turn, maintain contact with distribution departments to report exhibitor complaints to them.

Further efforts will be made by the committee in later meetings with producer-distributor representatives to work out a definite plan of control or supervision for Hollywood broadcasts, it was said. The committee may hold its next meeting in about one week. When a definite plan is devised it may be submitted, if necessary, to radio companies who may be asked to cooperate in applying it.

Those who attended the meeting were Walter Vincent, Samuel Pinanski and Lewen Pizor for the M.P.T.O.A.; Al Lichtman and Louis K. Sidney for Loew's; Hal Hode, Columbia; Harry Buckley, United Artists; Willard McKay, Universal; Earl Wingart, Twentieth Century-Fox, and Russell Holman and Henry Salsbury of Paramount.

The annual stockholders' meeting of United Artists was held in Hollywood Tuesday and only routine subjects were covered, Dr. A. H. Giannini, president, announced. Conditions in England were described at length by Murray Silverstone, managing director of the British company, and George J. Schaefer discussed in detail the status and progress in American sales.

Modern Lighting And Decorating

The methods of modern lighting which bring to the theatre operator more effective means of exploiting both theatre and show, and a medium of decoration peculiarly adapted to theatre interiors, are comprehensively described in special material to be published in the May 29th issue of Better Theatres. Among the features on theatre lighting scheduled for that number, which will appear with the next issue of Motion Picture Herald, are:

A pictorial insert, printed on heavy coated paper, containing especially prepared and selected photographs and diagrams demonstrating the new lighting methods.

An illustrated article by Francis M. Falge, specialist in theatre lighting on the staff of the Nela Park engineering department of the General Electric Company, who discusses the more recent developments in mechanical and electrical arrangements for lighting the various divisions of the theatre.

An article by J. T. Knight, Jr., on lighting provisions from the point of view of installation, operating and maintenance costs.

Also in the May 29th issue of Better Theatres, in addition to other features, news and regular departamental material, will appear the first article in a timely series of practical guidance in acoustical treatment as recommended today, written by C. C. Potwin, acoustics engineer with Electrical Research Products, Inc.

Warner Board Meeting

Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production, on Tuesday attended the regular board meeting of Warners in New York. It was the first meeting he has attended in several years because of his duties on the coast. Only routine matters were discussed. The company's financial statement is due "in a few days," it was announced following the meeting. It is expected to show a net profit of approximately $1,750,000 for the second quarter.

Film Group to Europe

A number of industry representatives sailed this week for Europe on the Normandie, including Martin and Mrs. Beck, Leon Leonidoff, Erik Charell, Hal B. Wallis, Henry Blanke, Mark Sandrich, Pierre Hurel and Mrs. Hurel.

Newark Permits "Elysia"

The Newark, N. J., police this week were restrained by Vice-Chancellor John O. Bigelow from interfering with the showing of the nudist picture, "Elysia" at the Little theatre.

Technicians Meet For Study of New Sound Standards

The major studios' sound department heads met in Hollywood Monday with representatives of the sound equipment companies under the sponsorship of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to discuss proposed new standards for sound track dimensions and the placement on the film.

With the increasing use of the push-pull method of recording and reproducing, the sound directors are utilizing the facilities of the Research Council to prepare standards in advance to which all new equipment may be manufactured, and to make certain that all recordings made on any type of push-pull equipment may be reproduced on all other equipments.

Members of the group who attended this conference included John Aalberg, head of the Radio sound department; E. H. Hansen, Twentieth Century-Fox; Nathan Levinson, Warner Brothers-First National; Franklin Hansen, Paramount; Thomas Moulton, United Artists; John Livadary, Columbia; Douglas Shearer, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and Homer G. Tasker, Universal. K. F. Morgan and J. G. Frayne of Electrical Research Products, Inc., were present as were Barton Kreuzer and Wallace Wolf of the RCA Manufacturing Company and Gordon S. Mitchell of the Research Council.

Three Seized in Theatre Bombings

Three men accused of tossing stench bombs in New York motion picture theatres several weeks ago were arrested Monday afternoon at Fort Wayne and Kokomo, Ind., according to an announcement of District Attorney William F. X. Geoghan of Brooklyn. "In the arrest of these men we have the brains behind the bombings of motion picture theatres not only in Greater New York but throughout the country," the district attorney said, in a statement to the press. The men are awaiting extradition from Indiana to New York, where they will be tried under Brooklyn indictments.

The prisoners are Charles O. Smith and Leo K. Smith, who were arrested at Fort Wayne, and Fred C. Blacker, who was seized in a raid on his Kokomo home where, the police said, they found a considerable store of chemicals, a supply of bottles similar to those with which the bombs tossed in New York were fashioned, and papers containing directions for manufacturing stench bombs.

The arrests, according to Mr. Geoghan, were the results of information obtained from Richard Crosbie, formerly of Fort Wayne, and Vernon Howe, who were sentenced to the city penitentiary on Welfare Island for indeterminate terms for tossing stench bombs in the Star Theatre in Brooklyn last November.

UNIVERSAL ANNOUNCES 50 FEATURES AND 170 SHORTS AT CONVENTION

Avoiding Sophisticated Themes in Favor of Freshness and Simplicity, Cochrane Tells Meeting in Los Angeles

A production schedule increased to 50 features for the 1937-38 season was announced to the Universal staff at the sales convention which opened on Monday at the Hotel Ambassador, Los Angeles. The list, labelled by R. H. Cochrane, president, "the most pretentious the company has ever attempted," was given to the delegates on Tuesday.

Mr. Cochrane, welcoming the sales force at the opening session, said:

"I cannot remember when our delivery has been anywhere near as good as our promise in both quality and quantity as it has been during the past year. You did a good selling job and the studio backed you up. With a good year behind you, you will have a still better year ahead of you."

Defining the position the company has attained since the shift in control a year ago, the president continued:

"The New Universal is really new in every way, new in its standing with the heads of other companies, new in its standing with critics and reviewers, new in its importance with the heads of other studios—and new in box office attraction to the movie fans. Our company name stands for more now than it ever stood for before in its whole existence."

Four Serials, 170 Shorts

The production schedule, in addition to the 50 features which include ten westerns, lists four serials and 170 short subjects. Of the shorts 13 will be two-reel musicals, 26 will be one-reel subjects, and 26 will be cartoon comedies. There will be one two-reel special and 104 issues of Universal Newsreel. In announcing the list Mr. Grainger emphasized the point that new stars, writers and directors will be featured.

Included among the features will be:

100 MEN AND A GIRL, with Deanna Durbin; to be produced by Joe Pasternak and directed by Henry Koster; featuring Leopold Stokowski, Adolphe Menjou, Mischa Auer and Alma Kruger.

MAD ABOUT MUSIC, also with Deanna Durbin.

THREE SMART GIRLS GO TO TOWN, with the original "Three Smart Girls," Deanna Durbin, Barbara Read and Nan Grey.

THE RAGE OF PARIS, with Universal's new French star, Danielle Darrieux.

A YOUNG MAN'S FANCY, a Buddy DeSylva musical by Jimmy McHugh and Harold Adamson, to star Alice Faye, Ken Murray and his stooge Oswald, Ella Logan, Larry Blake, Henry Stockwell, Casper Reardon and the Three Diamond Brothers.

MERRY-GO-ROUND OF 1937, another DeSylva production to be directed by Edward Buzzell and to star Bert Lahr, Jimmy Savo, Billy House, Mischa Auer, Alice Brady and Dave Apollon and his orchestra.

THE ROAD TO RENO, Saturday Evening Post serial by I. A. R. Wylie.

TONIGHT WE LIVE, a romance of New Orleans by Jean Negulesco.

THE DAUGHTER OF ROSIE O'GRADY, by Walter Donaldson and Monte Brice.

YESTERDAY'S KISSES, by Luigi Pirandello, Nobel prize winner.

PRESCRIPTION FOR ROMANCE, by John Reinhardt and Robert Neville.

MIDNIGHT RAIDERS, by Kimball Herrick.

CARNIVAL QUEEN, by Richard Wormser.

REPORTED MISSING, by Verne Whitehead.

THE LADY FIGHTS BACK, by Arthur Stringer.

THAT'S MY STORY, by Vee Terrys Perlman.

BEHIND THE MIKE, by Thomas Ahearn and Walter Butterfield.

THE WELCOME IMPOSTER, by Channing Pollack.

THE SHANNONS OF BROADWAY, by James Gleason.

DETECTIVE CRANE, a Crime Club novel published under the title "Headed for a Hearse," by Jonathan Latimer.

MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD, by William Rankin.

TOO CLEVER TO LIVE, by Charles Grayson and Cy Bartlett, starring Charles Winninger.

WANTED AT HEADQUARTERS, by Philip van Cize.

HELL ON ICE, with John Wayne.

METROPOLITAN POLICE, a Crime Club novel.

LET'S BE CANDID, a story by Lawrence Pohle and Thomas Ahearn, based on the candid camera craze.

ADVENTURE'S END, by Ben Ames Williams.

"In its forthcoming productions," Mr. Cochrane said, "Universal will emphasize the joy of youth, freshness, warmth, simplicity. For this reason it is avoiding sophisticated plays and novels and adopting the technique of screen movement that unfortunately went out of fashion when dialogue came into the picture. This is a technique which is well suited to the type of player that the studio has been so successful in developing this year. In addition to Deanna Durbin, Doris Nolan, Barbara Read, Nan Grey, Mischa Auer, Kent Taylor, Wendy Barrie, John King, Louis Hayward, Larry Blake, Dorothea Kent, Robert Wilcox, Walter Pidgeon and others, the studio is in negotiation with five very important personalities to play in its most important pictures. The New Universal has admittedly developed the finest young stock company in Hollywood."

Other stars under contract to Universal are:

Hope Hampton
Binnie Barnes
Jane Wyatt
Margaret Sullavan
Sally Eilers
Tala Birell
Alice Brady
Jean Rogers
Polly Rowles
Jeanne Dante
Judith Barrett
Alma Kruger
William Hall
Scat Powell
Ernest Cossart
Hobart Cavanaugh
Billy Burrud
Cesar Romero
Buck Jones
Noah Beery, Jr.
Andy Devine
Jack Dunn
Charles Winninger
William Gargan

Producers on the Universal roster include:

E. M. Asher
Lou Brock
Trem Carr
Buddy DeSylva
Edmund Grainger
Buck Jones
Walter Lantz
Joseph Pasternak
Robert Presnell
John Stahl

Directors are Ford Beebe, Edward Buzzell, Milton Carruth, Henry Koster, Sidney Salkow and James Whale.

Among the writers on the staff are:

Charles Bennett
Monte Brice
Lester Cole
Adele Comandini
Charles Grayson
F. Hugh Herbert
Brown Holmes
Maurice Geraghty
Wyndham Gittens
Felix Jackson
Charles Kenyon
Bruce Manning
James Mulhauser
A. Dorian Otvos
Gay Stevens
George Waggner
Norman Hall
Ray Trampe

The company will increase its quota of westerns to 10 and will add another western star, Tex Baker. Four serials will be made, three of them from well known newspaper strips. These are "Flash Gordon's Trip to Mars," "Radio Patrol," and "Tim Tyler's Luck." The lead off serial will be Johnny Mack Brown in "Wild West Days," based on W. R. Burnett's novel, "Saint Johnson."

Increasing Western Quota to Ten and Adding Another Star, Tex Baker; Stahl Signed for 2½ Years

Music, Travel and the Unusual

The shorts will include two-reel musical Mentones, the "Going Places" and "Stranger Than Fiction" series with Lowell Thomas and Alois Havrilla as commentators, and cartoons of "Oswald" and "The Lucky Rabbit." A two-reel special will be produced by Charles E. Ford, entitled "Ten Seconds to Live." Graham McNamee will continue to supply narration for the newsreel issues.

Speakers at the convention in addition to Mr. Cochrane and Mr. Grainger included J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board; Gustave Schaefer, newly appointed export manager, and Charles R. Rogers, vice-president in charge of production.

The home office delegation included F. J. A. McCarthy, eastern sales manager; E. T. Gomersall, western sales manager; Edward Bonns, short subject sales manager; P. D. Cochrane, head of advertising and publicity; W. B. Kraemer, Sidney Singerman, A. J. Sharick and Charles Kirby.

Stahl Signed

Opening his product talk on Tuesday Mr. Rogers told the delegates, "Last year we had nothing but promises to sell exhibitors. We had words without deeds, without anything much with which to impress exhibitors. This year we meet our customers with a record of having made good our promises of last year. This year's selling should be easier than ever before."

The production chief told the convention that John Stahl, who produced "Back Street," "Seed," "Only Yesterday," "Imitation of Life," and "Magnificent Obsession," had been signed to a two and a half year contract by the company.

A special train carrying the delegates arrived in Los Angeles Sunday night and was met by Mr. Rogers, James Normanly, vice president and general business manager; Val Paul, studio manager; Maurice Pivar, editorial supervisor, and Mr. Grainger.

Herc McIntyre, general manager for the company in Australia, had the distinction of having come the longest distance to attend the meeting. He arrived on the Monterey late Tuesday.

A special four reel edition of "The Road Back," latest Universal feature to be completed, was cut by Edmund Grainger to show at the convention to point up exploitation ideas on the picture.

Building in Chicago

One of the two theatres Warners plan to construct in Chicago will be located at 111th and Western, James A. Coston, zone manager, said in New York this week. It will seat 1,250. The other site for the second proposed house has not yet been selected. Work has been resumed on the Rhodes, which was halted last winter because of cold weather, and it is expected to be finished in September.

ALPERSON ANNOUNCES 65 FEATURES FOR GRAND NATIONAL IN 1937-38

34 Exchanges Operating in U. S. and Canada, Besides Foreign Offices, Peskay Tells First Anniversary Meeting

On the company's first anniversary this week Grand National branch managers and sales forces, gathered for their convention at the Hotel Ambassador, Los Angeles, were told that a total of 65 pictures will be produced for the 1937-38 season.

Edward L. Alperson, president, announced at the meeting that there will be 12 "special" productions on the forthcoming schedule, 12 "Class A" features, 24 series films to be developed around radio, book and cartoon characters, and 14 westerns, eight starring Tex Ritter and six Ken Maynard vehicles.

In summing up the progress made by the company during its first year as a distributing-producing organization, Edward Peskay, vice-president in charge of distribution, said that 34 film exchanges are operating in the United States and Canada in addition to offices in important centers throughout the world. He reported that Jacg Barnstyn, foreign sales manager, is now abroad establishing agencies in Brussels, Rome, The Hague and Cairo. Exchanges are operating in Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires, San Domingo and the Philippine Islands, he said, and others will be opened in Tokyo and Shanghai.

During the convention which opened on Sunday and concluded Wednesday the 50 district managers and resident exchange executives and the 10 home office representatives visited the new Grand National lot, the former Educational Studios on Santa Monica Boulevard, which are being extensively remodeled. Two new sound stages are being added to the five now in operation and new office bungalows are being erected.

The season program will include:

Mr. Shadow, the first release of the season and the first on the magazine-radio character.

Dynamite, first of two James Cagney films.

Gorgeous, to star Anna Sten and to be directed by Victor Schertzinger.

Face the Facts, an Andrew L. Stone musical, which will include selections from Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus." Stuart Erwin will star. The script is being prepared by Betty Laidlaw and Robert Lively from a Clarence Budington Kelland story.

Painter in the Sky, prepared by Betty Laidlaw and Robert Lively as "Grand Canyon" from an original story by Allen Vaughn Elston. To be filmed in color by Richard A. Rowland.

The Stars and Stripes series will star Tim Ryan and Buck Jackson and will include:

In the Marines
In the Army
In the Navy
In the Air Corps

The Flash Casey series, based on a short story character, will comprise four pictures:

Flash Casey, Candid Cameraman
Flash Casey at the Third Alarm
Flash Casey Covers A Murder

The Shadow group, the first of which will mark the first release of the new season, will include in addition to "Mr. Shadow":

The Shadow's Disguise
The Shadow in Panama
The Shadow in Society

Bud Barsky, formerly with Warner Brothers has been signed to produce the Wallaby Jim series which will star George Houston. Titles are:

Wallaby Jim in the South Seas
Wallaby Jim of the Islands
Wallaby Jim Below the Equator
Wallaby Jim in Trouble

Al Herman will produce four action pictures based on the Laurie York Erskine radio character Renfrew of the Mounted. The three for next season are:

Renfrew in the North Country
Renfrew Gets His Man
Renfrew Rides Alone

The Federal Agent series which started this year with Conrad Nagel in the starring role will be continued next season with:

Photo-Finish
Government Agent
Wire Tappers
Stacked Chips

Tex Ritter will continue as the star of eight singing westerns. Titles so far are:

Tex and the Boy Scouts
Rollin' Plains
The Utah Trail
Arizona Ranger
Law of the Black Hills
Buffalo Country
Mustang Roundup

The Ken Maynard westerns will include:

Murder at the Rancho
Thirteen and Lucky
Phantom Cowboy
Montana Mutiny
Whirlwind Horseman
Trailing Trouble
Boots of Destiny
Yankee Rider

Producers associated with the company include Victor Schertzinger, Zion Myers, B. F. Zeidman, George A. Hirliman, M. H. Hoffman, Andrew L. Stone, Richard A. Rowland, Edward Finney, Max Alexander, Eugene Frenke, Bud Barsky, Al Herman.

Players under contract to Grand National are James Cagney, Stuart Erwin, Anna Sten, Conrad Nagel, Rod LaRocque, George Houston, Eric Linden, Eleanor Hunt, Tex Ritter and Joyce Compton.

Officers at the convention in addition to Mr. Alperson and Mr. Peskay were Sol Edwards, eastern sales manager; James Winn, western sales manager; Edward Finney, publicity and advertising director, and Morris Epstein, New York exchange head. Others were: Ann Rosenthal, legal head; W. J. Neary, comptroller; Stanley Hatch; Alfred Crown, Latin-American representative; Edward Ugast, assistant to Jack Barnstyn, foreign manager who is in Europe, and Harry J. Allen, Canadian Supervisor.

First Business Session Monday

The sessions opened with a luncheon on Sunday at which Mr. Peskay outlined the program of events. The delegates toured Hollywood and the surrounding beach resorts in the afternoon and in the evening they saw screenings of "The Girl Said No," an Andrew L. Stone production featuring Robert Armstrong and Irene Hervey, and "Sing, Cowboy, Sing," an Edward Finney production with Tex Ritter.

The first business session met Monday morning and others continued during the day. A formal dinner in the evening was followed by a screening of "Small Town Boy," the first Stuart Erwin starring picture which Zion Meyers produced. The product announcement was made at the Tuesday sessions and that evening the studio staff was host at a banquet on Stage 3.

Winners of the sales drive which ended May 6th were announced at the convention.

35% Equipment Sales Increase Reported by RCA

Motion picture equipment manufacturers report a wholesale equipment buying move in which virtually all types of theatres are participating, for the most part replacing old machinery with new.

A 35 percent increase in the number of sound equipments installed in theatres during the first four months of 1937, with over 300 back orders awaiting shipment, was announced by Edwin M. Hartley, RCA Photophone sales head, at a three-day sales convention in Indianapolis, ending last Saturday.

"The unprecedented number of theatres replacing old sound equipment, most of which dates back to the earliest days of sound, is positive indication that forward looking theatre owners, from the biggest circuit operators to the smallest independent, are taking advantage of favorable box-office conditions to install new equipment," said Mr. Hartley.

A virtual revolution has taken place in the major Hollywood studios within recent months, he said, in the speed with which they have adopted advances in recording technique to achieve a new high in sound. He cited Columbia Pictures, RKO, Republic, Twentieth Century-Fox and Warner Brothers as among companies which have installed the new RCA ultra-violet recording channels.

He attributed the new reproducer business to a realization on the part of exhibitors of the necessity for keeping abreast of Hollywood's advancements in sound.

Photophone's foreign business has also been making gains, particularly in the British Empire and in South and Central America where the key theatres also are replacing their old apparatus with new equipment, said Mr. Hartley.

A visit to RCA Photophone's new Indianapolis plant, said to be the largest in the world devoted exclusively to the making of sound equipment, an outline of the company's advertising and sales promotion plans for the year, and technical discussions of mechanical features in the new RCA soundhead occupied the attention of the delegates to the convention.

The Photophone executives inspected the machinery, tools and manufacturing facilities for sound equipment which occupies over 165,000 square feet of air-conditioned space. Later Max Batsel and Carl Reifsteck, of Photophone's engineering executive staff, discussed the "High Fidelity" soundhead.

Dave J. Finn, photophone advertising manager, outlined the company's advertising and promotion program for the year. He said the "Magic Voice of the Screen" slogan which had been adopted some months ago would continue to be the copy theme.

DIVORCE BILLS, FILM BUYING AND UNIONIZATION UP AT ALLIED MEET

Independent Exhibitors Will Convene in Milwaukee Wednesday for Three-Day Convention on Operation Problems

Bills for Federal Inquiry and Against Block Booking To Be Considered by This Congress, Says Myers

Independent theatre owners belonging to or cooperating with the Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors start this weekend for Milwaukee and the Hotel Pfister, to attend the national organization's annual convention, opening Wednesday morning and continuing through Friday.

The progress to date on Allied's campaign for legislation to force divorcement of production-distribution from circuit operation, and new strategies to be employed therein, will be the principal matter of business, followed in importance by analyses of the exhibitor's position in the present nationwide theatre unionization and his position in relation to exhibitor colleagues in product dealings with exchanges.

Nathan Yamins, Allied's national president, will sound the call to "all independent exhibitors to sit down and strike for Independence."

Abram F. Myers, general counsel and chairman of the board, will present "Allied's Case on the Law and Facts," and W. A. (Al) Steffes, as general chairman of the fight for state "divorce bill" enactment, will report for that committee.

"A year has elapsed—and the battle still rages," said Mr. Myers on the eve of the convention, in describing Allied's divorce bill campaign, aimed at "distributor-circuit aggressions."

Status of "Divorce" Bills

Mr. Myers is prepared to tell the delegates that the divorcement bill has been passed in North Dakota; it was passed by the House in Indiana and missed out in the Senate by an early adjournment; and, it mustered a clear majority in the Senate in Minnesota but not quite the two-thirds necessary to place it on the calendar.

"At this writing it is under active consideration by legislative committees in Ohio and Wisconsin," Mr. Myers continued in a pre-convention statement, which, in describing other Allied legislative interests, reported: "The Neely-Pettingill (anti-block booking and blind buying) Bill and the Hobbs Resolution (for a federal investigation of the film business) have been delayed because of the preoccupation of their sponsors with the bill to reorganize the Supreme Court. But the session of Congress is scheduled to last until late summer or early fall and it is a certainty that they will be reached for consideration.

"The Special Defense Committee (in charge of the divorcement bill legislation) has rendered material aid in the Frels (Texas anti-trust) case (against major distributors), which involves points of law of importance to all exhibitors and which is slated to go to trial just as the Milwaukee convention opens."

"There are rumblings in the Department of Justice," he warned, "and it is possible that 'The Sleeping Giant' may wake to strike a blow for the sorely-pressed exhibitors.

"The divorcement bill will be re-introduced on the first day of the next session of the Minnesota legislature and we confidently expect it to pass by a very comfortable majority."

Mr. Myers said that "It is unthinkable" for the "independent exhibitors (Allied) to abandon their aggressive tactics and revert to resolutions to the 'Big Eight',"

ALLIED PLANS NEW STRATEGY

Referring apparently to decisions upholding state "chain store" taxes and the inclusion of theatre circuits in their application, Allied States' Washington headquarters made the following announcement on Wednesday:

"As a result of recent decisions of the courts Allied leaders are preparing to present to the exhibitors at the Milwaukee convention on May 26-28 a revised and enlarged program for combating chain competition which it is believed will be even more effective than the divorcement law which is now being sponsored.

"This does not mean that it is proposed to abandon the divorcement law in States where it has been passed or is still under consideration or in territories where due to local conditions it might be preferred to the new measures now being devised.

"The new measures will have these advantages: Their validity will be beyond question and their operation can not be delayed by protracted litigation; they will produce revenue for the States and hence will appeal to legislatures now seeking new forms of taxation; they can be made to include certain so-called independent chains now committing depredations comparable with those of the affiliated chains.

"A record breaking convention now seems assured and it is expected that the new strategy, while marking no departure from Allied policy, will prove a sensation."

The Allied membership again will be urged to "become a crusader in their communities, in their Congressional Districts, in their States, and in their regional associations" to uphold Allied's declaration of principles and policies.

Meanwhile, and subsequent to Mr. Myers' report on Allied's divorce bill campaign, the lower house in the Wisconsin legislature passed an Allied-sponsored measure, after it had been rewritten to make its effective date two years following enactment. Originally, and in the form in which it was enacted in North Dakota, the effective date is one year after enactment. The Wisconsin lower house vote on the measure was ten to one. The Senate votes May 27th.

Four producer-distributor circuits would be affected in the state. They are National Theatres-Fox Midwest, controlled by Twentieth Century-Fox; Paramount, Warners and RKO, operating about 75 properties, divided, approximately, as follows: Fox-Midwest, 47; Warner Brothers, 25; Paramount, two, and RKO, one.

There was strong opposition in the Wisconsin house against the measure, and for a time it appeared to have been delayed, especially after the Assembly Committee on Commerce and Manufacturers voted indefinite postponement. Appearing in opposition were B. J. Miller, representing the Warner and Fox circuits, while Mrs. J. E. Hansen, of the Wisconsin Council of Parent-Teachers Association; Herbert Mount and Ray Tesch, of Milwaukee, spoke for passage, Mr. Mount and Mr. Tesch representing the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin.

On Saturday, Schaeffer O'Neill, Representative from Alton, introduced an Allied-sponsored divorcement bill in the Illinois legislature, and the measure was immediately referred to the Committee on License and Miscellany.

Producers having theatres in Illinois are Paramount (Balaban and Katz); Warner Brothers, RKO and National Theatres (Twentieth Century-Fox), with the Paramount-B. and K. interests controlling scores of properties.

The Ohio legislature this week adjourned sine die without acting on the Allied divorce bill.

Worried Over Unionization

In order that the administration can be in a position to submit "a reliable report" at the Milwaukee convention, Pete J. Wood, general convention chairman, from Columbus, Ohio, is rushing through a nationwide analysis of the unionization movement in exhibition.

In this connection, President Yamins issued a call to owners to gather at Milwaukee "to deliberate and consider the part that the independent exhibitor is to play in the social and economic revolution that we are undergoing."

Mr. Yamins warned that "every exhibitor will soon be confronted with serious problems that are a national outgrowth of the Wagner Act," which recently was declared valid by the Supreme Court and permits collective bargaining such as that over which the American Federation of Labor and Committee for Industrial Organization now are at odds. Mr. Yamins conceded that "no intelligent person would be opposed to organized labor, but as business men let us meet organization with organization."

"Tougher Rentals and Terms"

The convention will hear the full report on Allied's present buying survey among independent exhibitors, disclosing the buying habits of exhibitors throughout the country.

Mr. Myers said before leaving his Washington headquarters for Milwaukee, "The early returns on the sales questionnaires indicate that rentals and terms (made by exchanges) are tougher this year (1937-38) than ever.

"The power to overcome these threatening dangers still resides in the independent exhibitors."

Preliminary tabulation of 375 questionnaire forms covering more than 400 theatres in 29 exchange centers were said by Allied to bear out its prediction that "exhibitors will go slow with their buying this year and await reports to and action taken at the convention."

Allied claim that the buying survey will show whether block booking is more prevalent in one territory than in another: whether "the other fellow" has to take all the short subjects of a distributor; whether one exhibitor is being "soaked" with more percentage pictures than the exhibitors in other territories; whether a national policy exists on designated playdates; and whether film rental contract terms are "tougher" where there is no effective exhibitor organization than where there is.

All Independents Invited

Convention Chairman Wood, acting officially, has extended an invitation to all independent owners, regardless of organization affiliation, to attend the convention.

"Preliminary reports from Allied leaders through the country give assurance that the convention will be a success," according to a statement issued from Washington headquarters on Tuesday. "Exhibitors already have pledged themselves to attend in numbers surpassing the registrations of the Atlanta (1935) and Cleveland (1936) conventions," it was said.

Minimum delegates said to be promised from surrounding territories include: Wisconsin, 100; Illinois, 50; Minnesota, 25; Indiana, 20; and Michigan, 20, for a total of 215. In addition, Maryland and the District of Columbia were reported by Allied to have authorized substantial delegations, and preparations are being made in New Jersey for a private car to transport Allied members from that state.

The following are scheduled to attend the Allied national board meeting on the day preceding the convention opening, as duly authorized directors: Abram F. Myers, chairman; Nathan Yamins, J. B. Fishman, H. A. Blum, Lee W. Newberry, C. H. Olive, Fred J. Herrington, P. J. Wood, Fred De Lodder, R. R. Bair, Aaron Saperstein, E. F. Maertz, E. L. Peaslee, Frank Wetzstein, John Griffin, H. A. Cole, Henry Lazarus and N. H. Waters. Each director will bring with him to the convention a limited number of exhibitor consultants and observers.

"A sufficient number of 'old-timers' have indicated their intention to attend," Allied reported. "These veterans will be honored for their contributions to the industry and their efforts in behalf of the independent exhibitors."

Erpi Starts Construction Of New Hollywood Plant

Electrical Research Products, Inc., has started active construction on its new Hollywood plant, located at Seward and Romaine streets, adjacent to General Service Studios, Inc. The new plant consists of three two-story buildings to house general offices, warehouses, garage, review room and laboratory.

Costing in excess of $250,000, the construction will conform with the latest approved architectural practices and will be under the direct supervision of Marshall P. Wilkinson, architect.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

We noted with quite some satisfaction the newspaper accounts of Louis Mayer's presentation in Hollywood of a gold watch to Lionel Barrymore on the occasion of Mr. Barrymore's 59th birthday, his 54th anniversary as an actor and his 27th anniversary in motion pictures.

David Wark Griffith is responsible for Mr. Barrymore's motion picture anniversary. He had met the personable young Lionel Barrymore one day at luncheon in New York, to where Lionel had just returned from a sojourn in Paris, where he had for a season been studying painting. Now he was ready to work, and Griffith hired him on the spot.

So, in 1910, Barrymore and Mary Pickford appeared in "The New York Hat," the first scenario ever written by Anita Loos. Miss Loos got $15 for the script from Biograph. It was the day when the relation of the printed word in screen titles to the ensuing action was yet undeveloped and the titling was crude in the extreme.

Terry Ramsaye, in his "A Million and One Night," tells how in many producing establishments of those days, big rolls of stock titles which could be used in most any drama were kept on hand, ready printed. The stock list included all such vital expressions as, "The next day," "Ten years elapse," "Happy ever afterward," "Forgiven," "Wedding bells" and "One hour later." The titles were hauled down by the yard and inserted where needed. One of the expert title haulers-down of the day was Jack Cohn, now big man at Columbia, but in 1910 only a little title-inserter for the old Imp company.

A hotel guest in Joplin, Mo., the other morning was singing in his bathtub. In a pause for taking breath he heard another hotel guest down the hall take up the song instantly and continue it. Realizing he was definitely outclassed the first fellow allowed the second fellow to continue the song, and later on checked up with the room clerk as to his identity.

"That was Nelson Eddy," said the hotel employe.

The same Nelson Eddy who gets $3,000 for a single concert, $5,000 for one air broadcast, and trillions from Metro for a picture.

And then there's Lawrence Tibbett, a colleague of Nelson Eddy's in song, who is nearly as popular as Mr. Eddy in the concert field, but not as fortunate in motion pictures.

Characterizing himself as "the voice on the cutting room floor," Mr. Tibbett told a Seattle concert audience the other evening that he prefers the concert stage to films.

Introducing "The Hallelujah Rhythm" as his next song number on his Seattle program, Tibbett said: "I especially enjoy singing this number." The reason, he "confided" to the audience of 3,000, was that he sang it for Twentieth Century-Fox and their "Under Your Spell" feature film, but Mr. Zanuck's company relegated the sequence to the cutting room floor.

Mr. Tibbett admitted that he's been on the floor before, but never the cutting room floor.

And then there's the stenographer in Sidney Rechetnik's office who doesn't understand why they should be passing all of those minimum wage laws. She thinks her salary is low enough already.

William A. Bornie, staff writer, was sent out to Broadway the other day by his city editor on the New York World Telegram, to get a line on the summer show circuit that plays the vacation camps and hotels in New York's Catskill Mountains. Mr. Bornie discovered that the performers play for anything from $100 a week, tops, down to free room, board and a carton of cigarettes. But the booking agents really suffer the most, particularly around this time of May when the resort owners come around to shop for talent, expecting to get Lawrence Tibbett, Gypsy Rose Lee and Paul Whiteman's orchestra all for $8 a month and room and board.

Mr. Bornie found Eddie Ross, Broadway booker, particularly distressed. Seems a resort owner offered to pay a social director (master-of-ceremonies) $250 for the ten-week season—that's $25 a week. The social director wanted $300, so Mr. Ross suggested a compromise at $275. The owner could not see it, and Mr. Ross shouted in desperation:

"Listen, if you won't tell nobody, I'll throw in Eddie Cantor for five bucks extra."

"Okay," said the owner, "and I'll pay the five bucks out of my own pocket."

To Crosby Gaige, producer of many a Broadway stage play made into a motion picture, goes the distinction of the first official tasting of the Public Works Administration's new Virgin Island rum. Mr. Gaige, in his capacity as chairman of the technical committee of the Wine and Food Society, concluded, after 20 minutes of judicious tasting, that "It is a pleasant little concoction, but certainly not the most distinguished rum I ever tasted."

The rum is called Government House and it went on sale the other day at many New York retail stores at $1.96 a bottle. It is made by the Virgin Islands Company, governmentally endowed, whose board of directors is headed by Harold L. Ickes. That makes Mr. Ickes Secretary of the Interior on two counts.

For one thing, Mr. Gaige advises, the PWA rum is definitely not hangover-less.

Jack Connolly, general manager of Pathe News, has joined the Westchesterites who are fighting to force the New York Central Railroad to put escalators in Grand Central Terminal so they won't have to walk the 57 steps which commuters must climb between the station's low level where the suburban trains come in and the street level.

Friends of Simone Simon at Twentieth Century-Fox ganged up on the gal on her birthday the other morning and sent congratulatory telegrams signed fictitiously with the names of President Roosevelt, Lindbergh, Mussolini, etc. The one that drew the most attention, however, was the telegram addressed: "Simone Simone Simone Simone Simone," and signed Papa Dionne.

Words that were not spoken by the Hollywood producers' strike committee to the union workers of the striking Federated Motion Picture Crafts:

> "As employers, we offer you boys a hearty handclasp and a friendly slap on the back, but we cannot take seriously your demand for higher wages and shorter hours."

When the Rockefellers and RCA, and Roxy and RKO were drawing plans for the Music Hall Theatre in Rockefeller Center, they looked around for someone who could give them an ideal lighting system. The process of elimination brought them to Eugene Braun, a Hungarian with a reputation on Broadway and its theatrical side streets. Mr. Braun put in everything he could think of, then invested a few more gadgets for original effects. The budget for the job came to $1,250,000—a bill for lighting installation that would build 25 modern $50,000 theatres, complete, in any fair sized community. But the Rockefellers let him have the works, gave him everything he wanted.

Today Mr. Braun is the head lighting man at the Music Hall, bowing continuously to the plaudits of the Music Hall's public, as he sits pompously, out of sight, at the lighting control console, where no less than 4,305 varied-colored handles operate the switching and intensity of the amber, red, green and blue lights, also the 180 2,000-watt spotlights, and the 40 $3,000-each generators, the lighting in the place producing any one of 42 different colors, with the aid of 20,000 color slides. It costs the Music Hall $9,000 every month for lighting effects alone.

Sidney Skolsky, in Hollywood, tells the story of when Samuel Goldwyn and Harpo Marx were playing golf, they both drove the balls into the "rough." Goldwyn stooped over and cleared away a number of pebbles, and teed off. Then Marx got ready for his shot. He bent over and tossed away some pebbles, and Goldwyn shouted: "You can't do that."

"But you did it," said Harpo.

"Yes, I did," answered Goldwyn, "but didn't you hear my caddie say it was wrong."

THE CUTTING ROOM

The Emperor's Candlesticks

(MGM)

Drama

Exhibitors and the public have a right to expect that when a company announces an important picture, it will include three primary essentials—good names, a good interesting story and worthy production embellishment. In this particular instance there doesn't seem to be much doubt that MGM is striving earnestly to accommodate that exhibitor and public desire.

The stars of the production are William Powell and Luise Rainer. Together in "The Great Ziegfield," Powell has subsequently been seen in "Libelled Lady" and "After the Thin Man." If Miss Rainer needed any further establishing, "The Good Earth" did it for her. Though this pair are "the people" in the picture, the supporting cast is not unworthy of the importance of Mr. Powell and Miss Rainer. Such players as Maureen O'Sullivan, Robert Young, Frank Morgan, Henry Stephenson, Donald Kirke, Douglas Dumbrille, Frank Reicher, E. E. Clive, Barnett Parker and Frank Conroy, who constitute the featured support, cannot be considered lightly.

For story, the theme concerns two persons, undercover agents for warring countries, thrown into violent contact with each other. Powell is bearing a secret message, the safe delivery of which is calculated to save the life of one of his country's patriots. Miss Rainer is carrying a message, the successful delivery of which will mean Powell's death. They meet and fall in love and in the climax the woman saves the life of the man whose death she had been ordered to effect.

For production detail, action of the picture takes place against the wild and semi-barbarous backgrounds of Russia and in the atmosphere of Imperial Russian court intrigue.

MGM has assigned George Fitzmaurice, maker of many box office successes, whose most recent pictures were "Petticoat Fever" and "Suzy," as the director.

Armored Car

(Universal)

Melodrama

Once upon a time, piratical sea rovers found it pleasant and profitable to raid the treasure laden galleons making their way from the new world of America to the old world of Europe. Today, the modern counterparts of the merciless buccaneers, the 1937 gangsters, have taken to raiding the steel clad, scientifically protected armored bank cars which transport huge sums of money from one community to another. As the pirates of centuries ago raided and were wiped out, today's pirates raid, for a time are successful, but, like their predecessors, they, too, in this story are wiped out.

A modern story of a modern pirate, this is also the story of a modern detective. At Universal the prevailing opinion is that in "Armored Car" exhibitors will really have a showman's show and the public will have an audience show.

The story being used is taken from an original by William A. Pierce, who recently contributed "Night Key" to the company's release program. Blending fact and fiction, it has been whipped into screen play form by Lewis R. Foster, who is also directing, and Robert N. Lee.

As the young employee-detective who frustrates the piracies of an up-to-date raider, Robert Wilcox, currently in "The Man In Blue," will be seen. The man with whom he comes to grips in a thrill packed climax is Irving Pichel. Responsible for the necessary, but not interfering, love interest is Judith Barrett. While the supporting cast is quite lengthy, with various character and atmospheric players included, the principal supports are Cesar Romero, Inez Courtney, Tom Kennedy, David Oliver and William Lundigan.

Take the Heir

(RKO Radio)

Comedy-Drama

The story told in this production deals with the experiences which befall a middle aged veterinary who inherited a vast fortune from a mysterious uncle. Without suspecting it, at first, he also inherits a mob of crooks and racketeers over whom his mysterious benefactor ruled. Between the crooks' plans to make the unsuspecting heir the fall guy for their dastardly schemes, the social aspirations of his wife and the turmoil of supervising a romance between his daughter and a newspaper reporter, it is estimated that the story will emerge as fast moving screen entertainment packed with exciting action and bubbling over with hilarious comedy.

The yarn is an original by Lawrence Pohle and Thomas Ahearn, who collaborated on "Let's Make a Million." The screen play is by Arthur T. Horman, associated with "You Can't Buy Luck" and "Thunder In The Night," and Bert Granet, who collaborated on "Missus America," "Legion Of Terror" and "The Gentleman from Louisiana." Direction was assigned to Edward Killy, recently credited with "China Passage," "Second Wife" and "Wanted, Jane Turner." Maury Cohen, whose first picture for RKO-Radio was "You Can't Buy Luck," is the producer.

Guy Kibbee and Cora Witherspoon are teamed as the veterinary and his wife. Dorothy Moore, a newcomer, is their daughter, who shares the romantic interest with Gordon Jones. Supporting players listed are Russell Hicks, Frank M. Thomas, Paul Guilfoyle, Donald Kerr, Eddie Gribbon, Dudley Clements, Tom Kennedy, Al Hill, George Irving, Barbara Pepper, Maxine Jennings and John Kelly.

Last Train for Madrid

(Paramount)

Drama

This production is Hollywood's first effort at a story that has the Spanish Revolution for a background. It is not a propaganda story; it does not take sides. Rather it depicts the adventures and experiences, romances and dramas, of about a dozen persons, all of whom are directly affected by the Revolution, during a wild twenty-four hours in the beleaguered city of Madrid as they connive, conspire and plot to get abroad the last train.

Included in the story, the essence of which is drama, are a young army captain and his girl, whom he is trying to get to safety; a pair of convicts released under orders to join the army; an American newspaper correspondent; a young woman soldier; a woman of the streets; a deserter who fears the firing squad, and dozens of others whose only wish is to reach safety before the fury of revolt reaches Madrid. Out of this maze of varied personalities comes a story of love and patriotism, courage and fear, hope and despair. Some of the characters reach the train and others fail as the story builds to a surging climax.

Based on an original idea by Paul Hervey Fox, the screen play is by Louis Stevens and Robert Wyler, and James Hogan is directing. Music content, which plays an important part in amplifying the dramatic content of the theme, is being arranged by Borris Morros.

As the screen characters are interesting, so also are the players who are assigned to the several roles. Though the cast provides no great stars, it features among its better known players quite a few youngsters to whom Paramount is giving every opportunity to become the stars of tomorrow. Most important of these new artists Dorothy Lamour, Olympe Bradna, Lee Bowman, Robert Cummings and Anthony Quinn. To give these young players support and confidence, more experienced actors in the production are Lew Ayres, Gilbert Roland, Karen Morley, Lionel Atwill, Helen Mack, Francis Ford, Stanley Fields, Francis McDonald, Evelyn Brent and Otto Hoffman.

Super Sleuth

(RKO Radio)

Comedy

At this stage of its shooting career, "Super Sleuth" is giving evidence of becoming a funny and frisky comedy melodrama. It is being made up of materials into which a lot of hokum is being stirred which, when used in other ways before, have proved to be good mass audience stuff. The yarn, an original by Harry Segall, concerns a conceited screen detective who has a penchant for talking too much. Ridiculing a baffled police department, he also arouses the vengeance of a killer. His mouthings proving very disconcerting to his studio executives, particularly the girl publicity director, he gets into a jam, out of which he escapes by an accident which permits him to make good on his bragging.

A clue to the comedy motif which the production pursues is noted in the fact that Jack Oakie is the sleuth. Mr. Oakie's previous screen appearances do not reveal that he ever has been associated with anything that even bordered on seriousness. As he will not be in this case, the comedy angle seems to be the most important, other than names, to which exhibitors will look for material to arouse patron attention.

To take care of the romance that must go with the comedy, Ann Sothern has been assigned to the part of the publicity director and the one whose personal and official duty it is to keep Oakie from being killed. The menace of the story is in the capable hands of Eduardo Ciannelli, seen in "Winterset" and "Marked

Admission taxes in Belgium have been considerably decreased since January 1, 1937. The new percentage scale is as follows:

Admission up to four francs, now assessed a tax of four per cent instead of 5.4 per cent; above four francs, six per cent tax as compared to the former levy of 8.1 per cent; above five francs, the charge is 10 per cent as compared to 14.5 per cent and above 12 francs the fee totals 15 per cent as compared to 23.25 per cent under the old scale.

The difficulties that threatened to arise between the municipality of Haarlem, one of the more important Dutch towns, and the Dutch Motion Picture Federation was settled recently when the admission taxes in Haarlem were not raised above 20 per cent.

All attendance records for Amsterdam were broken by the run of Ludwig Berger's "Pygmalion" when it ended its seventh week at the Amsterdam City theatre recently. "Mazurka" held the former record with a run of four weeks. "Pygmalion" has been equally successful in other Dutch towns.

Russia Announces Plans For Theatre Festival

Plans for the fifth annual Soviet Theatre Festival to be held in Moscow from September 1 to September 10 were announced in New York this week by Intourist, the official Soviet travel bureau. The list of performances comprises the outstanding productions of the Soviet theatre. The Moscow Art Theatre plans to stage three plays, chief of which will be Pushkin's "Boris Godunov." Tolstoi's "Anna Karenina," adopted for the stage by N. Yolkov, is also on the schedule, as is "Lubov Yarovaya," by Trenev, a portrayal of events during the civil war in the southern part of the U.S.S.R.

Subsequent to the festival in Moscow, there will be a series of performances in Leningrad, Kharkov, Kiev and Rostov-on-Don.

Amusement Grosses in Stockholm Show Gain

All amusements in Stockholm, Sweden, had an aggregate gross in 1936 of approximately 16,000,000 Swedish crowns, which compares with about 14,000,000 crowns in 1935. The total of amusement tax collections last year was 2,348,000 crowns. Motion picture theatres accounted for the greatest part of the total, 10,319,000 admissions having been sold during the year.

I Cover the War

(Universal)

Martial Melodrama

Once again production takes to the desert and romance against the melodrama of desert warfare and intrigue for screen material. The setting and theme having proved popular in the past, Universal is confident that this forthcoming feature will maintain the amusement and commercial appeal.

This time it's newsreel men who go adventuring to cover a war between nomadic Arab tribes and a British outpost. While not entirely novel, the departure promises to be interesting, inasmuch as not only is it expected that the picture will preserve the desired thrill action quality but further, that it will permit the introduction of a human interest romance. One new production note will be struck. When the newsreel men are unable to speak the message that will save the British garrison, the sound track that they have made during their imprisonment is developed to furnish the information that frustrates the diabolical plot of the Arab enemy.

Based on an original story for which George Waggner did the screen play, and which Arthur Lubin is directing, the picture is being shot entirely in the out-of-doors on several California deserts that are exact duplicates of the locales called for in the script.

Hero of the story is John Wayne, last in "California Straight Ahead." A newcomer, Gwen Gaze, has the responsibility of the romantic contrast. Other principals are Don Barclay, Sam Harris, Charles Brokaw, James Bush, Jack Mack and Franklyn Parker. Character and atmospheric players include Earl Hodgins, Frank Lackteen, Olaf Hytten, Keith Kenneth and Abdulla.

Easy Going

(RKO Radio)

Comedy

Some managers find that merely by putting the names Robert Woolsey and Bert Wheeler in the marquee they assure themselves of full houses. Others have expressed a contrary opinion. Whatever the individual case may be, the record proves that Wheeler and Woolsey must make money. Teams don't stay together for nineteen films just because producers may happen to like the members personally. Hollywood has lots of ways to toss money away, but keeping persons together who don't show a profit is not one of them.

"Easy Going" is a typical, double dyed-in-the-wool Wheeler and Woolsey comedy. There's a script for it. Nat Perrin, who participated in such bits of nonsense as "Pigskin Parade," "Kid Millions," "Roman Scandals" and "Duck Soup," wrote it. Music and lyrics were provided by Dave Dreyer and Herman Ruby. Edward Cline, who made "The Preview Murder Mystery" and "Rosebowl" and who was with Wheeler and Woolsey on "So This is Africa," is the director. However, as the two comedians are not noted for being bashful when it comes to improvizing and interpolating gags and situations, it may be anticipated that many things not originally planned will be included. The idea has them as a pair of business battlers who can't get along with each other. The outcome of a wrestling match bet causes one to direct the business and the other to serve as his valet. It may be possible to anticipate the monkey business contingent upon the set-up.

The funsters will dominate the show, but will be aided and abetted in their antics by Esther Muir, the newcomer, Marjorie Lord, Russell Hicks, Paul Harvey, Patricia (Honey Chile) Wilder, Kitty McHugh, George Meeker, Edgar Dearing, Maxine Jennings, Alan Bruce and Ann Hovey.

GOLDWYN GLORIFIES, TECHNICOLOR GOES UP

Co-producer in UA with John Hay Whitney Says He's Dropping Black and White

Technicolor stock on the New York Curb Exchange gained nearly seven points in value between last Friday afternoon and Wednesday morning, rising from 21¾ to 28⅝.

Samuel Goldwyn, in a long weekend telegram to newspapers, announced that he had abandoned "black-and-white" motion pictures for Technicolor exclusively.

On Monday, Technicolor's management publicized, by way of a stockholders' meeting, the receipt of orders for some 55,000,000 feet of negative and positive Technicolor for 1937-38.

Mr. Goldwyn and the John Hay (Jock) Whitney of Technicolor are co-producers in the United Artists company, of which Mr. Goldwyn is a part owner. This relationship comes through Mr. Whitney's large holdings and management participation in Selznick International, which, like Mr. Goldwyn, distributes through United Artists.

Describing Mr. Goldwyn as "Dean of Hollywood producers," Linton Wells, now Goldwyn press agent in Hollywood, said in the Goldwyn telegram that the announcement of the abandonment of black-and-white for Technicolor "was believed to be the forerunner of similar statements from other major producing units, sounding the eventual death knell of present non-color films."

However, no such mention or even intimation of any unusual adoption of color was heard at any of the sales conventions held to date to announce and discuss 1937-38 production and distribution plans and policies, including the conventions of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Monogram, Warner Brothers, Universal and Grand National, all held within the last few days. Nor does pre-convention and pre-season product discussion from companies about to enter convention indicate any wide departure to color from black-and-white, including Twentieth Century-Fox, United Artists, Republic, GB, Columbia and Paramount.

Regardless, the statement from Mr. Wells, on behalf of Mr. Goldwyn and his Technicolor plans, said that Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, president of Technicolor, "has commenced preparations for cameras and laboratories to handle Mr. Goldwyn's needs and the inevitable swing of Hollywood almost completely — certainly in all major films — within the next year to color."

Increasing Equipment: Goldwyn

"Within the past six months, color technique has taken vast strides forward," Mr. Goldwyn said, according to the Wells telegram. "Color no longer interferes with the telling of the story, which is the primary motif behind a motion picture. Moreover, the newly developed third color is subdued and a happy adjunct to contemporary cinema trends.

Dear Mr. Quigley:

Just returned from a marvelous reception in Hollywood. Allow me to take this opportunity to again thank you for the award which made the trip possible. I am confident all the boys in the field agree that the Quigley Award has never been equalled as a stimulus to better showmanship.

—SID HOLLAND,
Manager, Elco Theatre,
Elkhart, Ind.

"There is no doubt," the producer continued, "that most of the present important pictures would utilize the new color processes immediately if there were sufficient equipment to care for them.

"I am announcing formally today that I shall make 'The Goldwyn Follies,' my forthcoming $2,000,000 musical, entirely in Technicolor; also 'The Real Glory,' which has as its background Manila and the Philippine Islands during the early period of American occupation, and 'You Can Be Beautiful,' the beauty-industry story in which I have decided to star Gary Cooper with Merle Oberon."

Mr. Goldwyn added that he "would gladly include 'The Adventures of Marco Polo,' but Dr. Kalmus, of Technicolor, frankly advises me that his company is not yet able to supply that much equipment. However, now that I have made my decision to produce nothing but color pictures, Dr. Kalmus has commenced preparations for cameras and laboratories.

"Color pictures," Mr. Goldwyn concluded, "will not mean any change in screen technique so far as I am concerned. Instead, it will merely join with sound and music as permanent and acceptable aids to screen story telling."

"Technicolor Prosperity"

Announcement that Technicolor is enjoying its most prosperous period, with orders already in hand for 55,000,000 feet of Technicolor in 1937-38, was made on Monday by George F. Lewis, Technicolor's vice-president and general counsel, to stockholders at their annual corporate meeting in New York. Mr. Lewis was presiding in the absence of Dr. Kalmus, who is en route to England, where the company has been expanding considerably of late, and where Technicolor newsreel films were made last week of the Coronation for and in conjunction with Fox Movietone News.

The orders for the 55,000,000 feet of film are the largest in the company's history, Mr. Lewis said. They include, of course, footage in negative and positive film.

The company's estimated net earnings were $165,000 for the first quarter of 1937, compared with $132,000 for the same period in 1936. In the first three months of this year, 9,384,181 feet of Technicolor film was shipped from the company's laboratories, as compared with 7,485,210 feet in the 1936 quarter.

Four directors whose terms expired were reelected by the stockholders for an additional three years, including Alfred Fritzsche, T. W. Slocum, James A. Hayes and A. W. Hawkes. The stockholders also elected H. K. McCann to the board to fill the vacancy caused by the death of William H. Coolidge.

Officers will be elected soon by the board.

Kalmus Praises Goldwyn

The United Artists publicity department in New York sent to newspapers on Tuesday, under Samuel Goldwyn's letterhead, the following statement:

"Samuel Goldwyn's decision to make only color pictures hereafter was characterized this afternoon by Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, president of Technicolor, as 'the most important decision reached by a prominent motion picture company in many years.'

"Speaking by overseas telephone from the S. S. Europa, aboard which he is en route to London, Dr. Kalmus went on to say:

"'I am a great believer in what Mr. Goldwyn does. He makes many of the greater pictures and therefore a decision such as he has just made regarding color films is of the utmost importance to the industry. Moreover, I feel sure that many of the more important producers will follow Mr. Goldwyn's lead — in fact, some of them are very near that point now.'

"Dr. Kalmus did not, however, believe that even the major companies would change to color all at once. . . ."

National Decency Legion Classifies 11 New Pictures

Class B, Objectionable in Part: "They Gave Him a Gun."

City College Finishes First Picture Course

The experiment designed to trace the history and development of motion pictures, which was carried on by the College of the City of New York Film and Sprocket Society, ended last Friday night with the last showing of the society's film revivals.

The importance of the motion picture in the field of education was acclaimed as the series concluded by Dr. Paul Klapper, dean of the School of Education. Dr. Klapper announced that the School of Education would devote a section of the course in visual aids, this fall, to a study of the development of the motion picture as an aid to secondary school teaching.

Teachers at Cooper Union and at the New York University attended all the showings. President Frederick R. Robinson, of C. C. N. Y., called motion pictures "a potent influence on current civilization."

HOLLYWOOD STRIKE CRISIS PASSED AS TWO UNIONS RETURN TO STUDIOS

Cooks and Machinists Abandon Walkout; Alliance with Other Labor Groups for Theatre Boycott by FMPC Delayed

Definite signs that the crisis in the Hollywood strike, now three weeks old, has passed were seen this week in the return to work of the membership of two of the unions involved. Nine units of the Federated Motion Picture Crafts remained firm in their refusal to negotiate with producers unless a closed shop were guaranteed but indications were that their differences would be resolved amicably in spite of threats and reports which continue to rumble, of violence and of trouble on the picket lines.

Members of the culinary workers and the machinists' crafts returned to work on Monday, having accepted the producers' terms of negotiation. Charles Kimberlin, speaking for the committee, claimed that 5,000 members of the remaining eight crafts had vetoed a truce proposed by Pat Casey, representing the producers.

Federated Crafts disavowed asking organized labor to boycott all pictures starring five officers of the Screen Actors' Guild.

On Wednesday the strike committee issued an ultimatum to independent producers, threatening to call out 3,000 members unless union shop agreements were signed.

A theatre boycott which strike leaders threatened last week would be enforced by 2,000,000 pickets had failed to materialize by Wednesday.

The general membership of the Screen Actors' Guild at a meeting on Sunday night ratified the terms of the agreement made with producers.

A bizarre touch was added with the report that gunmen had been imported from New York and Chicago as bodyguards for the stars passing through the picket lines. Hollywood police said, "Certain stars employ guards at the slightest provocation."

An automobile was overturned and fist fights ensued in the only disturbance reported when the cooks and machinists returned to work on Monday. Police dispersed the cambatants in the free-for-all fight that followed the crowding into the curb of a car carrying four Columbia studio workers. No one was injured.

Members of the scenic artists, stationary engineers, plumbers, painters, moulders, sheet metal workers, blacksmiths, laborers and make-up men remained on strike, having rejected, on Saturday, a truce proposal.

Mr. Casey, giving out details of his offer to negotiate with Federated Crafts unions, said that at no time had producers refused to arbitrate the question of a union shop in conjunction with other demands on wages and hours. He pointed out that the machinists and culinary workers had returned to work apparently willing to accept his word that negotiations would begin not later than May 24th.

Mr. Kimberlin, speaking for the strike committee, said, "We have informed Pat Casey that we are not interested in any truce unless we get union shop and union recognition. We also have told Casey that one of the conditions under which we would return to work would be the dismissal of all workers who supplanted us at the studio when we went on strike."

GILLMORE HAILS ACTORS' VICTORY ON HIS BIRTHDAY

Facing one of the most intensive election campaigns in the history of Actors Equity Association, Frank Gillmore, president, admitted last Friday that the day was his seventieth birthday but added that it would be no different from his other days.

There was something in the way of a birthday message, though:

"I can only say that the event that has given me the greatest pleasure in the last few days is the actor coming into his own in Hollywood."—This in reference to the recognition granted last Sunday to the Screen Actors Guild, sister organization to Equity.

The Federated Crafts committee sent a letter of protest to the Los Angeles Board of Education, charging that set designers, hairdressers and make-up people were being supplied to the studios as strikebreakers by a Hollywood public trade school. They charged also that Loyola University had been asked to supply 150 students to be sworn in as studio guards.

Construction of three sound stages at the Twentieth Century-Fox was delayed temporarily on Monday when laborers refused to pass the picket lines. They later went through and C. J. Haggerty, secretary, denying that the Building Trades Council had ordered members of its 47 locals to observe the pickets, said the delay had been caused by a misunderstanding.

The costumers' union, affiliated with Federated Crafts but not involved in the strike, last week signed a four year contract with the major studios.

Theatre Boycott Delayed

The strike committee claimed that the threatened national theatre boycott will be conducted as planned but in Chicago an official of the Painters' union local said that the theatre picketing had been deferred until next week. Last Friday the union voted to conduct an active campaign against the theatres as a gesture of sympathy with the Hollywood strikers.

The Chicago local will endeavor to enlist the aid of the electrical workers and other labor groups, it was said, and no plans will be made until after they have conferred.

The Brotherhood of Painters, District Council 9, in New York announced that it had been unable to recruit the support of any organized labor group in the metropolitan area. Officers said that the union would continue its sympathetic demonstrations alone but that they necessarily would be limited to the Times Square territory. The campaign was resumed last Friday night but police limited the marchers to two men to a theatre.

Circuit representatives in New York said that the campaign had been confined to that city and to Los Angeles, where desultory marching was reported and their statement was confirmed by reports from several eastern and midwestern cities.

Screen Actors' Guild Ratifies Ten-Year Agreement with Producers; Provision of Contract Prohibits Strikes

The Crafts disavowed having placed Robert Montgomery, president of the Guild; Franchot Tone, vice-president, and Frank Morgan, Humphrey Bogart and Edward Arnold, directors, on its "unfair" list and having requested AFL and CIO members to boycott their pictures.

Stars Give Financial Aid

High-salaried stars are contributing substantial financial support to the strikers, Ward Hamilton, member of the Federated Crafts strike committee said this week.

"We haven't asked for that kind of help," he said, "but a lot of financial support has been given us by the stars. They are all for us."

Under the terms of the ten year agreement between the Actors' Guild and the producers, as disclosed to the Guild meeting last Sunday night, a strike of actors is barred for that period. The contract will become effective as of May 15th this year, and already has been accepted verbally by Columbia, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, RKO Radio, Twentieth Century-Fox, Universal, and Warner Brothers. Samuel Goldwyn and Walter Wanger have accepted for United Artists and other producers, releasing through major companies, who have agreed are Major Productions, B. P. Schulberg, Selznick International and Hal Roach.

Robert Montgomery, president of the Guild, was booed by a small group of members as he read the terms of the agreement at the meeting but later was cheered loudly by the 2,000 present in the Hollywood Legion Stadium.

A statement from the Guild, following the meeting, charged that Federated Crafts had called out the painters' union and begun the strike contrary to an agreed procedure between the Guild and Federated Crafts. "While we are exceedingly sympathetic with the men involved, we cannot allow our organization to be bound by unauthorized persons," the statement said. A preamble said that the statement was issued because of "false" charges that the Guild had "sold-out" to the producers and deserted Federated Crafts.

Under the new Guild agreement all future disputes will be settled by arbitration. Committees of both parties will meet once each year to discuss modifications affecting all classes of players. It is provided that arbitration must follow inability to agree on any points. The committee plans immediate attention to clarification of the rules for extras, calls where weather is a factor, and rules for stunt men.

The Guild shop goes into immediate effect pending ratification by the directorates of the producing companies. Working conditions specified must be made effective by June 1st and ratification is required by June 10th.

Eastern Office Planned

The agreement as made will be binding on all successor producer companies and subsidiary and controlled companies, and will cover production in this country. The committees will determine rules for production outside the United States, with arbitration resorted to in the event of inability to agree. New York production will be exempt until the guild opens an eastern production will come under the general agreement, the contract to be a separate deal between the guild and each producer.

Commentators for travelogues, newsreels and sports reels are exempted until rules are worked out by the committees. The highlights of the concessions to the actors include: continuous layoffs for contract players for a one-week period, except for retakes; termination for illness only if ill three weeks in year; right to screen name; six holidays annually as to freelance players now; stock players to get $50 minimum weekly; 50-hour week for freelance players and 12-hour rest period, with one-forty-eighth of weekly pay for each overtime hour; day players get $25 daily minimum and travel time to and from location; $35 daily minimum for stunt men; NRA rules for extras and abolition of $3.20 check and $5 daily minimum, also guild access to Central Casting records.

During the first five years of the contract there is provided 100 per cent guild shop for extras, stunt men, day, freelance and stock players, and 90 per cent guild shop for stars and featured players. However, a producer making 40 or more films yearly reserves the right to use three non-guild stars or featured players only in two pictures yearly, and producers making less than 40 films annually have the right to use three non-guild stars or featured players in one picture annually. In the second five-year period 100 per cent guild shop for the entire acting profession is provided. The guild agrees to keep its membership open and not to impose unreasonable dues and initiation fees.

Approval of Roxy Plan Recommended

Approval of the amended plan of reorganization for the Roxy Theatre Corporation was recommended in New York last Thursday with one minor change by Special Master Addison S. Pratt in his report filed in the United States district court. Special Master Pratt recommended payment in full for general creditors of the equity receiver of the Roxy instead of the 50 per cent proposed in the amended plan.

The report found the plan "fair and equitable." No provisions for the stockholders were made because no equity existed for them. However, Twentieth Century-Fox in a private agreement outside the plan has agreed to purchase Class A stock for $1.00 per share. Mr. Pratt said "in reality the plan provides for the sale of assets to the new corporation."

The present value of the Roxy Theatre was found to be $7,211,329, less depreciation on the building and equipment. The following breakdown of the valuation was given:

Land and leasehold	$2,413,750
Building, less depreciation	4,172,994
Equipment	528,916
Cash on hand	67,576
Accounts receivable	28,091
Liabilities	7,481,592
First mortgage bonds with interest	4,852,588
Second mortgage gold notes	2,121,175
General creditors of the equity receiver	38,026

N. Y. State Tax Commission	2,595
Claims filed with the trustee including personal injury claims which are expected to be substantially reduced	227,799
Receiver certificates	125,000
Trustee accounts payable	90,403

The recommendation for 100 per cent payment for general creditors of the equity receiver did not include the $16,454 claim of Twentieth Century-Fox which has agreed to accept 50 per cent.

The report pointed out that no evidence of the value of the name Roxy was presented but that the special master considered it of some value. Mr. Pratt recommended payment in cash of $5.95 on each $1,000 first mortgage bond and $23.79 for each $1,000 second mortgage gold note in addition to the provision made in the plan.

Meanwhile, Howard S. Cullman, trustee of the theatre, filed his monthly report in the federal court and reported a net profit of $40,923 for the period from March 25 to April 29 before deductions for interest on funded indebtedness, depreciation, amortization, etc.

The net operating profit was $56,940. Cash receipts were $257,331 and disbursements $224,443, showing an excess of receipts over disbursements of $32,887. Cash on hand was $134,764, compared with $101,877 the month before. Admissions totaled $220,812. Program costs were $102,812, film rentals, $54,188; special talent, $22,767; orchestra, $11,795; stage show, $8,834; projectionists' salaries, $4,632. Advertising expenses were $39,388 with allowances received for previous advertising, $15,854. A total of $25,000 of outstanding receiver's certificates was paid during the month.

Three Censor Boards Planned for Ecuador

Every motion picture shown in Ecuador now must be passed by two boards of censors and now the government is creating a third board, according to cabled reports from Guayaquil to the New York Times. The present boards represent the municipal and national governments and the proposed new board is to be composed of representatives of the Ministry of Education and the Chief of Police of each state capital.

Pictures considered injurious to the morals of minors, crime stories, radical propaganda and films reflecting on the customs of the country may be cut or prohibited by the censors.

Louis Cohen Opens Offices

Louis Cohen, formerly with Paramount and the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, has opened offices at 1576 Washington Boulevard, Hollywood, to handle investments, loans and insurance. Mr. Cohen was also with Fox and Fox West Coast theatres, Universal Theatres and Fanchon and Marco at various times.

IATSE Continues Membership Drive

George Browne, president of the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees and Moving Picture Operators, in Hollywood this week said that written agreements covering the organization of exchange workers in 35 cities have already been signed or are practically ready for signatures and that his organization is now starting to line up theatre ushers throughout the country and in Canada. Mr. Browne said that 15 pacts covering exchange workers in as many cities were signed last Saturday and that he expects an agreement to be reached in New York shortly where the movement is aimed at assistant managers, cashiers, doormen and janitors with little emphasis being placed on ushers.

It was also declared that 6,000 new members have been added in the stagehand and operator divisions in the past year.

In Boston, a new wage scale granted by major distributors has been accepted unanimously by the Exchange Workers' Union, affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, which is aligned with the I.A.T.S.E. Salary increases range from 10 to 40 per cent and a 44-hour week has been established with two weeks' vacation with pay.

In Chicago film inspection and shipping departments are being unionized under the A. F. of L. banner and the exchanges are offering no opposition to the move while in Detroit negotiations for new contracts are to start shortly under Roger Kennedy, business agent for Local 199, I.A.T.S.E. as across the Detroit River the movement for unionization has spread to Windsor, Ont., for the unionization of theatre ushers, cashiers and other employees under the I.A.T.S.E. banner.

In Kansas City the Film Exchange Employees' Union, affiliated with the I.A.T.S.E., according to union officials, is now proceeding with efforts to organize exchange bookers and employees of poster firms outside regular film branches. Approximately 116 inspectresses, shippers and poster clerks are claimed as members.

At Madison, Wis., all employees of every theatre are now members of the International Alliance as the drive for membership was concluded there this week, while in St. Louis the drive for membership continues with new members being signed daily, according to reports.

The Film Exchange Employees' Union in Washington this week, under the sponsorship of the local projectionists, received an I.A.T.S.E. charter as Local B 13. The officers are James W. Burns, president; George Sullivan, vice-president; Donald McCann, secretary; Budd Turner, financial secretary; Jules Share, treasurer, and DeForest Ormes, business agent. The charter followed several previous attempts to organize without the aid of the I.A.

A new agreement with the Operators' Union, Local 154, in Seattle, was signed this week by Sterling Chain Theatres, Inc., providing a wage increase of from 10 to 40 per cent, with an additional 10 per cent raise scheduled for September 1.

20th CENTURY-FOX AND REPUBLIC ARE NEXT TO HOLD CONVENTIONS

Kent, Home, Says Company Will Have at Least 30 "A" Among the 52 To Be Announced at Gathering May 30

The sales convention series, in which five companies have announced the new season's product plans to assembled field and home office representatives, will resume, after a week's interlude, on May 30th when Twentieth Century-Fox and Republic delegates will meet in the Hotel Ambassador, Los Angeles.

Warner Brothers announced a program of 60 features at the sessions which concluded last Thursday, as reported on page 59 of Motion Picture Herald of May 15th. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer scheduled 44 to 52 features and Monogram outlined plans for 42 at meetings earlier this month which were reported on pages 24 and 25 of the Herald of May 8th.

Details of the Universal convention at which 50 were announced are recorded this week on page 39 and plans for Grand National's 65 are outlined on page 40.

Columbia, last company to announce the dates for its meeting, has selected June 27th as the time and the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, as the place. The convention will last a week and the entire sales force, numbering 250, will attend.

Twentieth Century-Fox will have at least 30 "A" pictures among the 52 to be produced in Hollywood for the new season, Sidney R. Kent, president, said on his arrival in New York from Europe last week. New World, British producing subsidiary under Robert T. Kane, will make six to eight films of which four or five will be designed for American release, the president said.

Theatre Affiliates Represented

Production, distribution and exhibition executives will be represented at the meeting. Officials of the theatre affiliates who will be present include:

Spyros Skouras, president of National Theatres, Inc.; Charles P. Skouras, president, Fox West Coast Theatres; George P. Skouras, president, Skouras Theatres, Inc.; Matthew Fox, Alfred McNeill, William T. Powers, Ted Kirkmeyer of Butte, Mont.; Rick Ricketson, president, Inter-Mountain Theatres Corporation of Denver; Elmer C. Rhoden, president, Fox Midwest Theatres Corporation, Kansas City; Frank L. Newman, president, Evergreen Amusement Corporation, Seattle; Jack Hamrick and A. L. Rosenberg of Evergreen Amusement Corporation; Al Hanson, Larry Kent, C. A. Buckley, George Topper, Thornton Sargent, Cullen Espy, Dick Dickson, George Browser, B. V. Sturdivant, Homer Gill, Louis Christ, Fred Stein, H. C. Speigel, Nick Turner, William Agren and William C. Steege.

In addition to the 250 members of the domestic sales force who will attend, representatives of the company's overseas department will include Stanley S. Crick, managing director for Australia; R. Sutton Dawes of London, British sales director; T. Isdahl, manager for Norway; A. Paucker of Roumania; Luigi Giordano of Egypt; Charles Munro, general manager of the Hoyt circuit in Australia; Gus Mohme of Mexico; W. W. Sullivan, Central American district manager, and Delbert Goodman, far eastern manager.

SEVEN COMPANIES TO MEET IN JUNE

Seven of the eight sales conventions still to be held are set for June. Twentieth Century-Fox and Republic will convene May 30th at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, and Paramount delegates will meet June 10th also at the Ambassador. Gaumont British will have three regional meetings beginning on June 10th in New York and following in Chicago and Los Angeles. United Artists will follow a similar plan, opening June 14th in New York and continuing with sessions in Chicago and San Francisco. RKO Radio will hold its sessions at the Ambassador starting June 16th as will Columbia on June 26th. Imperial will hold four meetings in July in New York, Chicago, New Orleans and San Francisco.

Shirley Temple will be starred in three of the new features and Eddie Cantor will be in two, the first of which, "Ali Baba Goes to Town," will start next month.

Warner Meeting Ends

Individual meetings among district and branch managers and salesmen from each territory were held at the Warner Brothers home office in New York following the adjournment of the convention last Thursday at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel. Special emphasis was placed on the film scheduled for release during the remainder of this season, the first two of which, "Cherokee Strip" and "Draegerman Courage" opened last Saturday.

The largest advertising budget in the history of the company will be expended during the coming season, S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity, told the delegates on the final day of the meeting.

"While we shall also utilize national magazines and outdoor advertising, by far the greatest proportion will be for newspaper advertising," Mr. Einfeld said. "Years of experience have taught us a major lesson—the newspaper is still the premier medium.

"The screen and the newspaper are both essentially modern; in spirit, outlook and tempo they have a great deal in common. The increasing tendency to reflect today's life in motion pictures by the use of contemporary themes and occurrences cannot fail to increase the close relations between these two important mediums."

The delegates selected by ballot eight young players on the Warner roster who will be groomed for stardom during the coming year. They are Gloria Dickson, Doris Weston, Beverly Roberts, Jane Bryan, Jane Wyman, Kenney Baker, Wayne Morris and John Litel.

The final event of the four day convention was a banquet in the grand ballroom of the hotel.

Columbia Sets June 27th for Los Angeles Meeting; United Artists Partners Convene in Hollywood on New Product

Leon Schlesinger has established a fourth cartoon unit under Raymond G. Katz, formerly his executive assistant. Mr. Katz will make his headquarters at Beverly Hills and will produce 10 Looneytunes in black and white. In the present Hollywood studio Mr. Schlesinger will make 20 Merrie Melodies in Technicolor and six Looneytunes in black and white for distribution through Warners.

Columbia Sets Date

The Columbia convention will open June 27th at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles and will last a week according to present plans.

Activity on the new program already has begun at the studio. Vehicles have been set for Grace Moore and Irene Dunne, a Frances Marion production is nearly ready, a script is close to the shooting stage for Frank Capra, and adaptations of a number of stage and book properties are reaching completion.

The Irene Dunne picture, "The Awful Truth," will be directed by Leo McCarey. The screen play is by Dwight Taylor and Vina Delmar. Within the next few weeks the Grace Moore picture, "The Sound of Your Voice," will go into production. It is a comedy with music.

Prominent also in the musical division is the special production being prepared by Oscar Hammerstein who will also produce the picture. Frances Marion's first production for Columbia will be "The Winning of the West," now being adapted by Courtney Riley Cooper and Frank R. Adams.

A cast, not yet disclosed, is being selected for the George Kaufman-Moss Hart Broadway success, "You Can't Take It With You," bought by the company for $200,000.

Other productions now in preparation include "Grand Gesture," Alec Rackowe's musical screen story; "The Man Who Won the War," "Chopin," and "Cape of Good Hope."

Charles B. Mintz is producing a new cartoon series titled "Petey Parrot" for Columbia.

Sales figures compiled by the company show that the branches have exceeded by 190 per cent the quotas set for them in the Montague Sweepstakes Drive, named for Abe Montague, general sales manager.

U.A. Partners Meet

United Artists partners were meeting this week in Hollywood to discuss product plans for the new season. George J. Schaefer, vice-president and general manager; Maurice Silverstone, head of United Artists, Ltd., London; and James Mulvey, vice-president of Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., left New York last Friday by train for the coast and Alexander Korda, head of London Films, Basil Bleck, his legal adviser, and Douglas Fairbanks left by plane on Saturday.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., has been signed to a one picture contract by David O. Selznick. He has just completed "Prisoner of Zenda" for the company.

Paul Robeson has finished work in Gaumont British's "King Solomon's Mines" and will make a concert tour of the British Isles and Europe before returning to America.

ASCAP MEETING MAPS NEW MOVES AGAINST ATTACKS IN LEGISLATURES

Society Barred from Conducting Business in Montana, Nebraska and Washington State; Bill Turned Down in Florida

Disturbed over its adversaries' continuing attacks in state legislatures, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers this week convened in New York with 50 field representatives and their attorneys from 42 states to map retaliatory moves and a plan of defense against state legal restrictions enacted or threatening. Edwin Claude Mills, chairman of the Society's administrative committee, presided in ASCAP's Rockefeller Center headquarters, the sessions lasting from Monday through Wednesday.

Mr. Mills blamed the radio broadcasters for sponsoring the state legislation barring ASCAP from operating. He declared that the Society was prepared to defend itself, and that it demanded "and will receive just treatment".

"The Society," he said, "cannot understand why the broadcasters continue to shoot at us, when we give them a central source for the inexpensive clearance of the most expensive file of music ever gathered in the world."

Mr. Mills asserted that ASCAP's relations with the motion picture business now are on the basis of "contentment and satisfaction."

Charges Annual Fee

The Society charges a fixed annual fee for all public usages of its members' copyrighted music played for profit. Exhibitors call it "the music seat tax," representing a per-seat royalty charge collected yearly. In radio, ASCAP charges a percentage of gross income.

The convention held this week in New York opened on Monday morning with an address of welcome by Gene Buck, president, and with addresses following by E. S. Hartman, head of the Society's field representatives and general counsel in the midwest, and by Mr. Mills, who stressed "The Problem of Public Relations and Good Will." Mr. Mills explained that he referred to "public relations" with ASCAP's customers—the users of the Society's copyrighted music.

The state legislative attacks are an outgrowth of action taken two years ago jointly by broadcasters and motion picture exhibitors against ASCAP's royalty charges. The Society subsequently lowered rates for theatres, and apparently that concluded the exhibitors' outward interest. But evidently the broadcasters are continuing the campaign.

Laws Passed in Three States

The states of Washington, Montana and Nebraska already have passed laws prohibiting the Society from doing business within their respective borders, and similar measures have been introduced in Iowa, Wisconsin, Florida, Texas, Minnesota, Ohio, Indiana and Tennessee. It is for the purpose of arriving at plans of defense that the principal attention at this week's convention was directed.

However, Tennessee, Florida and Indiana have defeated the bills, and Minnesota and Iowa adjourned without taking any action.

The House judiciary committee of the Florida legislature voted down the bill in that state, on Tuesday afternoon even as the Society was meeting on its defense plans. Specifically, the Florida measure called for the prohibition of composers and lyricists from joining together to do business, which, obviously, would have the effect of barring ASCAP from operating. This draft is identical with bills introduced in the other states.

Enforcement a Problem

On Monday, again, during the period of the convention, R. L. Cochran, Governor of Nebraska, signed the bill outlawing the Society in Nebraska.

Mr. Cochran said the principal objection by ASCAP to the bill was the assertion it was unconstitutional.

"I don't presume to be a court," the Governor said, according to United Press.

The bill drew criticism in the legislature at Nebraska last week, but its author, Frank J. Brady, in the Senate, held it was constitutional and merely held the Society to be an unlawful monopoly.

Although the Nebraska decision became law immediately, Attorney General Hunter is reported to have evidenced uncertainty as to how it would be enforced. A fine of $5,000 is provided for any violation, as in the drafts passed or pending elsewhere.

The bill does not mention ASCAP by name, but cites "any combinations," allegedly acting unlawfully in restraint of trade.

Mr. Mills, besides declaring all the bills to be unconstitutional, asserted that they prevent the music composers, publishers and authors from merely banding together for self-protection.

Await Montana Test

ASCAP's meeting this week decided on a policy of vigorous opposition to the anti-Society legislation. Mr. Mills said that the coming legal test of the Montana law was expected to prove the bulk of the legislation to be unconstitutional, in which case it probably would serve as a decisive deterrent to the movements in other states.

Attorneys for ASCAP have until May 30th to exchange and answer briefs in the Montana test, being conducted in federal court at Helena, where Louis D. Frohlich, of the New York law firm of Frohlich and Schwartz, is heading the Society's legal battery. Initial arguments were heard late in April, and, after the expiration on May 30th of the period for filing briefs, the court will immediately give a decision.

Meanwhile, the Society has been compelled to discontinue the licensing of commercial music users in Montana, in compliance with the new law. In consequence, all Montana theatres, broadcasters, dance halls, restaurants and other commercial enterprises, have been relieved of the music tax and will not resume the payments pending the outcome of the court test.

Mr. Mills conceded that even if ASCAP is successful in proving the Montana law to be unconstitutional, the Society will not make any attempt to collect the back payments which are unpaid.

Commercial music users in the State of Washington are preparing to take similar action on withholding payments when the law there aimed at the Society goes into effect on June 1st.

The Society will bring the Washington law into the federal courts, as in Montana, and will act similarly in Nebraska on the law passed there this week, moving first for an injunction in both places.

Wallace X. Rawles, former bureau manager of International News Service in Los Angeles, has joined Universal as assistant director of publicity under Marc Lachman.

Title Bureau Plans Delayed By MPDDA

No action on the proposed revision of provisions governing the length of time which title registrations remain in effect is expected before the end of June by the Title Registration Committee of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., a spokesman for the organization announced in New York this week. It was conceded that there probably will be changes in the present rules but that these changes could not possibly be ratified before the annual meeting of the MPPDA board, which is set for late next month.

The proposals for new regulations result from some dissatisfaction with the recent change which releases titles two years after being registered. Prior to that change, rights to registered titles could be retained almost indefinitely by their registrants. The new proposals, which have been submitted to the committee, would extend title rights to registrants to three or four years.

Rolan Appoints AMPA Committee

Six regular organization committees were appointed this week by Ralph Rolan, new president, to serve during his 1937-38 administration of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, as follows:

This Is My Affair

(20th Century-Fox)

Historical Drama

Darryl F. Zanuck's enthusiasm for dealing cinematically with historical personalities and incidents is no secret. On the whole, as the record reveals, his disposition to interest himself in such material has been quite successful, whether considered from an entertainment or commercial viewpoint. In this sort of screen matter, as well as others, he has very often demonstrated that his is the knack of effecting those singular combinations of characterizations, themes and substantiating production details that result in desirable entertainment. Sometimes his excursions into the realm of history do not receive the unanimous endorsement of students. Nevertheless, box office records do not indicate that those folks who go to theatres just to be amused, and without yearning to be educated, cared very much whether or not he hewed closely to the authentic line.

Not many people ever heard of Lieutenant Richard L. Perry. Unlike President William McKinley's other trusted confidant, Lieutenant Rowan, whose adventure Mr. Zanuck picturized in "A Message To Garcia," Perry had no Elbert Hubbard to make his immortal. Nevertheless, Lieutenant Perry was an actual character, who rendered his country a great service, but whose fame, until now, has been confined to a gravestone in Arlington National Cemetery. His story, as told in "This Is My Affair," is a graphic demonstration that undercover secret service operatives and bandits in 1901 were of pretty much the same ilk as their present day descendants.

In that year a wave of bank robberies sweeps the midwest. President McKinley assigns naval Lieutenant Perry to desert the service, endeavor to find the culprits, gain their confidence, become their partner and furnish the information that will lead to their elimination. Perry does. In doing so he falls in love with beer hall entertainer "Lil Duryea," sister of "Batiste," brains of the gang, and thus become involved in continual conflict with gagging gorilla "Jock Ramsay." When the midwest becomes too hot, he's with "Bat" and "Ramsay" when they crack a bank in Baltimore. But he has managed to tip officers off to the job and when "Bat" is killed Perry and "Ramsay" are captured, convicted and sentenced to death. Before Perry can get a secret message to McKinley informing him who the man higher up is, the President is assassinated. Perry seems doomed, particularly when "Lil" turns against him. But she has a change of heart and prevails upon President Theodore Roosevelt to order McKinley's mail searched.

That's the story. What has been done with it makes it more interesting from a mass mind view point. There's quite a bit of music and dancing embellishment featuring the songs and buxom chorines of the 1900 era. Much of the supplementary dialogue is in the slangy argot of the time. "Teddy" Roosevelt is in for a couple of sequences in which his catch phrases, "Bully" and "Big Stick," are reborn. Colored by these qualities, the dramatic story is well developed and the romantic contrast is handled in an intelligent manner.

The production being of a caliber that should invite the attention of exhibitors and public, the important matter of names has not been overlooked. Robert Taylor and Barbara Stanwyck, whose personal romance is very much public property, are Perry and "Lil Duryea." Brian Donleavy is "Bat" and Victor McLaglen is "Ramsay." Frank Conroy impersonates McKinley, Sidney Blackmer "Teddy" Roosevelt, and Robert McWade is Admiral Dewey. Additionally, John Carradine, Alan Dinehart, Sig Rumann, Douglas Fowley and Tyler Brooke (in a vaudeville song and dance specialty) are prominent.

Previewed May 13 in Grauman's Chinese theatre. Though the audience didn't always react to what it saw in just the manner the producer undoubtedly hoped it would, a cross section impression seemed to indicate that the attendance thought that it all added up to good mass entertainment.—GUS MCCARTHY.

Produced and distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox. Darryl F. Zanuck in charge of production. Associate producer, Kenneth Macgowan. Directed by William A. Seiter. Story and screen play by Allen Rivkin and Lamar Trotti. Music and lyrics by Mack Gordon and Harry Revel. Art direction by Rudolph Sternad. Photography by Robert Planck. Costumes by Royer. Musical direction by Arthur Lange. P. C. A. Certificate No. 3200. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 90 minutes. Release date, May 28, 1937. General audience classification.

Hotel Haywire

(Paramount)

Farce

The sophisticates may not pay much attention to this, but the common customers who appreciate a lot of laughs should find it plenty amusing. Laugh creation is the whole point of the picture and as this quality is found in the movement of the film, it is also evident in characterizations, plot, situations and dialogue. Played by a competent cast, the principal members of which are all well known to theatre goers, the show is a domestic comedy farce aimed to catch the fancy of family audiences.

Action concerns what happens to the various members of the "Parkhouse" family and "Dr. Zodiac Z. Zippe," astrologist, numerologist and all around trouble maker as long as he can find suckers to fall for his game. "Mrs. Parkhouse" is his preferred customer. The setup is not viewed with any great enthusiasm by dentist "Dr. Parkhouse," who is having his own troubles with daughter "Phyllis," who wants to marry "K. Kitts, Jr.," despite the objections of his father, " I. Kitts, Sr." Things begin to happen when a bunch of "Parkhouse's" pals slip a pair of lady's scanties into his pocket where they are found by his wife. Immediately she consults "Zodiac" and, though he doesn't want to, so does "Parkhouse." "Zodiac" fixes up a situation to get the squabbling pair into as much hot water as possible and also prove profitable to himself. As the story moves along at a madly merry pace, the adventures of "Mr." and "Mrs. Parkhouse" being balanced by those of "Phyllis" and the young and old "Kitts," a climax occurs in Hotel Haywire, where, as everyone gets wise that "Zodiac" has been making monkeys out of them, peace is restored and his quick departure arranged for.

Played for broad satirical comedy, with any and everything that looks as though it might provoke a laugh tossed in, the picture is a combination of clever absurdity that should have no difficulty in hitting average audiences right in the funny bone.

Previewed, May 14, in the Alexander theatre, Glendale. The folks in the gallery liked it.—G. M.

The Man in Blue

(Universal)

Drama

An interesting show if not a great one, this should satisfy in the field for which it is made. It includes no glamorous names over which to make a fuss. But in an intelligent way it tells an interesting story. In the hands of a competent group of players, there is an atmosphere of believability. The angle into which managers most likely will find it easiest to sink their teeth and do something that will attract patron attention to the production is its quality of human interest. Devoid of any semblance of hokum, the story concerns real human beings involved in a series of melodramatic and romantic circumstances that might have happened.

A policeman kills a thief. Conscience striken, he adopts his victim's little boy. Under the paternal guidance of the officer and his wife the boy shows no inherent criminal tendencies. A decade passes and the boy, grown up, gets a job in a bank where his foster father is a watchman. He falls in love with a stenographer. Innocently, he forgets some money and the rigidly conducted bank demands his resignation.

Suspected by his foster father of having taken the money, the boy comes under the influence of a hard boiled old crook, becomes involved in a bond robbery, is arrested, convicted and sent to jail because he will not reveal the whereabouts of the loot. In prison, realizing he has made a mistake, he gives a fellow convict who is about to be released a letter to the girl telling her where the bonds are. The convict double crosses
